Women and Girls.—"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." (Psa. 119: 105.)

School.—"Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of Thy law." (Psa. 119:18.)

Hymn.—"Open My Eyes, That I May See."

Superintendent.—"Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we, through patience and comfort of the Scriptures, might have hope." (Rom. 15:4.)

Men and Boys.—"Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things that are written therein: for the time is at hand." (Rev. 1:3.)

School.—"Therefore shall ye lay up these My words in your heart and in your soul, and bind them for a sign upon your hand, that they may be as frontlets between your eyes. And ye shall teach them your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." (Deut. 11:18, 19.)

Prayer by the pastor.

Will you try it and let us know how it worked and if it was regarded as both interesting and helpful? Get a half-dozen girls to copy this service till you have as many copies as needed, and then have one or two rehearsals before you use it in public, and then report results, please.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

PREMIUMS GIVEN FOR NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The subscription price of THE SUN, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

SCHEDULE.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.
4. To one securing 75 Subscriptions, one Remington Portable Typewriter, with standard keyboard and case ($60.00 f. o. b. Richmond).
5. To one securing 30 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or one Lady's Wrist Watch will be given, guaranteed by Jahnke Bros., Jewelers, of Richmond, Va. ($30.00).
6. For 25 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or Lady's Watch ($25.00), likewise guaranteed by Jahnke Bros.
7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

Send in your name and address and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

The contest will close on October 31, 1923.

Remittances made on this campaign are to be net. Post-office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

OCTOBER 21, 1923.

SUBJECT: "Israel in the Midst of the Nations."—Josh. 1:1-4; Deut. 4:5, 6, 8:7-10; Isa. 2:2-4, 19:23-25; Ezek. 5:5.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Look unto Me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth."—Isa. 55:22.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ps. 48:9-14.

THE LAND GOD CHOSE FOR HIS PEOPLE.

Last Sunday's lesson told of Israel, the missionary nation, the people whom God chose to perform a great mission for Him, to be a "kingdom of priests and a holy nation." But God did not give the work without being very liberal with His gifts to help in the performance of the task. With the promise of His constant guidance and protection and wisdom, He gave to Israel a land for a home, a land selected because of its fitness for the mission which Israel was to fill. As a person is understood better, and often loved more, when known in the light of his home life, so a nation of people cannot be thoroughly known and appreciated without a knowledge of their land, the scenes of their every-day life. The land which God chose for His people is the theme of today's lesson. The Bible tells much about it. A map of Bible lands should be carefully studied in connection with the passages. A good Bible dictionary or encyclopedia will give much helpful information.

The first chapter of "The Historical Geography of the Holy Land" describes the position of the land thus: "Between the Arabian Desert and the eastern coast of the Levant there stretches—along almost the full extent of the latter, or for nearly 400 miles—a tract of fertile land, varying from seventy to one hundred miles in breadth. This is so broken up by mountain range and valley that it has never all been brought under one native government; yet its well-defined boundaries—the sea on the west, Mount Taurus on the north, and the desert to the east and the south—give it a certain unity, and separate it from the rest of the world." This was the home of Israel, in the midst of other nations, but apart from them. God commanded His children to keep themselves a holy nation, by not intermingling with heathen peoples; yet in spiritual things, Israel was the teaching nation. "When you are in Rome, you must do as the Romans do," is not the divine way when doing wrong is involved. "Be ye steadfast," is the Father's command.

The land which God chose for His children was a great land. It was not so large—much smaller than many of our States—but it was great in beauty, in wealth and in opportunity. "Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon" shall belong to you. The land was a gift, but their greatest blessing is enjoyed when they are accepted by children obedient and grateful and used for Him. Israel was given this great home that she might become a great nation and bless the world. You are given ability and strength and talent that the world may be brighter and better. Are you missing some of His gifts as Israel never received all of Canaan, because you are unwilling to do your part?

The land which God chose for His children was a good land. The soil was fertile, so that grain for bread was abundant. There were brooks and fountains and springs, so that there need not be fear of drouth. There was an abundance of fruit in the land, of vines and fig trees, pomegranates and olive trees. The mountains were stored with precious metals. Could people be blessed with a more pleasant homeland? And yet because of fear and lack of faith, many failed to see Canaan's fair and fertile borders. God's power was so far beyond their trust could picture it. It was a good land.

The land which God chose for His children was to help them to give much to other lands. The prophet looked forward to the time when the sanctuary of Jehovah should be established in a high place, like the "city on the hill," which "could not be hid." Jesus said: "Ye are the light of the world." This was Israel's situation and mission—to be the light of the world—and her home was given to her that she might shed that light afar. Situated in the midst of other nations, which did not know her God, there was great need for that light. "And all nations shall flow unto it." They crave the light, without realizing just what their hunger is for. They call for help, without knowing for what they call. But the nations shall come for teaching and wisdom, for justice and for peace.

"Thus saith the Lord Jehovah: This is Jerusalem; I have set her in the midst of the nations, and countries are round about her." If we listen, cannot we hear today: "Thus saith the Lord Jehovah: This is America; I have set her in the midst of the nations, and countries are round about her. She has wealth, and they are in need. She has great men, and their wisdom may solve the problems of other peoples. She has good men and women who may teach them. She has millions of boys and girls growing up in her homes, who are destined to lead in the world." Realizing that God is surely looking to America to give account for her great opportunities to serve other nations, and realizing that He has a claim upon our wealth, and her citizens, even her boys and girls, is it not clear that God also chose a land for us to call home—a great land, a good land, and a serviceable land? Is it not evident that He is anxiously wanting all nations to be blessed through the land which He has blessed? As last week presented a mission, so this week presents means with which that mission may be accomplished and its great purpose realized. And may we remember our part, so well expressed by Jay S. Stowell in the closing words of his book, "The Child and America's Future": "Christianity's supreme opportunity of two thousand years is here and now in America. The stage is set for a great scene. The responsibility for its success is upon the actors. You and I, and the girls and boys of America are cast for the leading roles. The future of an entire world will be very largely determined by the manner in which we play the parts assigned to us."

"Ye are the light of the world."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

OCTOBER 21, 1923.

TOPIC: "What is Christian Citizenship?"—Isa. 62:1-7.

("Citizenship Day.")

THOUGHTS FOR THE MEETING.

Every citizen has a share in carrying on the nation. If he or she shirks that share, evil has the chance to rule more easily. "I will not rest," is the attitude of the loyal citizen, always hoping and working for the best on the right side, that his city, State and nation may be safe and his brothers happy. Verse 1.

Righteousness is the great asset of a city. Christian men and women cannot leave their Christianity out of their citizenship. Verse 2.

Sin may bring honor which is temporary, but only righteousness is possessed of lasting respect and honor. Verse 2.

The land which has loyal citizens is ever rich. Verse 3.

Righteousness brings happiness. God rejoices to see righteousness ruling in His world. Verse 5.

"Ye that are Jehovah's remembrancers, take ye no rest." This may well be the keynote of the meeting, the motto which should be engraved upon every Christian Endeavor's heart. Whom should God depend upon more than young people who have promised to serve Him, to read His Book, to be loyal to His Church, "trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength?" Is it not a great honor to the "Jehovah's remembrancer?" Is it not a task which goes on all the time? Christian citizens are the servants of Jehovah in a very definite way. Christian work is bringing the world nearer to Him, and to do this sin must be driven out and evil crushed. Verse 6.

Christian citizens work together for the good of all.

Christian citizenship includes keeping the law. Christian citizenship is based on answering the query, "What would Jesus do?" and then acting in the light of His teaching.

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

This may be your fall patriotic meeting, and the American flag should be prominent in the prayer-meeting room. Dr. Sheldon's story, "In His Steps," will furnish some illustrations of the demands of Christian citizenship. Ask one or more members to tell of the characters in this book. A Christian city official or State official may be secured to givet o the Christian Endeavorers his definition of Christian citizenship. A debate is a good way to bring out the best points of such a topic as this.

Questions for Discussion.—Is it the duty of a Christian man and woman to take part in govtrnment through voting, office-holding, and working for good officials? How may the Church help make this a better nation? How can we show ourselves to be Christian citizens? How can our Christian Endeavor Society improve conditions in this place?

Suggested Hymns.—"My Country, 'Tis of Thee," "Star-Spangled Banner," "America the Beautiful," "How Firm a Foundation."

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

OCTOBER 21, 1923.

TOPIC: "Children in the Philippines."—Acts 1:8.

"But ye shall receive power, when the Holy Spirit is come upon you; and ye shall be My witnesses both in Jerusalem and in all Judea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

These are words of Jesus, showing how much He longed to have everybody know of His Heavenly Father. Three weeks ago we heard about how the children in Africa are hearing the story. Tonight we go to the Philippine Islands. Look in your geography and find out everything that you can about how these boys and girls live and what they eat and wear, and come to Junior Endeavor ready to tell something interesting to the superintendent and boys and girls about these dark-skinned boys and girls who play and work, study and sleep just like boys and girls in other lands, though sometimes they may have ways of doing these things which seem queer to you.

PRINCIPLES OF SOCIAL SERVICE.

At the recent Chautauqua, held at Elon College, N. C., the following principles were adopted by the class in social service, conducted by Drs. W. A. Harper and H. S. Smith:

1. It is an accepted principle of modern educational psychology that we "learn by doing"; that instruction and expression are correlative aspects of a developing personality.

2. Every Sunday School curriculum should, therefore, make provision for a graded series of activities and services expressive of the Christian impulse.

3. The aim of a program of expressional activities is to awaken, idealize, and establish individuals in those knowledges, virtues, attitudes and relationships which realize more and more a democracy of God on earth.

4. Every agency, therefore, that facilitates sympathy, begets and fosters a spirit of unselfishness, co-operation and the mutual sharing of ideal values performs a social function. Such are the family, the school and the Church. In the field of emotional dispositions, the Church is supreme. Every activity under its control should be a socializing activity.

5. Church school leaders should ever be awake to the possible dangers of service activities—

(1) That it may become an end in itself, hence fail to be a genuine medium of socialization.

(2) That it may tend to develop social parasites rather than develop initiative and good will.

(3) That it be reduced to the "patronizing spirit," and hence perpetuate social cliques, caste, etc.

6. The giving of money is a form of service through which genuine education may accrue. The regular Sunday School offering should be utilized in a far more educative manner than is found to be the case in the policy of the average Church school today. It is the conviction of this class that the current expense of the Sunday School in every Church should be provided for in the annual budget of the Church. The offerings in the Sunday School should be made a means of creating those sympathies, begetting of those insights and establishing of those purposes characteristic of the kingdom of God. These things cannot be most effectively done so long as children are required to purchase their own literature.

7. Every Church school should arrange a schedule of services and gifts, graded on the basis of the pupil's growing experiences.

WOMEN'S ACTIVITIES.

PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary.

Young People's Society Organized.

At a very interesting meeting at Bethlehem (Alamance) Church Sunday evening, September 23rd, a promising Young People's Missionary Society was organized, with eighteen members. After an impressive song service, a business session was entered into whole-heartedly by those present, and an organization perfected, with the following officers: President, Fannie Paschall; vice-president, Carl H. Gilliam; secretary, Elizabeth Cantwell; treasurer, Mrs. Ralph Kernodle.

Other members are: R. A. Thompson, Mrs. R. A. Thompson, C. H. Sutton, Mrs. C. H. Sutton, Mrs. R. H. Huffines, Alma Sutton, Bessie Goings, Defnay Patterson, Hortense Cantwell, Willie M. Patterson, Grace Paschall, Annie Paschall, Ralph Sutton, Carl Holt Sutton, Jr., John Patterson, Jack Kernodle.

Special offering for missions: Apple Chapel, $35.50; Monticello Church, $19.50; Old Zion, Norfolk, $21.10; South Norfolk, $12.00—total, $88.10.

Tools for Program Committees.

1. A blackboard, upon which a few statistical facts may be written to catch the eye.

2. Files of the Christian Missionary for reference.

3. Envelopes, labeled, in which clippings may be collected.

4. Pictures of mission fields, home and foreign, pasted on cards or in a scrapbook.

5. Maps; satisfactory ones may be drawn on large sheets of paper.

6. Postal cards to remind forgetful members, and dainty notes of invitation to meetings.

7. The latest missionary books used for basis of study in meetings.

8. Use as many people as possible in each meeting. Giving of current events is one way to accomplish this. Give variety, and avoid ruts.

9. A program which is merely interesting fails of its purpose. There should always be a definite aim to instruct and inspire.—Missionary Handbook.

Reasons why you should be a member of the Missionary Society and work for missions:

Because missions are God's thoughts. He asks your co-operation.

Because of our love for the Lord Jesus Christ, whose commands are explicit.—Matt. 28:19-20; Mark 16:15; Luke 24:47; Acts 1:8.

Because we are the fruit of missionary effort.

Because your example will help others to obey the Lord's command.

Because the need is urgent. Thousands die daily who never saw a Bible, or heard of Christ.

Because larger efforts are needed in home mission work.

Because all nations are now easily accessible, and with more means and more workers the work might be indefinitely increased.

Because the work of the Missionary Society is to help the heathen abroad and the spiritually needy at home.

Because of the reflex influence of missions upon the home Churches.

Because missions is the work of the Church, and all Christians should be active Church-workers.

Because millions are yet in darkness, and the laborers are so few.

Because the security of our nation now depends upon the civilization of all.

Because the Lord has left the work of carrying His message to the world in the hands of His followers. He expects you to help.

JAPAN'S EARTHQUAKE AS SEEN BY ONE ON THE GROUND.

BY MRS. H. H. MUNROE,

Takamatsu, Japan.

At a distance, as we are, none of us can grasp the awfulness of the situation as it really was in the smitten portion of Japan. Mr. H. H. Munroe, a missionary of the Presbyterian Church, gives an account of the catastrophe in the Presbyterian of the South as she saw it when it was actually taking place. She says:

Just at noon, on September 1st, as we stood in the garden, we heard an omnious roar. Then the ground began to shake. We found ourselves balancing ourselves exactly as when on a ship on the sea. The trees swayed and our house rocked back and forth. The children rushed out of doors, and together we stood and watched the swaying house as shock after shock rolled under our feet. In about ten minutes it was over, though every hour lesser quakes shook us. Night came on, and we slept in our clothes, some of us, to be ready on a moment's notice to flee.

One old woman, eighty-five years old, said: "This is the worst I have ever seen." Older missionaries said the same, though Tokyo residents had fifty-four shocks last year.

We then waited for news of the outside world. Our own house was slightly damaged, two huts had fallen near. We found that all wires were down, except one, and the police and railway were catching messages sent wildly out from Tokyo.

Tokyo was in flames—a city of 2,500,000, one of the most congested centers of the globe. Streets there in the native quarter were narrow, some only twelve feet wide, so that when the buildings crashed down, the debris blocked the passage. The city was ten miles wide, and fire broke out in about fifty places. Many were trapped. The loss of life will never be known. The city's heart was burned to cinders, and only fringes in the suburbs and a few sections here and there were left.

Yokohama was completely wiped out. I have heard of three houses left in that city of 500,000, and a skeleton or two of steel buildings. One who has escaped says: "It went without any warning—no roar, no quake—the buildings simply dropped." Some, of course, were shaken a moment before collapsing, and the inmates of these fled, but many were caught and fell with the ruins. Then a hundred fires burst out all over the city.

Then pandemonium broke loose. One who has made his way up here, says he got out by a door left upright, but tried to get down the street and found it blocked with ruins, then fled in the other direction, to find it closed, and escaped toward the sea, through a side way, before the flames reached him. He stood in water six feet deep six hours and was then taken on board a vessel standing in the harbor. The odor of burning flesh was awful, he reports.

A rumor was spread by the police that Koreans (there were some 30,000 in a suburb) had poisoned the wells and thrown bombs to add to the conflagration. Mobs, armed with guns and sticks, searched the country, killing Koreans. One eye-witness says he saw a pile of their dead bodies. Another friend of ours saw 100 bodies of dead Koreans along the roadside.

The country became wild. Troops have been rushed into Tokyo, and the city is now under martial law. Villages are devastated, though small towns did not have the fires.

The police are now giving out smaller numbers of dead. Even without hearing from a score of towns in the earthquake area, it was estimated that about 200,000 perished in Tokyo and Kokohama. Now, they have cut it to some 60,000. We think it may be an act of caution to keep the people from depression or outbreak. Railroads are broken up. Even dirt roads are so shaken and bridges so broken that no definite news has yet been tabulated.

Some one has said: "When God speaks, man is bound to obey. Happy is he if he does so. Woe be to him if he does not. Infidelity may question if God has spoken; superstition may place human authority between my conscience and what God has spoken—by both alike I am effectually robbed of the Word, and as a consequence, of the deep blessedness of obedience. There is a blessing in every act of obedience; but the moment the soul hesitates, the enemy has the advantage, and he will surely use it to thrust the soul farther and farther from God."

Rheumatism and Indigestion

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its affects in their practice, believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect, and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

If you suffer from Rheumatism, Indigestion, or from any curable disease, accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to—
Shivar Springs,
Box 16-D, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons (two five-gallon demijohns) of Shivar Spring Water. I agree to give the water a fair trial in accordance with instructions which you will send, and if I report no benefit you are to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

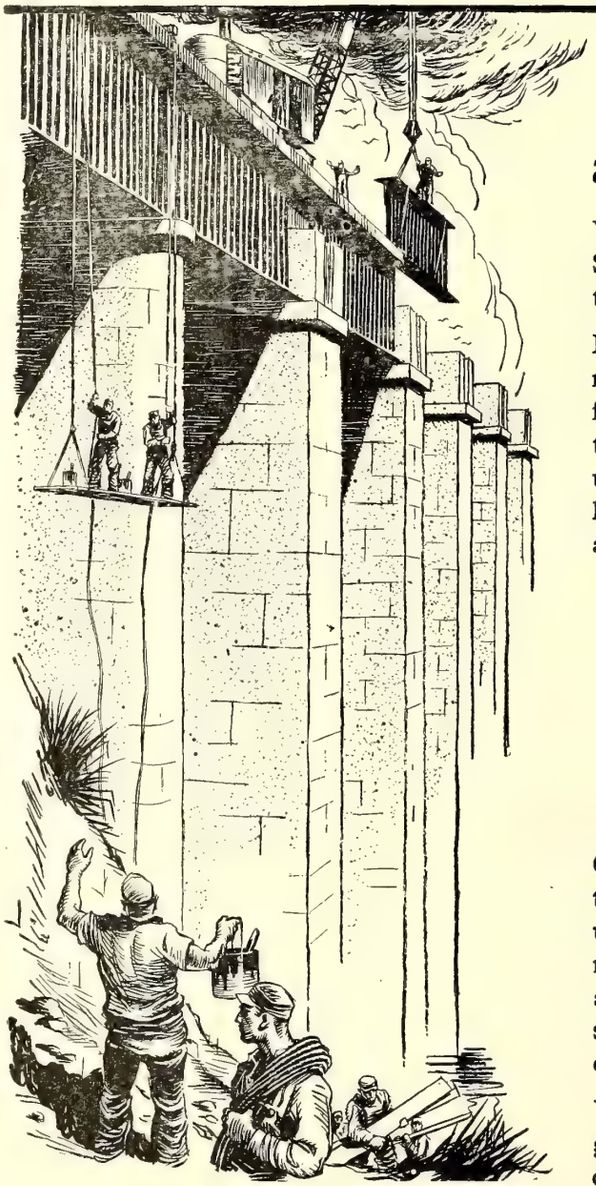
IS FAITH DEAD?

By Rev. J. P. Robertson.

The editor of "World's Work," in his August number, takes up the cudgel again. A few months ago he was publishing articles on the glories of Darwinism and the supposed blunders of the Church and of the Bible. Now he throws a rock at an Episcopal cathedral in New York City, which they are trying to complete, "One fact is apparent; the age of faith is gone * * * One thing that the cathedral solemnly emblazons is religious faith. Like faith it belongs to the middle ages." He then speaks of "Columbia University, an intellectual kingdom in which Darwin reigns supreme." Now, those who are posted on religious conditions know the Church of Christ, despite abounding infidelity, is displaying more vitality with each rolling year. Taking the Southern Presbyterian Church as a fair avarage among Protestant Churches, the records show that in 1890 the per capita gifts to missions was only $1.24; this year they are $6.40 per member—five times as large. And the number of young people offering for missionary service is so large that, despite this splendid increase in liberality, a fine young man has just written me that he could not go to China for another year because the Church can send out only two-thirds of the volunteers that are ready. So, if "faith" is a corpse, it surely is acting in a lively fashion. We must infer that our editor is not reading the Church press very much, and does not know any better. Or could it be that he is imitating the average politician who seeks to create the desired conditions by declaring they already exist? We would prefer to believe that he associates with a certain class so much that he does not know what others are saying and doing. If one lived among "rum-runners" that throng the ways between Bermuda and New York, he would be sure that prohibition has increased the use of alcoholics; but a comparative view of the whole country yields a truly different opinion. That unbelief is rampant in many quarters, no man can deny; but it is only as it has been repeated before. Two hundred years ago, when the power of God began to come down through such men as George Whitfield and the Wesleys, the infidel writings of men like Hobbes and Berkeley had paralyzed the Church until preaching of the true Gospel had almost ceased. And men were saying then as volubly as now that intelligence was a monopoly of infidelity. The editor of "World's Work" is a gilded rhetorician; but glittering assertions are not reasons. If I was a disciple of "liberalism," I would be "shy" of this man as a defender. Dr. Faunce, a foremost advocate of liberalism, recently in the same columns, has dignified Darwinism as "science," but was honest enough at the same time to admit it is "a guess" or "an hypothesis that cannot be proved." So let us not surrender the citadel to men that in honest moments confess they are using blank shells.—"Presbyterian Standard.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM



Southern Railway System last year spent in the South $20,000,000 more than it received from the South

Building a greater Southern

We are handling more traffic on the Southern Railway System this year than ever before.

Not only are our 60,000 employees more efficient, but we have provided for them better tools to work with. In the past two decades, by the continuous investment of new capital, we have increased our productive capacity as follows:

- Average pulling power of locomotives has increased 54%
- Total pulling power of all locomotives has increased 182%
- Average capacity of freight cars has increased 31%
- Total capacity of all freight cars has increased 90%
- Train load was increased 122%

Greater terminal capacity, more road trackage, heavier roadbed and structures, and other betterments that must accompany increased train capacity have been provided in this same period of intensive development of our facilities.

We have constantly before us a program of productive improvements, calling for the outlay of many millions of dollars, and, with faith in the destiny of the South, this program will be prosecuted as rapidly as new capital becomes available.

THE SOUTHERN SERVES THE SOUTH

HOW TO KILL PREACHERS.

If you want to kill off the best parson that ever lived, try some of the things herein catalogued:

Don't dare to attend prayer meeting.

Never call at the parsonage.

Only hear preaching when convenient.

Never thank the pastor for the sermon.

Rush out as soon as the service ends.

Don't offer to help—he's paid to work!

Act cold; he'll think you're dignified.

Always tell him of your fine former pastors.

Tell him what a great sermon you heard elsewhere.

Never speak well of him to strangers.

Pay just as little as you can; then growl.

Don't believe in missions; that makes you an infidel!

Don't let him know you're sick; he's a mind-reader.

Always "cuss" him for not calling.

Expect of him as though you were the only member.

Stay away from Church on the slightest pretext.

Never take your Sunday company to Church.

Find fault with the way he dresses.

Criticise his wife for not mixing in everything.

Tell folks his wife is trying to run everything.

Put in your time trying to get rid of him; didn't you promise to do this when you joined?

Prayer brings power, live; so don't pray.—Texas Christian Advocate.

EDWARDS.

On Friday evening, much to our sorrow, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Edwards' infant passed away. The funeral was preached on Saturday evening by the writer, while the burial service was conducted by a pastor near Mt. Airy. Miss Morey was also present with us at this time. The service was a very touching one, and we all extend to them our sympathy.

Bro. Edwards is one among our first members at Sandy Ridge, and has been a faithful member, not only in his Church, but in all the other enterprises.

THE WORLD'S BIBLE.

"You are a letter of Christ, written with the Spirit of the ever-living God." (2 Cor. 3:3.)—Weymouth.

Christ has no hands but our hands to do
His work today;
He has no feet but our feet to lead men
to His way;
He has no tongue but our tongue to tell
men how He died;
He has no help but our help to bring them to His side.
We are the only Bible the careless world will read;
We are the sinner's gospel, we are the
scoffer's creed;
We are the Lord's last message, given in deed and word—
What if the type is crooked? What if the print is blurred?

What if our hands are busy with other work than His?
What if our feet are walking where sin's allurement is?
What if our tongues are speaking of things His lips would spurn?
How can we hope to help Him and hasten
His return?

—Annie Johnson Flint.

COMFORT.

By Alice B. Joynes.

Though the skies be overcast,
Think not storms will always last;
Gloomy days will soon be past.
Sunshine follows after rain,
Loss will soon be changed to gain;
Joy will take the place of pain.

Never be downcast by grief,
To your heart will come relief;
Heaviest storms are often brief.

Try the sunny gleam to find!
Clouds are always silver-lined;
Joyous days are close behind.

Raise your spirits, dry your tears,
Give no place to gloomy fears—
Now it rains, but soon it clears.

Washington Memorial Plans Complete.—

Final arrangements are being made for the laying of the corner-stone of the great four-million-dollar George Washington Masonic memorial at Alexandria, Va., on November 1st. It is estimated that there will be 20,000 Masons in the line of march, and accommodations will be provided for 50,000 visitors.

America's Traders.—

Prime Minister Brice, of Australia, says the British must unite to fight our growing, dominating trade. The British Empire depends too much on America. He suggests a British imperial purchasing board, to control all buying for Britons and forbid any purchases in the United States of goods to be obtained anywhere in the British Empire.—Greensboro Daily Record.

Southern Masons Plan Relief Work.—

A commission appointed by the Masonic Grand Lodges of Texas, Arizona and New Mexico is incorporating the National Masonic Tuberculosis Sanatoria Association, for the purpose of building a chain of tuberculosis sanatoria to be located in various parts of the country, accommodating a total of 5,000 beds. The purpose of the movement is to provide relief for members of the fraternity afflicted with tuberculosis. The funds are to be secured by voluntary subscription, and it is expected that the grand lodges of the nation will co-operate.

A New Dish.—

A locust cookbook has been issued by the Bureau of Agriculture of the Philippine Islands. To prepare the locusts, they are poured alive into boiling water and then spread out on shallow trays to dry. Wings, legs, and tip of body are trimmed off, and they are then rinsed in water. Small locusts need not have legs removed, as they are tender. One receipt is as follows: Boil locusts for about ten minutes in sufficient vinegar, salt, and crushed garlic, and when the vinegar dries off fry in lard.

"Good Stuff."—

"Good stuff," or bootleg whiskey, as its friends recommend it, may become unpopular. Last week six prominent citizens of Pana, Ill., died after sampling "good stuff" that they had secured "in the original pre-war bottles." A few others probably will die.

Whiskey mixed with fusel oil that kills you in half an hour; with synthetic cocaine, that doesn't kill, but makes you a dope fiend and permanent customer of your honest bootlegger, may be working toward real prohibition. A death penalty is apt to discourage thirst. Providence works mysteriously.—Exchange.

One Million Slaves in the World.—

Appeals to the League of Nations, or what passes therefor, to take up the question of slavery with a view to abolishing it, reveal the fact that the world still holds one million chattel slaves. In spite of the utter outlawing of the idea of slavery and of the wars fought to destroy it, the institution persists in that land which has furnished both the idea of slavery and the slaves, namely, Africa. The slaves in whose behalf the plea is now made are Africans. The centers of the remaining slave trade of the world are Southwest Africa, Tanganyika and Abyssinia. It is only justice to say for the latter country that slavery is outlawed there, but is pursued much as bootlegging in the United States. The world is no better than it ever was, except in parts. The traveler today may wend his way not only over thousands of miles, but back through thousands of years, to the conditions which we are prone to describe as "ancient," but which really are contemporary modern customs, the only difference being that in our part of the world they are not the dominant customs—Dearborn Ind.

North Carolina and Education.—

W. N. Everett, Secretary of State, of North Carolina, in an address delivered at the "Founders' Day" celebration held at the University of North Carolina, makes special mention of the improvement of their public school system. He says that education is keeping pace with industrial activities in the States. We believe he might go further and say that education is causing and is setting the pace for these activities. To quote in part: "And in the development of our resource of farm, factory and field, of our hidden wealth in the air, on the earth and under the waters thereof, we have not forgotten the things of the Spirit.

"The folks in our counties and towns, of their own volition, invested last year $21,000,000 in public education, and in the last three years invested $25,000,000 in the enlargement and improvement of their plants, for better school buildings. The little red school-house on every hill, which Aycock saw in his dreams, is torn down now. They were but the mile-posts along the way of a people's march to progress. Today, at every cross-road we see the consolidated school, with its grades, and its playgrounds, with its trucks bringing the children in, so that every country child may have an equal chance with its city cousin to come into the full fruition of its early promise.

"There is no such thing as individual freedom. Freedom is civilization living within the law. Abolish the law and the house you live in becomes another's—the rule of might supplants the rule of right. Rob Roy's philosophy becomes the common lot of all."

...ebrate Monroe Doctrine.—

Civic organizations and school societies all over the country are planning celebrations of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of the Monroe Doctrine.

In his message to Congress of December 2, 1823, President Monroe, fifth chief magistrate of the nation, enunciated what has become one of the most famous doctrines in law and diplomacy, which has become epitomised in the succient phrase, "America for Americans."

President Monroe's words, which have so largely influenced the course of this nation and the world, were as follows:

"The occasion has been judged proper for asserting as a principle, in which the rights and interests of the United States are involved, that the American continents, by the free and independent conditions which they have assumed and maintained, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European powers. * * *

"In the wars of the European powers, in matters relating to themselves, we have never taken any part, nor does it comport with our policy to do so. It is only when our rights are invaded or seriously menaced that we resent injuries or make preparation for our defense. With the movements in this hemisphere we are, of necessity, more immediately connected, and by causes which must be obvious to all enlightened and impartial observers. The political system of the allied powers is essentially different in this respect from that of America. This difference proceeds from that which exists in their respective governments. And to the defense of our own, which has been achieved by the loss of so much blood and treasure, and matured by the wisdom of their most enlightened citizens, and under which we have enjoyed unexampled felicity, this whole nation is devoted.

"We owe it, therefore, to candor, and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers, to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies and dependencies of any European power we have not interfered nor shall interfere. But with the governments who have declared their independence and maintain it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any other manner their destiny, by any European power, in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Mr. J. M. Fix, of Burlington, N. C., who was in Richmond last week, made a brief call at THE SUN office.

Word has just come that Brother and Sister Bruce Morton arrived at San Juan, Porto Rico, Tuesday morning, September 18th, and were met by Miss Williams and Bro. Barrett, who took them by auto across the island to our field on the southern coast. They had a good trip and were well and eager for the beginning of their service.

Dr. W. A. Harper, on the evening of October 4th, gave a reception to the new members of the faculty of Elon College, of which institution he is president. The occasion was very pleasant and gave a fine opportunity to the people of the community to meet the new members of the faculty and to get acquainted with them.

Our Baptist brethren of Virginia are arranging a centennial meeting of their State association in November. At that time, as we understand it, they are to have a meeting of all the students of Richmond College of fifty years ago. That is a capital idea. We should like to hear the boys of 1873 get together and talk over the days of their college life.

Our Men and Millions Movement is moving, but slowly—but we hope surely. We notice our brethren of the larger denominations are having trouble to keep up their collections, so we guess our brethren are having no worse a time to make collections than some of the abler denominations. Let us stick to our task, and do our best, and soon we hope we may have a good report. Dr. J. O. Atkinson is in charge and working hard to get results. Help him wherever you can. The whole Church needs the success of this movement for all sections of our work.

The editor of the Western Christian Advocate makes a pointed reference to some people we have known when he says: "Jaunty references to God by semi-ignorant people ought to cease. Just as true greatness in a man tends to silence petty words in a bystander, so ought the infinite knowledge of God help every man to be humble in His presence." Let us all say, "Amen" to that, and yet we believe it is true that some people of culture of a kind are just about as likely to speak irreverently of deity as some semi-ignorant ones are.

Dr. W. W. Staley was able to leave the hospital at Winston-Salem on Monday, October 8th. He is stopping for a day or two with his brother, Mr. John M. Cook, in Burlington, N. C. We understand that he will be there for a few days and then stop off at Louisburg, N. C., to spend a few days with Mr. and Mrs. Holden, his daughter and son-in-law, and then go on to his home in Suffolk, Va. His many friends will rejoice greatly to know that he now seems to be on the way to a rapid recovery.

What is the secret of pastoral work in building up a Church which has run down? A good answer has been given to this work by a pastor through one of our exchanges, as follows: "A successful country pastor in New England says that 'patient and persistent plodding, with definite ends in view, a study of the community and ability to adapt one's methods to its requirements and an appreciation of consecrated common sense ought to secure some results anywhere. To meet Unitarianism in this town, a deal of judicious education in biblical principles and denominational history has been called for.'"

The annual meeting of the several conferences is drawing nigh. We need to get into closer touch with our work, that we may be better prepared to meet the responsibilities of the duties which may come to us in such meetings. Let every one who is called by his Church to attend the annual gatherings do his or her best to be in place when the Conference opens and stay till it closes. Give the Lord's work the first place in your program, and so seek to forward the cause. Did you say, "But my own work must come first." Are you sure that that is scriptural? Turn to Matt. 6: 32, 33, 34. Read carefully and prayerfully and see if it does not apply to you personally.

Down in Georgia, among our Baptist brethren, there is apparently something which is almost new under the sun. In one of the Baptist associations a committee on "liberality" submitted the following report: "Neither by experience nor observation, nor hearsay does your committee know anything about Christian liberality. We have never seen any, nor heard of any, nor seen any one who has seen any or heard of any. There is a record of a man, nicknamed Barnabas, who sold his lands and gave all the money to the Church, and of a nameless widow who gave two mites, all her living. But these died nearly two thousand years ago and left no descendants. Their tribes have died out."

One of our exchanges declares that if we wish a good prayer-meeting we should begin before the bell rings. Well said, and the point in it all is that if we would have a good prayer-meeting we need to prepare our hearts for that service before we go to the meeting. A great many of us make no preparation for the prayer-meeting before we go, and of course we do not get much out of the meeting. Josiah of old used to prepare his heart before the Lord, and then his work amounted to something worth while. Let us have more real preparation of the heart for all of our service for God and our fellow-man, and we shall see great things come to pass in the work we are seeking to do, and then the power of the Lord (through us) will come to our work.

In the Religious Herald we read: "Tasks that could not be accomplished by people working singly are easy when many pull together. Many of us have heard the story of the elephant that stampeded because of a swarm of gnats. The elephant did not mind a few gnats around him, but when a large swarm descended upon him and began attacking his eyes and every vulnerable point, something had to move, and something did move." That illustrates well the great tasks of the Church. One man never could do the work alone, but when the thousands of the Church come together, something has to move, and generally it does move, even when it is the elephant of heathenism. Heathenism cannot stand in the face of a united Church, when it is united and moving under the power of the Holy Spirit. The one great need of the Church of this day is the baptism of the Holy Spirit.

Our brother, the Rev. A. W. Plyler, editor of the Christian Advocate, of Greensboro, N. C., must have been on a visit to his old home of late. He seems to be quite reminiscent and has evidently been visiting the scenes of his childhood. In a late issue of his paper, he says: "Is there any enchantment for you, dear reader, about the old familiar footpaths of childhood? You may in life have ventured across continents and seas and have pitched your tent under strange stars, but the memories of the long road and of the vessel's wake have long since passed away. Not so with those earliest recollections of the pathway across the meadow bedecked with wild flowers, and the footpath into the old orchard where the June apples grew. Those paths enlarged and glorified by the imaginations of childhood and about which cluster the earliest affections, tender and abiding, are the first and finest roads of life." We do not blame any man to revisit the scenes of his childhood. The oftener, the better, under ordinary circumstances, to go back to the home of childhood. It softens the heart and brings it into closer relations with humanity and the great work we are called to do in the world.

In last issue we had "Activities Among Our Women," by Miss Pattie Coghill, field secretary for our women's work, which we are sure will interest those of our women who may be truly interested in the advancement of our Lord's work. It would seem that there should be no such woman to be found among us as one who is not interested in His work, for women have been the larger sharers in the blessings of Christianity—not that the Lord does more for women than He does for men, except as conditions demand it. Every where Christianity has gone, women have been lifted higher, because she had been oppressed more than men. It so seems clear that every woman ought to hail any and all opportunities for promoting the work of Christianity. Be it remembered that women have come to their own only in countries where the Gospel has been given a real chance to do its great work for them. Let it also be remembered that there are many countries in the world yet where women are oppressed and held down as the servants of the sterner sex. These we are seeking to deliver by giving the people of those countries the Gospel, that the light of Christ may truly shine, that these women may be lifted to a sphere of real usefulness, unknown where the darkness of this world reigns. Let our women rally to the light of Christianity, doing their best to give the same to all benighted lands. Miss Coghill is a devoted worker, and will be glad to be of help to the cause wherever she is needed. Her address is Elon College, N. C.

ELON NOTES.

Dr. W. W. Staley, former president of Elon College, who has for some time been ill at Winston-Salem, has sufficiently recovered to pay the college a visit on his way home to Suffolk, Va.

Dr. Staley is a member of the building committee, and his visit to Elon this morning was a sort of inspection tour to get back in touch with the progress of the rebuilding program since his confinement in the hospital. He expressed himself as being highly pleased with the progress being made.

The first brick on the new science hall was laid yesterday, and work is now going on on all five of the new buildings at one time.

After leaving the college, Dr. Staley visited friends in Burlington and Franklin County, and will return home to Suffolk, where he has been located for forty-one years.

THAT USED TALENT.

"And I was afraid, and went and hid Thy talent in the earth: lo, there Thou hast that which is Thine."—Matt. 25:25.

There is no place for a lazy man, and there is no place for him because there is no place he will fill with honor to himself and with usefulness to another. The slothful servant has no hope of happiness or usefulness in this life or the life to come. He is unwilling to work, and no one wants him around them, just because he is not a servant and by no means an ornament in the community.

The man spoken of in the text must have been a lazy man. If an industrious man, he surely would not have hidden that talent; rather, he would have put it to work and so have prepared the way to bring its best to the Master as well as to himself. A lazy man does not like to work for himself or any one else.

Laziness dreads everything that means work. There is but one thing the lazy man is willing to do, and even that is of no profit to himself or any one else. The one thing a lazy man is willing to do is to push work out of his way. He dreads the responsibility of everything else. He dreads the reality of personal responsibility. He will not touch anything which requires active effort. The slothful man shuns work. He would like to have the pay, but he is not willing to work for it.

The man of the text had been given a talent to be used in business, but he was too lazy to invest it, and when the Lord, who had given him a talent, came to get the profits arising from its use, he was told that he had kept the talent hid, but there was the talent; it was just what had been given to him, only it was rust-eaten, and so not so good as it was when it was given to him; but any way that made no difference to this lazy man, and so he looked up into the face of the man who had left it with him for investment, and said: "There it is; take it, it is yours."

Then the Lord wished to know why he had used his opportunity so slovenly; why he did not invest the talent, so that when He came both might have received what was due them—the Lord for the use of his money, and the servant profit on his labor. Then the servant said: "I was afraid, and went and hid Thy talent in the earth: lo, there it is, take it." This naturally did not please his Master, and so He said: "Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knowest that I reap where I sowed not, and gathered where I have not strawed."

Of course, the lord of that servant was displeased, and meeting the lazy man, he read the riot act to him, saying: "Knowing I was such a man, you ought to have put my money to the changers, for then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury." Now, speaking to his other servants who had used what he gave them well, he said: "Take, therefore, the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents, for unto every one that hath, shall be given, and he shall have abundance; but from him that hath not, shall be taken away even that which he hath."

Then he bade them to cast the unprofitable servant into outer darkness, where there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

What a picture, and it is the doom of the lazy and wicked man who would not render unto his Lord and Master the service which was due Him. The Lord has given to this man a talent and has asked him to invest the same in the interest of His kingdom, but being too lazy, the man who had been honored and trusted with his Lord's money was doomed to be cast out, where, instead of opportunity to serve, he should live in outer darkness in the midst of weeping and gnashing of teeth. Picture the two scenes—one of health, thrift and righteousness, while the other is a scene of desolation and ruin, not having done anything with the talent which had been entrusted to him for a wise and profitable use, and there was only failure and ruin, where it had been a great deal better had the man used the talent as directed.

Many regard the statement that, from him which hath not shall be taken that which he hath, as very hard to explain. They say if a man has nothing, how can you take it from him? That does seem a mystery, indeed, for it would be a most difficult act to take from a man a thing which he does not have. This hard question arises from the fact that we have not the right viewpoint from which to make a reasonable interpretation of this seemingly impossible thing.

The main point of this parable is found in the fact that the man to whom this talent had been trusted had not used it at all. It was not that he made a failure in its investment, or that he spent it for himself, or that he had wasted it in riotous living; the complaint was not based upon any of these, but upon the one simple fact that he had not used it at all. Now, looking at the teaching of the Master from this viewpoint, let us read it thus, and we shall readily see the true significance of the seemingly meaningless statement: "From him that hath not (used his talent) shall be taken away that which he hath (not used)."

In Matt. 13:12, we find the same idea presented, after this manner: "For whosoever hath (used what he had) to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; but whosoever hath not (used what he had), from him shall be taken away even that which he hath (not used)." If God has given some of us a talent, and we have refused or failed to use it, then the decree is that from him shall be taken that which he hath not used, and it shall be given to him who has used what he had, so that he shall have more abundance. We must admit that this is not only in keeping with the main point of the parable of the talent (that the man had failed to use what had been given him), but it is the commonsense view of the question. A man cannot give up what he has not got, but he can be made to give up what he has, which he has refused to use, either for the good of himself or others. All this view but confirms the thought that every gift God has bestowed upon us is ours to use, and not to waste.

The excuses men and women give for not doing the Lord's work—and that, too, when the Lord gave them the means they needed in doing the work—really seem ridiculous. In the ordinary affairs of life, men would not do that way; they would count themselves in luck if they could have a field in which to work, and, in addition, if they could have means of doing the work furnished them without money and without price, they would consider themselves as fortunate indeed.

The man who thinks that he should be excused from work in the Lord's vineyard because he has only one talent, is simply denying himself of a great privilege—the privilege of rendering service according to his capacity. Did you stop to think that the larger portion of the people of the Churches are people who have only one talent; people who cannot do great things, but can do small things, and do them well; and yet how many wish to be excused from having part in such a service as that! What could the leaders do in the service of the Church if the one-talent people should withdraw their help? Indeed, the Church is largely dependent on the people who have but one talent. They who use the one talent well are as sure of a reward as are the men who are stalwarts and have high position in the Church; but if we withdraw the men and women who have one talent, what could be done by the men and women who have ten talents? The thing that each one should seek to do is our best with the talent we have. Epictetus is credited with having once said: "If I were a nightingale, I would sing as a nightingale; if I were a lark, I would sing as a lark; but now that I am a man, I will glorify God as a man."

Think of a bluebird refusing to sing at all because she cannot sing as the nightingale sings! think how much worse it is for a man of one talent, made in the likeness of God, to refuse to serve Him because God made him a one-talent man instead of a ten-talent man! Alas! for such a life, wasted in the face of many fields of fine service, and all because he is a one-talent man or woman, he will not work at all—the idea is horrible, and for it there is no excuse, unless it be ignorance, or laziness and pride.

WHY BIBLE-TINKERING FAILS.

Here is a very interesting article, written by the editor of the Christian Herald, of New York City. It speaks out in very plain terms. It needs no commentator to explain what the editor of that paper means as to his relation to the efforts now so common against the Bible. Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, the man who wrote "In His Steps," is the editor of that paper. For many years, we think a good many of our readers thought the present editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN was off the track just a little because of his persistent warning against the dangers which threaten the Church from this "tinkering with the Bible." Now that so many of the leading men of the Church (all denominations) are speaking out in defense of the reliability of the Bible, it does give us a bit of encouragement to let our brotherhood know that their editor is standing with a goodly company of noble men and women who, with him, stand for the old Bible. Some people seem to fear for the safety of the Word of God, but there is no danger to the Bible, but much danger to men who are so easily led away from the truth in a time of unsettled convictions, as in these recent days. We have no fears for the Bible's safety; it has stood unshaken for two thousand years, and it will stand to the end of time, and then its truth will live on in eternity. But we do fear for the spiritual welfare of the men and women, and even the children, who may be misled by these men who are themselves under the hallucination that they belong to the company of wise men who may do whatever they like, even with the Word of God. Dr. Sheldon, in his editorial, says:

Within recent years, and especially since the close of the World War, there has been a great increase in interest in the Bible. Huge editions have been printed and scattered throughout the world by the great Bible presses, both here and in Europe, and the Word is literally finding "free course" in almost every land. Within the last few years, at least half a dozen new versions of the Bible in modern phraseology have been offered to the public, and more have been announced during the present season. To the authors of a majority of these projects, it does not seem to have been a matter involving any newly discovered manuscripts or new translations, but the avowed purpose was to transform the versions of the Scripture we have today into language that can be readily interpreted by "the man in the street."

It is certainly a laudable thing to place in the hands of the average reader a Bible which he will have no difficulty in understanding. There is, however, a serious danger with all translations of the kind. We have examined several of these up-to-date productions, and are obliged to confess that they are disappointing. Most of those tinkerers are without compunction. They would like to make a thorough job of the old Bible. They tell us "that the Church needs to scrap its ancient vocabulary," and acting on this idea, they proceed to do the scrapping, which to a very great extent is of the character that, instead of helping, insulates the religion of Jesus from its vital contact with the modern mind.

The Splendor and Sanctity of a Cathedral.

Changes in the language of the Bible, if justifiable at all, should be made only after full consideration. Says a writer in the Christian Century: "The old words are familiar; they are beautiful. They are hallowed with associations. They are solemn, sonorous, reverent, rhythmic. They have the dignity, the splendor, the sanctity of a cathedral." He then asks why a new version of the Bible is needed, and explains:

"It is, above all things, necessary that it should be understood, and that the idea it conveys to the reader today shall be the same idea that was in the mind of the ancient writer. But an idea can never be accurately reproduced in paraphrase or translation, unless the emotional tone, the spirit and personality of the writer are indicated with some approach to accuracy."

This was especially true of the King James Version, which, even amid the dignity and splendor of its matchless diction, has many unsatisfactory passages. That these could not be appreciated as they deserved was due simply to the changes that had taken place in that grand old Bible during the lapse of a century and a half. Many words and phrases had lost their original meaning, and some few meant the reverse of what they signified when they were interpreted in the seventeenth century. Then came the famous revision of 1870, which gave us the Revised Scriptures, and the subsequent American Revision.

It is not, however, with a view to being helpful in correcting obsolete words or phrases that our new Bible critics have been hard at work preparing their "modernized" Bibles. We have the Twentieth Century, the Moffatt, the Waymouth and Goodspeed Versions, and others, all coming fresh from the press—indeed, some of them have been on the market for several years. We are willing to assume that these promoters of the "modernized" Bible have a really helpful purpose in mind, but from what we have seen of these Bibles, we cannot understand how they may be made acceptable to the average Bible-reading Christian, who has not only a deep reverence for God's Word as such, but who has also an inherited and irremovable love for the beauty, and the dignity, and the incomparable charm of the Bible of their fathers and mothers, and upon which they themselves have been brought up from childhood. From what we have seen of the new "modernized" versions, much of the charm of the Old Book is cast aside. Describing the methods of these new revisers, an outspoken critic says:

"Tampering with the Bible not only spoils the beauty, but creates confusion in the text. It makes rents in the fabric. It is substituting a needless utilitarianism in the place of needed beauty. It is tearing down a temple to build a warehouse. It is worse than putting Shakespeare into the modern English of the streets."

Wycliffe Writing for the Modern Mind.

Some of the ablest living authorities hold that the Bible ought to be revised from time to time, to accord with the language changes that are constantly progressing. This principle has been recognized ever since the days of Wycliffe's "Open Bible." But such revisions did not lower the literary standard of the Scriptures. Indeed, one of the earliest revisions struck out of Wycliffe's Bible the passage about Joseph (in Gen. 39:23), which Wycliffe had probably written to please the modern mind of that day: "and the Lord was with him and that which he did, and he was a lucky fellow!" But this is an insignificant illustration in contrast with some of the modernized language of the new versions of today, which we are asked to accept as the Bible suited to the times we live in. We may be ungrateful for such a gift, but we take the ground that such a Bible as our friends offer, however much it may please the man in the street, cannot be gratefully accepted by the real Bible-lover.

We do not approve this Bible-tinkering, which would not only rob God's Word of much of its charm and dignity, but would immeasurably lower its attractiveness and power. The Bible has a right to its own setting, and its own lofty spiritual environment. To lower it would be sacrilege. Let us treasure the grand old Book of Books, and preserve it from the rude hand that would not hesitate, in the name of modern necessity, to reduce even the finest and most elevating passages to their lowest terms. Cannot any Bible-lover imagine what would be the result of such heedless work? No, the Bible must not be mutilated, even to satisfy the clamorers. Next to its accuracy we must place its literary integrity, and both must be maintained. Let us love—and keep—a whole Bible!

THE SPIRIT OF THE MINISTRY.

In these modern times the spirit of the ministry seems to have been hampered; it has not, apparently, the same power and the same liberty which it had in olden times. It does not seem to have the same spirit of real sacrifice now that it had in the days of the long ago. Some one has said that there is a lost note in the preaching of the Gospel in these later days. Brethren, if these things are true, they ought not to be true!

We need the spirit of sacrifice, we need the same spirit and the same power which the old worthies had in the long ago, when they were accustomed to suffer for the preaching of the Gospel and when they dared to suffer rather than be hindered in doing the work which the Lord had given them to do for Him. Read the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, and we shall feel like we must be mere pigmies in the Gospel ministry as compared with the saints of whom we read in that chapter. And the more we realize the fact that no effort and mere show is indulged in that chapter, but that the statements embody real facts in the lives of men who ministered in the name of the Lord.

What is the matter with the ministry, anyway? Everywhere we go almost, we hear men talking of the selfishness of the ministry; but is that true? We do not say that it is, but we do pretend to say that there is something in the way of the larger success of the ministry. It may be this or it may be that, but, beyond question, something is in the way, and that something ought to be removed, that the word of the Lord may run and be glorified in winning the world to Christ. Yes, there is no question about it, there is something hindering the larger usefulness of the ministry. If you think we are mistaken, then compare your ministry with that of some others of the olden time, and then say what conclusions you get therefrom. If you will compare faithfully and truly your labors with the labors of the ministers of one hundred years ago, you will be compelled to admit that the results are not overcomplimentary to the modern pulpit.

The Virginia Baptists are getting ready to celebrate their centennial in that State this fall. Of course, an occasion like that will bring out many things concerning the men of the old times of eighty and ninety years ago, and it may be of a hundred years ago. The Rev. J. M. Pilcher, in writing to the Religious Herald, tells of some things which may throw light on the difference in the ministry then and now, and because of that fact, we are quoting from one of his articles in that paper of the work of the ministry in the days when they seemed to have greater success in pointing the world to Christ for salvation. Dr. Pilcher says:

"A Jew, who professed faith in Christ, attended Richmond College and the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, supplied for a time the pulpit of the Baptist Church in Fredericksburg, married one of the most prominent members of that Church, did not find a pasture sufficiently fertile in Virginia, met me at the Greenbrier Association, in West Virginia, and said to me: 'Can you tell me vere I get a Church dat vill pay me a good salary?' This man finally left the Baptist ministry and finished his life in disgrace. Contrast with his idea of the ministry that of some other Jews of whom we read in the Acts of the Apostles (Acts 3:1-11; Acts 4:1-7; Acts 4:13-22).

"Does not this narrative inspire you with a desire to be as the apostles were and to do as they did? These men who served without remuneration 'departed from the council, rejoicing that they were accounted worthy to suffer shame in His name.'

"What was the impulse of the modern Jew? What was the impelling motive of the apostles? They were preachers, they were evangelists, they were led by the Holy Spirit, they were intent on saving souls because they were sent by Him who said: 'As My Father has sent Me, even so send I you,' and had told them, 'The Son of man came to seek and save the lost.' 'If they have persecuted Me they will persecute you.' 'They will put you out of the synagogues; yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think he doeth God service.' Do you say, 'This is ancient evangelism?' Have we improved on that extreme evangelism?"

That Jew seems to have a spirit as a minister which was looking out for the loaves and fishes. The end of his ministry seems to have been a reflection on the work of the ministry. Do we not in this day come short of rejoicing because we are permitted to suffer in His name? We may suffer a good bit, as human beings, but who is the minister that has suffered for Christ and His truth. Are there any? Call the roll and let us see who will stand up and answer: "I have suffered for the cause of Christ, because I dared to preach the truth." We know that Christ warned us of persecution for the truth's sake. When have you known of persecution of a minister because he dared to preach the truth, fearing only God and not man? There are some such. Oh! no, it has not come to pass that the Lord has not a faithful witness; there are many left in the ranks of the ministry of the twentieth century, but they are not as plentiful as they ought to be, nor as plentiful as they will be when the Church and its ministers shall again seek the baptism of the Holy Spirit and receive the same as the gift of God, as qualifying them as His messengers of truth.

Brethren, let us begin at ourselves and inquire: have I the true spirit of the Gospel ministry? or am I in any way responsible for the present state of the ministry of the twentieth century? May we seek to answer these questions in the fear of God, for finally we shall have to answer to Him and not to man.

MOST NOBLE, BUT INTOLERANT, MEN.

The Bible tells us that the time will come when men shall have itching ears for strange doctrines, and yet there are people, and a good many of them, who believe that a Christian ought to be tolerant toward practically everything that may come along. If one even gets to be very strong and clear in his views of certain things which are going on in the country, they are at once designated as intolerant, and it is made to appear that they are the enemies of truth and righteousness, and all because they are out and out against what they believe to be error.

This can be little less than a sign of apostacy, such as the Bible predicts will come. There are people who would have you believe that any man who stands truly for the truth, as the Bible presents it, is intolerant and should be discouraged in his endeavors to establish these truths among the people. If there is any one thing taught in the Bible more plainly than another, as we see it, it is the intolerance of truth toward error. Truth is fighting under a black flag—it gives no quarters, and it asks none. It stands for the truth and against error, and there is no compromise. Of course, for a man to be intolerant even toward error he must be very sure that he is not defending an error against an error. He must be sure that he is right and standing for the right, or he cannot afford to be intolerant. And how can a person be sure he is right in such matters? Well, if what he is standing for is in the Bible and its interpretation, as he sees it, is in harmony with the best men of Christendom in the days that have come and gone so far, then he may, unless the Spirit condemns him, stand intolerant toward evil, whether it be in practice or in doctrine. We feel he may be assured of the favor of God in the stand he is making for truth and righteousness.

We find a few paragraphs in the Wesleyan Methodist along this line which we deem wise and to the point. It also includes the opinion of the Sunday School Times, one of the ablest religious journals in this country, which takes a bold stand for intolerance against evil and error. Of course, where it is a matter of human opinion against human opinion, then tolerance is all right, but when it gets to be human opinion against the Word of God, then it is time to halt and take a stand squarely with the Word.

The Methodist, referred to above, says:

The Duty of Intolerance.

We frequently hear a cry raised against "intolerance" when some one who has the courage of his convictions voices his disapproval of some vicious doctrine or practice. Should we have such breadth of charity as to permit others to teach unscriptural doctrines and indulge in unholy practices without protest? Read what the editor of the Sunday School Times thinks about it. He makes a strong statement, which may seem strange to some of our readers who are admirers of the Times. Is he right or is he wrong in the following statement?

"True love is always intolerant. We cannot really love without being intolerant of all that would injure the loved one. God was so intolerant of sin that 'He gave His only begotten Son' in order that, by the shed blood of that Son, He might deliver men from intolerable sin and its intolerable consequences. The whole message of the Bible makes it plain that whoever, willfully, persistently tolerates things that God cannot tolerate becomes necessarily intolerable to God. What a sad mistake it is, in these days, when men actually make a virtue of toleration in directions where God makes it a vice. Some one has written, 'It is as if people were so afraid of intolerance that they are beginning to have no convictions at all.'"

A GREAT JOB UNDERTAKEN AND ACCOMPLISHED.

You have heard of a boomerang, but do you know what it is? It is a thing sent out intending to do injury to the one against whom it is sent, and instead of doing that, it returns and knocks down the man who sent it.

For instance, if I send out an evil report, seeking to do a certain man an injury, but missing him, it strikes a resisting object, which sends it back upon the man who started it, and knocks him down, in the estimation of the public, why he sent out a boomerange and it did its work just where it ought to have done it, and let us hope that it taught him a much-needed lesson.

We have recently read of an infidel who sent out a projectile in the way of an argument against Christianity, and it speedily returned, knocking him flat upon the ground. Then he had nothing more to say. If all evil reports could return upon the ones who sent them out, we believe many a great and good lesson would be taught, not only to infidels, but to many others as well, for infidels are not the only ones who send out boomerangs.

But if you wish to see how a boomerang works, read the following:

It is told of one of our early American evangelists that in the course of an address, he made the broad statement that all infidels are fools, and that he could prove it in any given case in ten minutes.

A man in the audience asked if he might interrupt, and remarked that he must take exception to the statement, since he was himself an infidel and thought he was no fool.

The preacher looked him over rather curiously and said: "So you are an infidel? Will you tell me how much of an infidel?" Certainly, sir; I deny that there is anything at all in religion." "Nothing at all in religion? Are you willing to go on record as saying that?" "Go on record?" the infidel replied; "why, I have been writing and lecturing against religion for these twenty years."

"Well, I said I could prove an infidel a fool in ten minutes, and I have seven minutes left. I'll leave it to the audience if a man isn't a fool to write and lecture for twenty years against a thing that has nothing whatever in it!" There is more than a sharp retort here. There is the exposure of the infidel's recognition that Christianity represents something that he must fight—for it condemns him.—C. B. McAfee.

A brother in the Church who has had unusual educational advantages, recently found himself in a hard place; it was hard to make sure of what was right. In writing to a friend at that time, he said: "I shall try to know His gracious will, and obey. He leads to the best ports always. A few years ago I faced a most hazardous situation. I had planned to embrace the hazardous situation, and then the Lord laid me down on a bed of sickness, and that kept me from going into that very dangerous way. I praise God for it now, for now I can see that He was just saving me from danger of a very serious character. At the time, I was very anxious to take this opportunity, but now I see that a spell of sickness saved me from a most dangerous undertaking, and I thank God that He saved me from it, even by a spell of sickness, for this sickness was indeed a light affliction as compared with that into which I was rushing myself at that time. I thank God for giving me the relief which came as a result of sickness. How many times we escape from the more serious evil by His lovingkindness in offsetting our plans by giving us a different direction. Sickness may keep my feet again in the path of mother's prayers." How beautiful is the spirit of submission to His will. It may require an affliction to keep us from going into the way of danger, but such an affliction is a mercy sent to us in disguise. Let us follow where He leads, for it is always safer than the ways marked out for us by the wicked one. I think my sickness was the means of saving me from much false doctrine and at the same time it led me in the way of sound doctrine. My mother is the greatest seminary I have ever been to. She loves Jesus without any guessing, and she never once implied anything else in all her teaching. She makes me love the old, old paths which never grew old to her and are always new to me. She would love my teachers at ———, and so would you.

ELON LETTER.

Rev. W. F. Jordan has just issued another gripping volume on missions, to which he has given the very significant title of "Glimpses of Indian America." The book is far more than the author modestly claims for it. The twelve chapters, filling, as they do, in excess of two hundred pages, are far more than a glimpse; they are a sympathetic interpretation of a people too long neglected and deserving every consideration at the hands of Christian America.

In his opening chapter, the author defines what he means by his title. "By Indian America," he says, "I mean particularly that section of the new world inhabited by the descendants of those races whose forefathers had established civilizations that were old before the landing of Columbus. These people are to be found in greatest numbers today in Mexico and Gautemala of the Northern Hemisphere, and in Ecuador, Peru, and Bolivia of the Southern. In all of these countries there are large racial groups that retain their ancient customs, costumes and languages in spite of 400 years of contact with European civilization. In all of them the Indian blood predominates among the governed, while the ruling class and the clergy are largely white."

It is a severe indictment that in the pages which follow, this faithful minister of our Church and world missionary traveler brings against the white rulers and priests for their inhuman, un-Christian treatment of the original Americans. Your blood boils as you read the evidences of oppression, insult, and wanton calumny which these silent, suffering brothers of ours must endure. Their overlords, who "conquered and reduced (them) to submission by treachery and superior weapons and armament," have "kept (them) in subjection and ignorance through the centuries." In the estimation of the ruling class, "the Indian is classed as a domestic animal and valuable beast of burden." The cataloguing of "the sights of human degradation witnessed" sickens the heart and prods the will to undertake something to relieve so desperate a situation. The Belgian Congo got relief when the conscience of mankind became outraged by the iniquities perpetrated on the helpless negroes of that benighted land. Mr. Jordan's book should bring a speedy relief in the land to the south of us and for which we are especially responsible under the terms of our Monroe Doctrine, as well as under the obligations of our Christian brotherhood.

In his concluding chapter, the author rises to flights of real eloquence as he depicts the forlorn plight of these brothers of ours as the Macedonian cry to us to come over and help. He makes it plain that jails will await many of those who respond, even as jail awaited another faithful servant of Jesus in the first Christian century when he answered the first Macedonian cry. He shows a picture of Mr. Powlison, of the Bolivian Indian mission, behind prison bars in 1922 for the Gospel's sake. This Christian man, Mr. Jordan located in the Indian village of Torocari by asking "for the man who treated the poor when they were sick." The wretched Indians knew him, but not his name. This saintly servant of Jesus was imprisoned on the false charge of having murdered an Indian boy whom he had befriended. With us, a man is innocent till he is proved guilty. In Indian America you are guilty till you prove yourself innocent, provided one of the ruling class accuses you. "The government is under no obligation to prove guilt. Mr. Powlison was given to understand that if he would promise to leave the country, all would be well and he would be released. This, however, he refused to do, and his wife and little children waited his return many months alone in the mud-walled hut of the Indian village," where they made their home as the servant of the poor and of Jesus.

Mr. Jordan is a brave man to go back to this country after the publication of this book, which he attended to during his recent furlough to America. But the undauntable spirit of the crusader is in him, and he is back again among the people whom he delights to serve as the ambassador of Jesus Christ. His book may cost him imprisonment, but he is not the man to flinch at any personal sacrifice to secure relief physical, intellectual and spiritual for these suffering, down-trodden peoples.

The American government should take note of his disclosures and bring freedom to these people as it did to Cuba when the cry of suffering there reached the sympathetic ears of our citizens. The government is under obligation at least to investigate the conditions Mr. Jordan describes and either to remedy them in the interest of humanity, if he is truthful, or to expose him if he is an alarmist.

This book, published by the Fleming H. Revell Company, New York City ($1.75 net), as a companion volume to Mr. Jordan's former book, "Crusading in the West Indies," should prove to be a best seller. It is more satisfying than fiction. It is depressively inspirational. It challenges the heart and convicts the will. It should prove to be Indian-America's magna charta.

I am proud that a missionary of the Christian Church and alumnus of Elon has been able to bring such a message as this to the Christian world. W. A. HARPER.

THE CHURCH BEAUTIFUL.

During the past twelve months, as in former years, I have had occasion to visit many country Churches. I am no architect, but I always take particular pains to note the plan of the buildings where I go. They interest me. My regret is that I do not see more buildings of a modern type. I regret to see many houses of worship remodeled and yet nothing modern added to the equipment. Additional seating capacity is the usual thing in mind in remodeling. Now, this is all right, if such is needed, but the future Church building in the country, as well as of the city Church, must be of a different plan from the present models.

I am delighted that the Christian Church has now taken up the matter of education along this line. Rev. H. Shelton Smith has for his work, in part, just this thing. His program as outlined in one of our publications recently, should arrest the attention of every leader and lover of the kingdom's cause.

No reader of this note, I hope, will draw the conclusion that a fine building is all that is necessary for worship—far from it is my idea. But when we have sent our children to modern and well-equipped schools six days in the week, they knowing that we proclaim the house of worship above the school, it is hard for them to understand the poor conditions offered them for Sunday School work and for worship. No wonder the little tots object to staying for preaching when we have constructed our buildings and made no provision for them. The seats all the same height from the floor, the little ones cannot rest as we grown-ups. I want to see one Church building with a children's section—a section with low seats and comfortable backs. This would give the children a real place in the house of worship, and I am sure that they would come about as near filling it as the older ones would in filling their places.

When I visit a Church and find the building well constructed, well painted, Sunday School rooms cut off, the yard and cemetery wall kept, I have a higher respect for the people of that community. And this: When I find the pulpit chairs so full of dirt and dust that the Sunday suit is in danger, I feel like calling a Church meeting to elect a janitor.

I believe in the Church beautiful—the beautiful Church! There is no use in condemning the young people of any community for not attending Church when there is not a bit of home-likeness there. And no wonder some people dread to die, for they have such a desolate-looking place in which to be buried. Every Church should have a regular keeper of the cemetery. The annual "clean up" is all right in many respects, but I have observed that a group of men with hoes and shovels and rakes destroy more flowers and make more places for easy prey for water to do its damage than can be replaced in a long, long time.

A well-kept Church and Church-yard is the part of every community pride. That which becomes the pride of the community, becomes the interest of the child.

Let us make the Church and all its surroundings beautiful. Let us make the country Church the most beautiful place of the community. The country Church has ground and trees and shrubbery, where the city Church does not. Let us make the country Church beautiful.

And finally, every Church should be neatly marked, giving the name of the Church, when organized, etc. But there may be a reason why many of our Churches would not care to let the public know their names. C. B. RIDDLE.

THE FIVE THOUSAND ARE COMING.

DEAR CHRISTIAN SUN:

Our people are responding very generously to my five-thousand-dollar proposition. Almost every mail brings contributions. My plea is so reasonable and easy. I am only asking that one thousand of our people will give five dollars each. Of course, if some one feels like he ought to give more than five dollars, let him do so to help make up for the few who may be in hard places and cannot send the "V." Let us get down to business and do this work at once, for the help is needed now. Please send your help today; do not put off till tomorrow.

If every pastor will only mention this proposition to his Church and show the people the importance of sending help right away, and if every superintendent will talk to his Sunday School about it, my! how the help will come in, and do us so much good in the establishment of Bethlehem College. Let the people understand our needs, and they will respond. May I again urge you to do this good deed for Bethlehem College.

I am going to write to each pastor a personal letter as to this matter, but that will require a great deal of time and will be burdensome; but I want you to know, brethren, how my very soul yearns for the success of Bethlehem College, for under the blessings of God this institution is to be a great aid to the establishment of the work of the Christian Church in Georgia and Alabama and contiguous sections. I wish you not only to give, but to pray for us, that we may establish an institution here which shall be so true to God and His Word that His smiles may continually rest upon it and its work. Give us a lift now, and we promise you we will do our best to go over the top with this enterprise. God bless every one of you.

Send pledges and money to the undersigned.

Yours for the success of Bethlehem College,

G. D. HUNT,

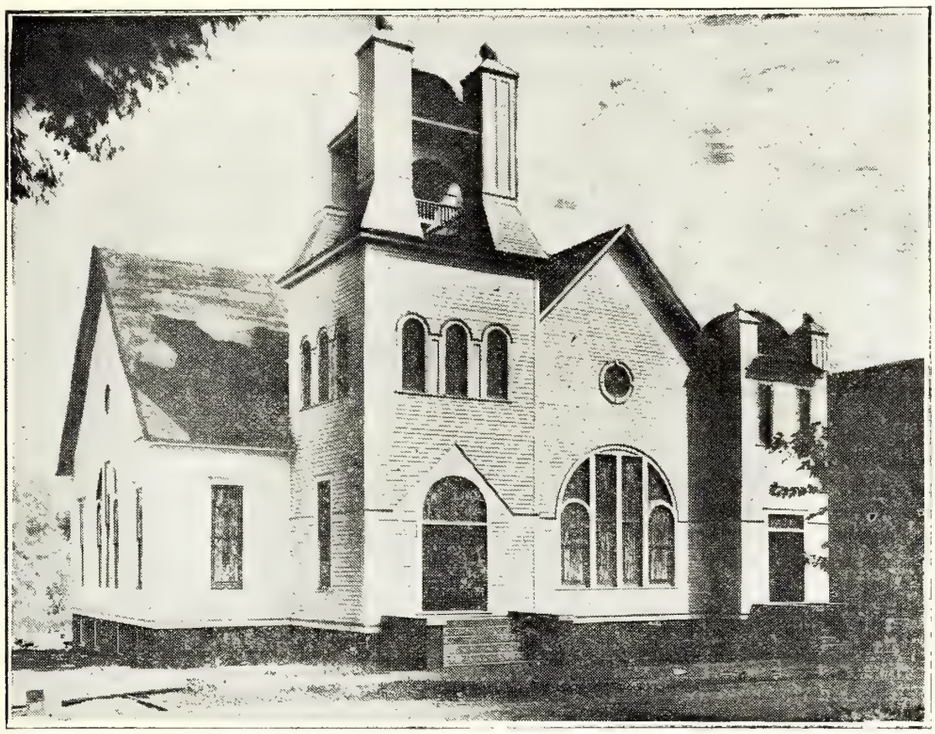
SKETCH OF LANETT CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

Lanett Christian Church was organized by Rev. H. W. Elder, with a membership of eighteen, in the year 1896. Rev. H. W. Elder was the first pastor, and the following have served since: Rev. T. H. Elder, Rev. M. L. Hurley, Rev. E. M. Carter, Rev. B. F. Young, and Rev. H. M. Gray, who is the present pastor.

This Church has done a great work. The first Church building was erected in 1899, and from the altar of this edifice a great host of people has gone out to work in the Master's cause. Within its walls many souls have been made happy by the love of God. Only two of the charter members reside in Lanett at the present time—Sister Annie Futrelle and Bro. G. F. Partrige. Many good people have finished their course in the service of this Church and have gone to their reward. This Church has done a great work this year.



LANETT CHRISTIAN CHURCH, LANETT, ALA.

The new Church building will cost more than $12,000, of which we have raised $10,000 in cash. We also raised $700.00 cash and paid for the lot that the new Church is standing upon, and we will have to raise about $2,500 more next year to cover the cost of the new Church.

We have just closed a great revival in this new Church building. The people were greatly revived, and thirteen members were added to the Church.

Our Sunday School is fine. We are making an average of over 200 every Sunday. The prayer-meetings are fine, and we have prayer-meetings twice a week—Wednesday and Saturday nights. The Christian Endeavor Society is also doing a good work. So you see that we are having a good time. We desire the prayers of all THE SUN readers.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

OUR RICHMOND CHURCH.

I could most heartily wish that every reader of THE CHRISTIAN SUN had been present, as a few of us highly favored ones were, at the opening service of our new and splendid edifice in Richmond on Sunday, September 30th. Dr. W. A. Harper has written graphically of the services of the day, and I am sure that all who read his description were delighted at the great day and the splendid exercises that were held. The writer doubts, however, if any CHRISTIAN SUN reader other than some of those present have begun to comprehend what we Christians now have in Richmond and what it means for the future of our beloved Christian cause. First of all, the building is of such structural proportions and finish as to delight the heart of every one who is interested in that for which it has been constructed. In every outline and detail of the building the skill of a master architect is in evidence. The great colonial columns supporting the portico through which one enters the main building, give one the feeling of solidity, durability and support. Entering the main auditorium, high-pitched, ample and inviting, there comes over one a desire to worship and to be reverential. There is not a temporary or frivolous suggestion anywhere to be seen within the four walls of the hard, white, pressed-brick building. One feels that both the architect and the builders had all the future in mind and the thought of centuries as they wrought to make the edifice permanent and powerful. One does not have to be told that here is a place built for worship, but is impressed with the fact on every hand. Evidently those who had to do with the building of our Richmond Church realized that we had gone into the capital city of the Old Dominion to stay and to worship God while we were there, and undertake to do His will for all time and eternity. In the gallery and main auditorium, five hundred people can be comfortably seated on the fine, solemn birch pews. The great pipe organ, the choir loft, and the pulpit-setting give the effect of completeness and perfection to a building erected for the sole purpose of reverential worship of Almighty God.

CHRISTIAN SUN readers can hardly realize, even by a far stretch of the imagination, what this Church will mean in the years that are to come. In it our Christian cause is to be upheld and heralded to hundreds and thousands in the generations yet to come, and from it are to go out preachers, missionaries, interested and devoted laymen and women to live the Gospel of our Lord and share the blessings of salvation and redemption with thousands who, for the want of this Church, would possibly never have such blessings. As Governor E. Lee Trinkle, of Virginia, in speaking on the opening day, said, a Christian Church is a great center from which emanate those influences which go to make a Commonwealth secure and a people better, happier and more prosperous. Every member of the Christian Church can certainly indulge a pardonable pride in the magnificent plant erected at Richmond and now open for services there. No wonder the pastor, Dr. W. T. Walters, and his people were radiant with joy and gladness on the opening day. It was an epochal day in the history of our Church, not only in the Commonwealth of Virginia, but in the commonwealth of God's Israel everywhere. The writer's conviction is that in Richmond we have builded far better than we have thought, and that the generations to come can only grasp the far-reaching consequences of that which has already been done in this capital city.

J. O. ATKINSON.

THE WOMAN'S CONFERENCE AT WAKEFIELD.

The Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference was held at Wakefield Friday, October 5th. A very large delegation was present, nearly all of the societies in the Conference being present, and the program of the day was rendered to a full house and interested representatives.

Promptly at 10:15 A. M., Mrs. C. H. Rowland, president, called the body to order in its ninth annual session, and Mrs. E. C. Beale conducted a most appropriate and impressive devotional service.

The president's message was most timely and full of practical and helpful suggestions to the entire body. Mrs. Rowland kept in mind throughout her message the needs of all the organizations of the Conference and the ideals to be striven for. She urged the women to larger endeavor in the name of Christ, and the young people to strive to make the kingdom more effectual in their lives and community, and for all to keep ever in view the great commission of our Lord. She said there were only a few Churches without a missionary organization, and that the women of the Conference must not give up or lag in their enthusiasm until every Church had a woman's, a young people's, and a willing workers', and a cradle roll society. She pleaded with the women to be faithful in the discharge of their duties, to study the mission books of the year, to put on interesting programs, and to meet their dues to their society and their Men and Millions pledges in their Churches. It was a masterful presentation and was worthy of the great occasion.

The societies did not report, as heretofore, through their delegations, but through their district superintendents. Mrs. J. A. Williams reported for the Franklin District; Miss Jennie Willis Atkinson, for the Nansemond and Gates County District; Mrs. B. E. Livesay and Mrs. L. B. Faison, for the Waverly-Wakefield Districts, and Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, for the Norfolk District. Each of these superintendents showed that she was in touch with the societies of the ten or twelve Churches in their district and presented facts helpful and suggestive.

Mrs. J. E. Cartwright also made a report as superintendent of literature and a plea for renewals and new subscriptions to the Christian Missionary.

Mrs. L. E. Smith, in a most helpful and happy manner, reviewed for the Conference the foreign mission study books for the year. If the societies do not use these books, it will certainly not be from any lack of enthusiastic recommendation that Mrs. Smith gave the books.

Miss Jennie Willis Atkinson read a paper reviewing the home mission books, and endeavored to show that these books would give us a better grasp of needs and conditions in the home field, and that it would be well worth the time of any society to purchase and study together the volumes adopted for the year.

Mrs. M. L. Bryant, Berkley, Va., the wide-awake and deeply interested treasurer, made her ninth annual report, showing total collections for the year as follows: Woman's societies, $3,443.34; young people's societies, $1,267.48; willing workers' societies, $430.00; cradle roll societies, $71.44; rally day collections, $41.05—total, $5,253.31. As the goal for the year was $6,000.00, Mrs. Bryant made a plea that the societies do their best the coming year in an effort to go over the top, and she believed that under favorable conditions the goal would be reached. Some funds were turned in after her printed report had been made up.

One of the very happiest reports was that of Mrs. W. V. Leathers, Holland, Va., for the young people's work. Mrs. Leathers had, with much care and painstaking, prepared a large chart which all could see and which showed the Churches having young people's societies, those that did not have them, the number of members in each, and amounts paid by each. The chart showed at a glance just the standing of the Churches as to young people's missionary work. Mrs. Leathers made a strong appeal in behalf of the young people's work, which will no doubt result in great good to the societies and in the organization of other societies.

Mrs. W. H. Baker, Newport News, Va., superintendent of the cradle roll of the Conference, read a paper as a preface to her report, showing the benefits to be derived from having a cradle roll in the Church. She contended if the babies could be consecrated to missionary service that mothers also would be reached, and that every Church should have a missionary cradle roll. She said that hers was only half a report, as only about half of the societies made a report of the work they had done the past year. The report showed much progress in the work and gave promise of better things to come.

The Conference was much edified at this period by a very appropriate solo impressively sung by Mrs. Vernon Holland.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va., delivered an eloquent address on the "Marks of a World Christian." The speaker said he was following the outlines of Dr. Fleming's great book on this topic, but he gave the points of the book with such pith and vividness that all present who heard him were deeply impressed with what it took to make a world Christian. Bro. Hardcastle felt that this book could be used in our daily devotions and that the children in the home, as well as the parents should be brought in contact with those great salient truths that constitute a real Christian, namely a world Christian. The field is the world, and we must think in terms of others if we are to be real Christians.

Following the address, an offering of $35.00 was taken, which was later voted to be given to our mountain-house building, Carroll County, Va.

Miss Pattie Coghill, field secretary of the woman's and young people's work, was introduced to the Conference and made some appropriate remarks about the work she is doing.

The Wakefield society and their friends spread a most bountiful luncheon, to which all delegates and visitors were cordially invited. It was sumptuously served, and the hour given to hospitality and fellowship was delightful indeed.

The afternoon session opened with the congregation singing "Publish Glad Tidings." Mrs. J. E. West, Suffolk, Va., led an inspiring devotional service, and the various committees appointed at the morning session on resolutions, apportionments and nominations made their reports. It was decided to leave the apportionments as last year, with the invitation to societies to write to the treasurer for increase or decrease, to be decided upon at the executive committee meeting in November. The same officers were chosen for the coming year as those the past year.

Mrs. W. T. Walters, Richmond, Va., gave a reading entitled "The Sin of Ahab," which interested the audience very much and which was artistically rendered.

The writer delivered an address on "Enlarging Our Borders," in which the attempt was made to show that our borders at home are enlarged more rapidly when a faithful attempt is made to do our duty to those who have not the privileges of the Gospel as we have. Home missions and all institutions at home will grow in interest and efficiency with leaps and bounds only when we become a truly missionary people and make an honest and faithful effort as did the Apostle Paul to carry the light of the Gospel to the Gentiles, then to kings, and finally to our Israel at home.

Mrs. L. W. Stagg, Norfolk, Va., is the capable and efficient recording secretary, and closed the Conference with a reading of the full proceedings of the day. J. O. Atkinson.

THE RURAL CHURCH OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

By S. L. Beougher.

Part I.

Rural or country Churches are defined as those in towns of 2,500 population and less, and over seventy-five per cent of the Churches of the United States are rural Churches. The country Church is the one institution that has done and can do more to enrich individual character, make home happier, and daily toil more attractive and gainful. As its spire towers above every other building in village and hamlet, so its ideals, its inspirations, its message to men, its hopes and help are pre-eminent. The rural Church of today is facing some momentous problems, but she has her face toward the rising sun; she is catching the vision. At the opening of the nineteenth century ninety-seven per cent of the people of this country lived in the rural districts, and three per cent in the cities. At the rate migration is now going from country to city, in fifteen years there will be ten millions more people in the cities than in the country. This means a change of civilization, and new problems to solve. A rural civilization that will hold men to the soil must be satisfactory materially, intellectually, socially and spiritually, to the boys and girls born and bred on the soil. We must give them ideal conditions in which to live. Humanity never rises above its ideals. The most magnificent temple ever erected first existed in the mind of the architect, and fell below his ideal. What ought to be is always above and beyond what is. Unless, however, we have before us the visions of something better, we can never rise above what we are. So long as we think of the farm as merely a place to live and not as a home, we shall never evolve a rural civilization worth while. So long as our children are taught in the rural schools in terms of the city, by teachers who regard the life of the city as the only life worth living, these children when grown will prefer the city. So long as our religion is taught in abstract terms which the people who need most the blessings of the Gospel do not understand without illustrations from rural life, and by preachers whose ambitions it is to fill or at least occupy a city pulpit, the vacant pews in the rural Church will be in the majority. If agriculture is to be the basis of a rural civilization, it must furnish a comfortable living to the man who tills the soil; not necessarily great wealth, but by no means poverty; for the problems of agriculture are at the bottom of economic problems. He must have a reward that will fit him for the duties of citizenship, a living worth fighting for in the field of politics in times of peace and in times of war. A rural condition that will furnish ample scope for the ever-expanding intellect; provide for the social wants of the individual, so as to elevate manhood and womanhood, and to provide for the expression of the religious convictions, emotions and spiritual life of the community, for a civilization without religion falls short of barbarism.

In 1908 the Country Life Commission, appointed by Theodore Roosevelt, said: "The time has arrived when the Church must take a larger leadership, both as an institution and through its pastors, in the social reorganization of rural life." The Church has caught the vision and is preparing to take the place of leadership accorded to her by the forces which are co-operating in the reorganization of country life and the application of the Gospel to modern rural communities, through the organization of special rural departments added to all the leading denominations. Much has been said and written about co-operation, co-ordination and federation of rural forces, and if one-half of the schemes that have been suggested as solutions of the problem of Church unity had in them real constructive merit, most of the ills of country life would have been dispelled and the country Church would have come to its own. As remarkable as it may seem, the Church has been among the last to recognize that the permanent forces for the reconstruction of a community are the resident forces, for the farmer is not yet ready to allow himself to be dominated by the city mind.

No treatment of this subject can be adequate that does not recognize the country mind and the country conditions. Human nature is the same everywhere, of course, but people think in terms of their environment and habits of life. Any one who has ever lived or dealt with country people, knows that they have a mind peculiar to themselves. They live in a different world, so to speak. Conditions, too, are very unlike those found in the city. It is quite natural and reasonable, therefore, that these rural folk should require institutions differing in method from those found in the city. Every neighborhood needs some common meeting place, where all classes may meet together for work and play, for sociability, for educational and spiritual uplift. There is no place more suitable to become a social center than the country Church. All men are more or less religious by nature. They are created in the image of one common Father. Religion ought to be common ground upon which all could unite, for mankind are naturally brotherly, and they have down in their heart of hearts a common interest in and reverence and love for the one God and Father of all. It is difficult for a country Church to become an effective religious and social center in a sect-ridden community, where the farmer gets into his automobile on Sunday and drives and drives for miles, with his family, until they finally come to the particular brand of worshipers with whom they fancy they can praise God to their satisfaction. A good share of the "world" so-called is still content to be merely onlookers with reference to this kind of business. Let the country community forget its Church differences for a generation and emphasize anew the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man and the Lordship and Saviourship of Jesus Christ and at the same time cultivate and give opportunity for a brotherly service and the country Church will become a real religious and social center and a tremendous force for righteousness. The commingling of country people at the Church center may be made a real stimulus to many kinds of practical service which shall help to make ruraldom a new earth. It is nonsense to say that these activities centering in the country Church will detract from religion and lead to worldliness. Are your boys and girls who have received the message of salvation and have become disciples of Christ to rest the remainder of their lives in the consciousness of this peaceful state and find their chiefest enjoyment in the thought alone that they are saved? A lot of them get excused from this monotony, when there is nothing else to follow. Many more wish they were out, and still others remain good but are good for nothing, so far as building up the community in things that are worth while is concerned. People are saved to serve. They are not only saved from something, but to something. A power of any kind is useless unless it is harnessed to some worthy object or task. A really converted man will naturally set his environment and living conditions, as well as those of his neighbor, in perfect order. But he needs to be directed; so this reverts to the question of leadership, and leadership involves not only special preparation, ability, tact, and great wisdom, but a willingness to pay the price. The key to the solution of the country life problem in America is adequate leadership. Consequently, the proper training of rural leaders is the most significant single task that emerges out of the country life movement. A very large proportion of this leadership must be found among the farmers themselves; since the three fundamental institutions through which rural redirection must be brought about are the home, the Church and the school—the farmer, the teacher and the preacher. The problem then is first of all to discover, enlist and train local leaders for the home, the Church and the school. Second, to stand for the training in our colleges, normal schools and theological schools of men and women who are rural-minded, who will give their lives to the country, who will become resident leaders of leaders and teachers of teachers.

Home-makers who will give the boy and the girl in the home a real share of profit and pleasure of the farm as well as a definite share of responsibility for it; teachers who will not only impart knowledge, but who will work in closest cooperation with the pastor, and home-builder; pastors who are especially trained for the country ministry. Men who will not think of the country Church as a stepping-stone to the city Church, but will recognize in the country Church a life-work worthy of the best minds and greatest hearts. The average minister today does not appreciate the country opportunity and its reward; he has been trained for the city Church rather than for the country, even though he takes a rural field. The seminary graduate by necessity takes the country Church because there are not enough "big" Churches to go around. The worst sin against the rural Church today is to use it simply as a stepping-stone.

DO YOU KNOW THE MAN?

To the Editor:

I would more than appreciate any information that I may be able to secure regarding one Joshua Newlin, or the Newlin family, who, I believe, lived in your section of the country. Some of the Newlins married into the Hinshaw family, and I would be glad to have any information on the latter in that connection. If you would place a small item in your paper on this point, giving my name and address, I would more than appreciate it, and may I ask that you accept my thanks in advance. Yours very truly,

Francis H. Williams.

FAMILY ALTAR

"In Thee and in Thy seed shall the families of of the earth be blessed."—Gen. 28:14.

Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

(Use this in your daily devotions.)

MONDAY.

THE WAY TO BE WISE.

"If any man among you seemeth to be wise in his age, let him become a fool, that he may be wise."—1 Cor. 3:18.

Paul, in writing to the Church at Corinth, and it is assumed that he must have intended that his words should apply to the Christians. There seemed to be those in the Church who claimed that to believe in the saving and cleansing power of the blood of Jesus Christ was utter foolishness. They set forth their wisdom as superior to the idiotic faith of the believers. To these he said: "You had better become a fool and learn a little wisdom than to be so wise in your self-conceit and lose out.

If it was easy at that time, when the death of the Lord was so fresh in every one's mind, to disbelieve, how much easier it must be today, after 2,000 years, for some to say that the virgin birth and the saving power of the blood is foolishness. Our first lesson in Christ is: "To obey the Lord is the beginning of wisdom."

PRAYER.

Dear Father, weeks and years have passed and we have not feared and followed Thee as closely as we ought. May we begin this week, with hearts fixed on Thee, to believe in Thee—believe Thy word, and walk in humble obedience thereto, whether we see or not. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

GOD CARES! DO YOU?

"Go, ye, into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

This is the commission which was first and last with our Lord Jesus Christ. Forget not that your first and principal business as a disciple of Christ is to give the Gospel to those who have it not. He who is not a missionary Christian will be a missing Christian when the great day comes of bestowing the rewards of service. Therefore, ask yourselves daily what the Lord would have you do in connection with the work of carrying the news of salvation to the perishing millions. Search carefully whether He would have you go yourself to the heathen, if you have the youth and fitness required for the work. Or, if you cannot go in person, inquire diligently what blood mortgage there is upon your property in the interest of foreign missions, how much you owe to the heathen because of what you owe to Christ for redeeming you with His precious blood. I warn you that it will go hard with you when your Lord comes to reckon with you if He finds your wealth hoarded up in needless accumulations instead of being sacredly devoted to giving the Gospel to the lost.—Dr. A. J. Gordon.

PRAYER.

Dear Father, set our hearts on fire with desire for the salvation of others, and may this passion rule our hearts, and may there spring up between Thee and the world complete union, so that Thy people may choose what Thou dost, and be happy. Help us to do our part. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

SOUL HEALTH.

"He that keepeth the law, happy is he."—Prov. 29:18.

The greatest prayer of any life is for soul health. If the springs of thought, feelings and the will are not healthy, the soul is diseased and unhappy.

Health of soul is acquired in the same way that the body acquires health. Keep the laws of the body, and we have a healthy and happy body. In this assemblage of delicate organism we call the body, there is orderliness, regularity, harmony, co-ordination, co-operation and action. Health is maintained by understanding all, giving one and all most careful consideration and disciplining action in accordance to the laws they demand. We must have the same understanding and give the same consideration to our soul functions. Soul health does not come as a matter of course, but as a result of assiduous discipline and culture, a regulated life in soulful things, orderliness in conduct, deliberate quest of vital forces, consistent exemplary habits. No defilement. Prayer and God.

PRAYER.

Oh, loving God, we know that Thou art not willing that we should perish, but that we shall be whole. Help us daily to exercise all the faculties of our souls, thoughts, feelings and wills, and to keep ourselves tuned to Thy great spirit. Amen.

THURSDAY.

IS A LIE EVER JUSTIFIABLE?

"The lips of truth shall be established forever."—Prov. 12:19.

"A true witness delivereth souls, but he that uttereth lies causeth deceit."—Prov. 14:25.

"Whosoever would save his life shall lose it."—Matt. 16:25.

Do you ever lie? What do you think of a liar? Here is meant one whose conception of the truth is so whimsical that he is willing, whenever the price is attractive enough, to betray it. Will a man lie? If so, how far can you depend on him?

To save unpleasant experiences, money, feelings of others and various other things, oftimes one will lie and say that he is justified. How can one tell when circumstances justify the enormity of a lie? The other party needs to know the truth at whatever cost. Who should be the judge? Good character rests only on a solid foundation, and there can be no such foundation where the truth is handled carelessly and replaced by a lie at the discretion of the user. Men will die for the honor of their country. Why not die for the honor of the truth? To tell a lie because of consequences is cowardly.

PRAYER.

Oh! God, have mercy on us, hear us, we beseech Thee; purify and strengthen our hearts by Thy mighty power, that all the time, in word and thought and deed, we may be true and faithful. For the glory of Jesus Christ, we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE MEANING OF IMMORTALITY.

"When this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall come to pass," etc.—1 Cor. 15:54.

Whatever else "mortality" may mean, it most of all means "incompleteness," and "immortality" means "eternal, abiding completeness." Mortality is the beginning, and immortality is fruition. Mortality is the bud and immortality is the flower or the fruit.

All of us are looking for completeness, and wondering when it will come. Do not be discouraged; we must grow, and he that is faithful to the end shall reach it. A plant is a wonderful thing growing and building its fibre, twining its roots, hurrying its life-blood along the body, striving for its completion. We watch it patiently, for we see far ahead of it what it will be, and one morning when it blossoms we forget the long time we waited for it and rejoice. Suppose the plant had been conscious of its growth, and each morning had tried to blossom, and, finding it impossible, would seem puzzled and give up. Mortality is the growing, and completeness comes only by the growing process and only at the end of the growing. This life is a vestibule of a glorious life beyond.

PRAYER.

Dear Father, blessed Holy Spirit, take, we pray Thee, the blindness from our eyes, that we may see and prize the honor Thou hast conferred in making us heirs to eternal glory. Help us to make all our labors and cares, faculties and powers, to focus in service, so as to grow from imperfection to perfection, from a mortal to the glorious. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THINKING.

"Prove all things; hold fast to that which is good."—1 Thess. 5:21.

Since the week is closing, and a new one will soon begin, it is a good time for us to think over what we have done during the past week, and what we have left undone that we should have done.

That which we do gives us experiences, and the experiences are a test of values, but they will be useless to us unless we ponder over them and find these values. The things we believe and intend to hold to are sometimes torn from us and scattered away by the storms and disrupting experiences which sweep our lives. These may engross us so that we forget values and lose the true meaning of life; but if we are thoughtful and careful, even the storms of life will serve us, for we will use them to test our faith. We lose our faith not because we cannot stand the test, but because we are unwilling to make the sacrifice. Think, and condemn nothing until proved, and then plant your feet on nothing that cannot stand.

PRAYER.

Dear Father, Thou who leadest Thy people like a shepherd leads a flock, lead us into paths of power, righteousness and peace. Life is so great, and we are so small. Experience is so ponderous, and we are so weak. Guide us by Thy Holy Spirit into the true values of life, and thus may we grow better and better each day. Amen.

SUNDAY.

INCURABLY RELIGIOUS.

"He hath showed thee, oh man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with thy Lord."—Micah 6:6.

Time is set with the religious, forever; and so is man. In all our experiences, complexities, perplexities, needs, thirst for knowledge, passions for adventure, loves and hates, there is an impenatrable shadow which gives us an overwhelming sense of dependence upon a higher power. It is religion.

Let your religious instinct have control today—follow the text and Christ, and make God's day as much of spiritual culture to you as possible. Religion is not sentiment, nor emotion, nor intellectuality, but is the working clothes of every day in which harmony prevails and demonstrates what is right.

PRAYER.

All this day, O Lord, let my soul reign within me, and let me touch Thee, and as many lives around me as possible—for Thee. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

The thermometer registered 40 degrees this morning. Just eight degrees above freezing. These chilly mornings bring to our minds that within the next ten days we will have to buy shoes for 105 children. Little suits, too; and when you ask the price, it makes you have cold chills and a high fever afterwards. The prices this fall remind me very much of war-time prices. But we have to take our medicine. We rejoice to know that our friends stand by us and will help to make our way brighter by sending to us things that will be helpful to us in this work and also nice checks to help us meet our bills. Oh! it makes us feel happy when our friends come to our rescue in this work of love and charity. The good women never forget us.

Mr. W. F. McFarland, chairman Philathea class, Bible School Christian Church, Greenville, Ohio, sent us 8 dresses, 7 pairs bloomers, 6 second-hand dresses; Mrs. J. A. Williams, Franklin, Va., 1 box dresses; Miss Janie Pierce, Richmond, Va., 5 dresses; Ladies' Missionary Society, Milmine, Ill., 6 gowns, 3 blouses, 3 pairs rompers; Mrs. Ben T. Holden, Louisburg, N. C., 2 dresses; New Liberty Missionary Society, Cynthiana, Ind., 18 dresses, 4 pairs second-hand shoes.

We are certainly grateful for the above donations, and hope the Ladies' Aid Societies of our Churches will all feel an interest in the work here.

THOUGHTS ATTRIBUTED TO THE SUN.

The following letter, addressed to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, so nearly gives expression to sentiments of other letters received, it is published without revealing the name of the author, that others may see that they are not alone in the race of life. True it is, that THE SUN needs and appreciates remittances as promptly as may be made.—Managing Editor.

I know you have thought that I have had very little interest in THE SUN by being so neglectful of paying my subscription, but I have had a reason. I cannot find words to express my thanks to THE SUN for being so lenient with me. I have enjoyed THE SUN for a long time—all at your expense, without a word; and I appreciate it more than I can express.

I will state here that the reason I have not paid is because I have been financially embarrassed for the last three years on account of sickness in my family, but, thank the Lord, I have pulled through it safe, I hope. Please let this letter be personal, as I just wished to express myself to you, so you could better understand. Please write me how much more I owe THE SUN. I cannot tell by the label; the subscription rate has been changed, and I will send the balance. Please accept my thanks.

I am yours to serve.

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

As secretary of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference and of the executive committee of the North Carolina Christian Conference, I am authorized to make the following announcements:

The North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference meets at Bethlehem Church, Alamance County, N. C., on the evening of November 13th. Delegates coming by train should notify Mr. Clyde Iseley, Burlington, N. C., R. F. D. They will be met at Elon College if notice is sent in advance.

The North Carolina Conference meets at Wake Chapel Church, Fuquay Springs, N. C., on the evening of November 20th. Delegates should notify the pastor, Rev. J. Lee Johnson, Fuquay Springs, N. C., and should go to that station by rail, where they will be met if notice is sent in advance.

All reports from Churches and ministers should be sent to the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference. That body will report to the North Carolina Conference.

W. A. HARPER, Secretary.

VIRGINIA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The annual business meetings of our Churches will soon be held, and at them the delegates to the annual Conference will be elected. It will greatly help the entertainment committee of the Holland Church if you will send us, as soon as you can, the names of all delegates desiring entertainment overnight. Be sure, too, to send with the names any other information necessary for our guidance in the allotment of homes.

Send communications to—

J. P. DALTON.
REV. J. H. LIGHTBOURNE.

NOTICE.

All persons expecting to attend the Western North Carolina Christian Conference, which convenes November 6, 7 and 8, at the Christian Church at Ether, N. C., will please notify Hamor G. Cochran, chairman of the entertainment committee. Say how you are coming, whether by train, auto or horse and buggy, that provision may be made for entertainment.

HIRAM FREEMAN.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

PREMIUMS GIVEN FOR NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The subscription price of THE SUN, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

SCHEDULE.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.
4. To one securing 75 Subscriptions, one Remington Portable Typewriter, with standard keyboard and case ($60.00 f. o. b. Richmond).
5. To one securing 30 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or one Lady's Wrist Watch will be given, guaranteed by Jahnke Bros., Jewelers, of Richmond, Va. ($30.00).
6. For 25 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or Lady's Watch ($25.00), likewise guaranteed by Jahnke Bros.
7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

Send in your name and address and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

The contest will close on October 31, 1923.

Remittances made on this campaign are to be net. Post-office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

Subject: "Some Missionary Teachings of the Prophets."—Isa. 60:1-3; Jonah 4:10, 11; Micah 4:1-3; Zeph. 3:9.

Golden Text: "Nations shall come to Thy light, and kings to the brightness of Thy rising."—Isa. 60:3.

Devotional Reading: Isa. 42:1-9.

Reference Material: Isa. 25:6-9, 32:1, 49:1-6, 52:13-53:12; Dan. 2:44.

The Prophets as Missionaries.

When "holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit," some of the world's greatest missionary messages were delivered. And these early prophets have given many later missionary speakers challenging messages. Some one has said that of the sermons preached in connection with the annual meetings of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, the oldest mission board in America, more than half have been from Old Testament texts. There is a great wealth of missionary material in the Old Testament, and much of it is in the writings of God's faithful prophets.

A prophet is a "forth-teller" who has three functions. He recalls the past and keeps before the people the divine protection and care which has been theirs. He interprets the present, and calls for righteous and upright living. He has a vision of the future which points out blessings or disaster, according to man's attitude toward God and the deeds of his life. The prophets of Israel, coming with messages of varying emphasis, held many beliefs in common, truths which underlie the great missionary movement. They believed that Israel was God's chosen instrument in the world; that He cares for His people and demands their worship and obedience, and they were always hopeful, seeing the nations of the earth coming to the great Jehovah who loved them all. The lesson gives the message of four great leaders, but a careful study of the prophetic portions of the Old Testament will reveal many other passages with missionary teaching.

"Nations shall come to Thy light."—Isaiah.

Isaiah was a prophet with a world vision. All of the world of his day, he "took possession of in God's name." Nations today need his message of righteousness. Churches, content to spend all their thought and effort and money on great Church buildings and choirs, as helpful as these may be, miss their greatest blessing—having a share in bringing all the nations to the light. Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, in her very helpful book, "The Bible and Missions," tells of a modern writer who has expressed this missionary challenge in unmistakeable and unforgetable terms. "I am asked, 'Do you believe in foreign missions?' I answer, 'Do you believe in the Gospel of Christ?' For be assured of this: if foreign missions, when considered in the large, are a failure, the Gospel is a failure. If Jesus Christ has no message for the man in Shanghai that is worth giving my life, if need be, to get it to him, he has no message for the man in London that I need bother about. He is either the Saviour of the whole world or He is no man's Saviour." Long years before the coming of the Christ, the prophet saw "of the increase of his government and of peace there shall be no end," for "the zeal of Jehovah of hosts will perform this."

"Thou art a gracious God and merciful."—Jonah.

In a few moments the whole story of Jonah, a missionary tale, can be read. While men have wondered about the whale, the true lesson of the book has been most often overlooked. Rebellious Jonah fought against carrying God's message to wicked Ninevah, but punishment made him ready to hear the call the second time and to go. The message delivered brought the wickedest city in the knowledge of Israel to repentance, and a merciful and loving God spared their destruction. But the prophecy, peevish and jealous, grieved, and through the gourd had from God his lesson that the love and pity of God for all his creatures is boundless. Our own time needs sadly the message of Jonah's story. While God has blessed us, all nations are included in His circle. The red man and the black and the yellow, are all "brothers under the skin," and our Father loves them. Have we the right to discriminate against them, to say: "Let them alone, for they are better off as they are?" to withhold from them blessings, material and spiritual. The little woman in India who went to a little village to tell the "old, old story" was asked to tell about Jesus again and again and again. Finally she was asked "How long ago did He live?" Over nineteen hundred years, came the answer. "Then, why have we not heard before?" was the pitiful cry which came from hearts stirred by the love of God, and from men and women from whom the Christian Church had so long withheld the good deeds. Why? Because so many, like Jonah, have failed to see that God's mercy and love and lovingkindness are for all repentant and obedient nations.

"And many nations shall go and say, 'Come, ye, and let us go up to the house of the God of Jacob."—Micah.

While Isaiah worked among the noble and the wealthy of Jerusalem, the prophet Micah was among the peasant farmers on the western slope of the Judean hills. He knew the viewpoint of the common people. He brought them a message which is one of the most perfect expressions of man's duty to man and to God ever expressed in human speech: "What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly and to love kindness and to walk humbly with thy God?" And is that not the missionary message which will bring many nations to the house of God? When men give justice, love to act kindly and approach God in humble worship, they will want all men to come with them. They will come to secure His instruction, and to learn to walk in His paths. And then will come the reign of justice and peace and love, the highest wish of the missionary heart.

"For then will I turn to the peoples a pure language, that they may call upon the name of Jehovah to serve Him with one consent."

So Zepheniah pictures the great day which shall come when all men shall know Jehovah. God knows all people. We cannot understand each other's language now, but the language of love is universal, even today. The natives of Africa could not understand Livingstone when he came to them, but they could know the meaning of his love for them, and quietly responded to it. The expressions of this language of love must be in service, and when such expression is the ideal of the nations of the world, there will be no fear of war nor injustice nor race hatred. Every earnest, unselfish missionary Christian may help to hasten the coming of this great day.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic: "How can we answer those who say that prohibition cannot prohibit?"—Hab. 2:1-14.

Thoughts on the Topic.

To correct any evil, God's guidance must first be sought. In His strength, wrong may be righted, and when He speaks, the man or woman desiring to secure better conditions will be wise to listen and obey. Verse 1.

God instructed to write His version very plainly, that it might be understood and its message spread abroad. He has given visions to men today of the evils of the liquor traffic and of the happier lives possible to those free from its control, and such men have a holy mission to perform for Him. Verse 2.

Impatience and unwillingness to wait for God's time has caused men to fail. There is a share in the great tasks of the kingdom, and faithful service and prayer will bring the larger vision. Verse 3.

"Righteous shall live by faith." The saloon caused the loss of both righteousness and faith. Verse 4.

Liquor develops the worst side of man's nature, breaks up homes, lowers the moral tone of the community, causes the downfall of nations. Citizens informed about its evils voted its legal death, and must still work to secure its actual death throughout the land. Passing the law gives means to the great end desired, a land free from the terrible demands of the liquor traffic. Verse 5.

The liquor traffic demands evil gains, not only money, but lives; not only health, but character; not only individuals, but families. Verse 9.

It was prophesied that the United States could not exist without the revenue of the liquor traffic. "Woe to him that buildeth a town with blood." Did not that happen when liquor license money paved our streets, improved our parks? The money loss is the loss most easily and immediately made good. Alcohol cost the United States directly and indirectly two billion dollars a year. This is being saved. Verse 12.

Sir John Foster Fraser, a distinguished British journalist and traveler, who is not himself a teetotaler, came to the conclusion after visiting the United States that "America is going to remain dry. I saw how healthy the people looked, how well the men, and particularly the women carried themselves, how bonny the children were. Since my return, I have been struck by the frequent sigh of poor wan women, wretched and evidently ill fed, and the poor children with skimpy hair showing the lack of the proper kinds of food." —Peloubet's.

Prohibition is a law. If it cannot prohibit, can other laws be effective? This law is violated, and so are other laws. The duty of the good citizen is to uphold the law, that gradually order and law enforcement may be the means of uplifting the whole nation. "The country has had three and a half years of prohibition, and today there is a job at good wages for every man, and savings banks reflect such prosperity as was never before known. Prophecy was that business would be prostrated if saloons were closed, and men would be out of employment. Prohibition is this country's greatest economic blessing."—The American Issue.

The enforcement of the eighteenth amendment is our task. This must be done for the sake of national safety, the happiness of the home and the individual's physical, economic and spiritual welfare.

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

Next Sunday (November 4th) will be "World's Temperance Sunday," with a temperance lesson for all classes using the International Uniform Sunday School Lessons, with the general theme, "The Progress of Prohibition at Home and Abroad." This Christian Endeavor topic gives the opportunity to study the subject, and to gain much helpful material for the following Sunday School lesson on a theme which must be of interest not only to Christians, but to law-abiding citizens. Announce the subject in advance by poster so that all may be thinking of the subject and come ready to give some good reasons, not only why prohibition can prohibit, but how it is prohibiting and stopping much of the evil today, in spite of the bootlegging going on. The discussion may be opened by six members, speaking briefly on the six "Daily Readings":

A Sharp Answer.—Job 13:4.
Liquor Defenders.—Jer. 9:1-8.
Drink is of the Flesh.—Gal. 5:19-21.
Drink Demoralizes.—Esther 1:1-12.
Why We Need Prohibition.—1 Tim. 1:9.
Satan Can be Bound.—Rev. 20:1-3.

Let one or more members tell what difference prohibition has made in your town or community. Have some of the common criticisms of the eighteenth amendment answered by a member or visitor well-informed on the subject.

Suggested Hymns.—"I Need Thee Every Hour," "Yield Not to Temptation," "More Like the Master," "My Jesus as Thou Wilt," "Help Somebody Today."

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

OCTOBER 28, 1923.

TOPIC: "Temperance in all Things.—1 Cor. 9:25.

(Temperance Meeting.)

"And every man that striveth in the games exerciseth self-control in all things. Now, they do it to receive a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible."

Every kind of game must have its rules, and the players must obey the rules if they would win. The Bible is our best Book of "rules of the game"—the game of living happy, successful lives. These rules are not given just that we might be made to obey rules to satisfy some one else. We have rules because they were found necessary for the good of each one of us. The "rules" which our lesson today gives us is the rule of self-control, or of being strong enough to control our appetites and our desires when they lead us in wrong directions to weaken our bodies and hurt our character. This is a lesson which must be learned early by remembering every day, for—

"Just a little every day,
That's the way!
Children learn to read and write
Bit by bit and mite by mite.
Never any one, I say,
Leaps to knowledge and its power;
Slowly, slowly, hour by hour,
That's the way!
Just a little every day."

In every Junior Endeavor meeting, let's try to find a rule that will help us to win in the "game of life."

WOMEN'S ACTIVITIES.

PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary.

If you have not observed "Children's Week" in your Church, it should be planned for some week in October or as soon after as possible. Each Church should decide upon the week best suited to its needs. "Children's Week" has become so important that all of the Protestant denominations, a large number of schools, and local community clubs observe it.

What "Children's Week" Is.

The farmer who would improve his stock and his crops reads diligently the best periodicals he can find in order that he may increase his possessions and assist in the great task of feeding the world. The poultry section and the columns on canning and preserving are read no less eagerly by his wife. Playing around them, or working in the garden or on the farm are the children, for whose physical, mental and spiritual welfare they are responsible. Children who must take their places as helpers or hinderers in the progress of the human race. "Children's Week" is a call to every parent to give at least this one brief period of the year to the consideration of the kind of influence the fathers and mothers in the home, the grown-ups in the Church and Sunday School, and the men and women in the community are exercising over the lives of the children. The Church and home are called into close co-operation for this extensive study. During this week the Sunday School teachers are asked to visit the homes of their pupils for the purpose of talking over with the parents the best methods of giving the religious instructions that will help their children to become leaders in the forward movement of the race."—Leaflet by Lillian S. Forbes.

The program for "Children's Week" should include a parents' meeting (perhaps Wednesday night, when the largest number could be present), a special sermon by the pastor, a program of little readings and songs by the children.

There should be two very important committees appointed—committee on publicity and arrangements, and committee on program. If a country Church, the committee on publicity should post placards announcing "Children's Week" and the date of the parents' meeting on the trees or fences leading to the Church. An article may be written for the country paper. The meetings should be announced soon enough to secure the co-operation of each member of the Church. This committee on arrangements should also see that the Church is in order and decorated with autumn flowers and leaves. The program committee should arrange with the teachers for the visits, arrange the music and secure speakers for the parents' meeting.

The slogan is: "The race moves forward on the feet of little children."

The pastor can help out by preaching a special sermon for the children or for the parents and having a special choir, made up of children only, to sing special songs; have small boys for ushers and collectors, and leave the entire service, except for the sermon, in the hands of the children.

Program for Parents' Meeting.

Prayer; song of praise; Scripture (Deut. 6:1-9); address (10-minute), "The Parent and the Child"; prayer for parents; address (10-minute), "Teaching Respect for God's House"; hymn, "I Love Thy Church, O God"; address (10-minute), "Good Citizens"; solo, "Somebody Did a Golden Deed"; three-minute talks from the floor, an open discussion on "What can we do to make the home, the Church and community a better place for our children?" song, "My Country, 'Tis of Thee"; benediction.

Something definite should be undertaken to improve some bad conditions in the local community.

The Parent and the Child.

In Deut. 6:1-9, God places the responsibility for the home training of children upon the father.

Such passages as these bear out that teaching—

"Correct thy son, and he will give thee rest."

"Yea, he will give delight unto thy soul."—Prov. 29:17.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and he will not depart from it."—Prov. 22:6.

"And ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, but nurture them in the chastening and admonition of the Lord."—Eph. 6:4.

Also read Prov. 4:1-4; Prov. 6:20-22.

There is likewise the child's duty to the parent. God lovingly links a beautiful promise to the command which He gave to the children concerning the duty of obedience to parents: "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which Jehovah thy God giveth thee."

There is one fundamental question that every parent must answer if this God-entrusted authority is to be realized. "Am I, in my life and character, in my teaching and conversation, in my attitude toward things that are vital—one whom my children can honor?"

Teaching Respect for God's House.

The speaker on this topic will find sufficient speaking points if he will visit the Church building on a day when there is no meeting in progress. Before he goes, let him read from God's Word the following:

"How amiable (lovely) are Thy tabernacles, O Jehovah of hosts!"—Ps. 84:1.

"Jehovah, I love the habitation of Thy house, and the place where Thy glory (honor) dwelleth."—Psa. 26:8.

"And He saith unto them, It is written, My house shall be called a house of prayer."—Matt.

"Enter into His gates with thanksgiving, and into His courts with praise."—Psa. 100:4.

At the parents' meeting, let him tell of the things he found, such as broken furniture or window-glass, cobwebs, torn Bibles and songbooks on benches, that would not speak to a child of the honor and beauty and glory of God. Let him suggest to the people how the name of God may be honored before their children by taking proper care of the house where the children gather to learn about God and His Son, Jesus Christ. Let him urge that a committee be appointed to make God's house a place where—

"* * * over its fresh, pure beauty
There broods a tender peace,
A hush, not of silence merely,
But of prayers that just have ceased."

For further talking points let him notice the bearing of the adult members of the Church as they come to the house of God, their attitude toward the teaching service, and the extent of response given by the adult members of the school to the superintendent's program.

One superintendent was waiting to conduct the closing service. An eager group of Junior boys were full of a lesson in which their bright young teacher had been leading them. They did not respond to him at once, and he reprimanded them sharply. In the corner by the stove in the men's class a three-cornered argument over some knotty theological problem was still progressing. The boys resented the reproof under the circumstances. Do such conditions tend to reverence and respect on the part of the younger pupils?

How Shivar Mineral Water Relieves Rheumatism

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate, and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism, it is, therefore, necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable conditions due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred, on the average, report no benefit.

Shivar Springs,
Box 16-B, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

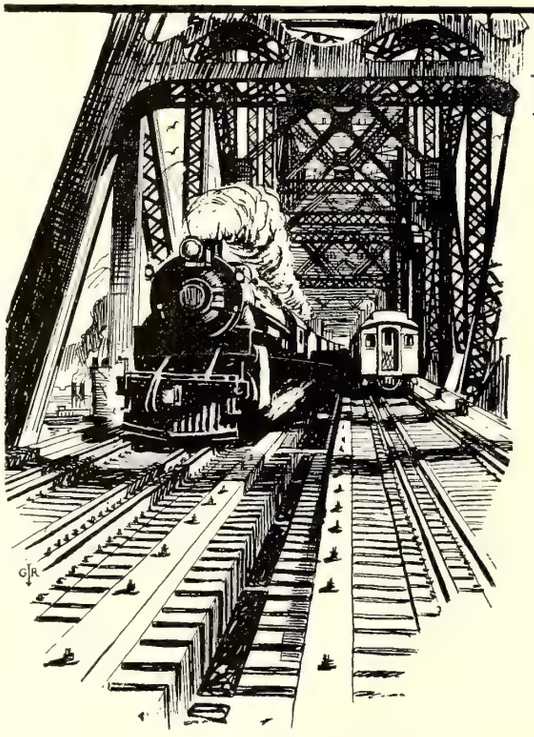
OUR TRUE WEALTH.

In a public park in Manchester, England, is a statue to the memory of Joseph Britherton, who represented that city in Parliament for many years. On it is this inscription: "My wealth consisteth not in the abundance of my riches, but in the fewness of my wants." Let us learn to make the most of the enjoyments we have, and not worry about those we have not. We have friends, and home, and health, and hope—let us enjoy them. We can, indeed, so educate our will-power that it will focus our thoughts on the bright side of things, will lead us to see good we have, until we shall attain such a spirit of happiness as will make us rich. The habit of making the best of things, of always looking on the bright side of things, is a fortune in itself. To make the least of our lacks, and to make the most of our present enjoyments, will go far toward giving us the riches of contentment—a good suggestion for ourselves and our people.—The Expositor.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM



New $3,500,000 bridge, crossing the Ohio River into Cincinnati, one of the northern gateways of the Southern Railway System.

Making new capital work for the South

The margin between the cost of producing transportation and the price received for it is so small that it requires the utmost efficiency of management, and the most carefully directed expenditure of new capital, to safeguard even a small return on the investment.

In no other large business enterprise is so great an amount of capital risked for so small a return as in railroad transportation.

The $285,000,000 of new money that has been put into the Southern Railway System in the past twenty years has been largely devoted to increasing capacity and promoting operating efficiency.

We receive many requests for the elimination of grade crossings, the construction of monumental passenger stations, and other non-revenue-producing improvements. The communities we serve naturally desire to have as much of this work done as can be safely financed, but they have recognized that their interests will best be served by expenditures which produce more and better transportation.

It is only because new capital has been expended on productive improvements that the Southern Railway System today is an efficient transportation machine and an asset to the South.

Southern Railway System deposits in Southern banks an average of $150,500 each banking hour.

PERPETUAL LOVE.

Christ's love is a perpetual love. "I have loved thee with an everlasting love." It is perpetual in that it goes backward through the eternities. This is a dateless love. When did it begin? "I have loved thee"—march out on that verb, travel over thousands and thousands and tens of thousands of years, and you will never get to the end of that verb. His love did not begin on the cross—that was the noonday splendor of eternal love. His love did not begin in a carpenter shop; that was the rough manifestation of a love that, like Himself, was without beginning and is without ending. His love did not begin in the manger; the manger was the note first heard on earth of a song of eternal love, that had been singing in ages beyond human thought.

It is perpetual, also, so far as the future is concerned. It is the only thing that does abide. We talk of the "everlasting hills"; but they are not everlasting. * * * Nothing on earth abides. * * * Nothing abides but God and His love. He is the same yesterday, today and forever. God abides, with a heart tenderer than a father's and a pity gentler than a mother's. He whispers, amid the trials of life, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love."—Robert S. MacArthur.

Motor Vehicles Increase.—

Registrations of motor vehicles in the United States have increased from 3,512,996 in 1916 to 13,002,427 on July 1, 1923. What about flying machines seven years from now!

Secretary Davis and Immigration.—

James J. Davis, Secretary of Labor, believes the United States should have the same right to investigate the character and qualities of prospective immigrants as it has to judge of the acceptability of members of the consular or diplomatic service assigned by foreign governments to the United States. He would admit as immigrants not merely men who are able to do a day's work, but men who have sufficient character and background to build up the very best kind of American citizenship.—Dearborn Independent.

Dealing With Offenders.—

There has never been any improvement on Christ's plan of dealing with offenders who are brethren. "If thy brother sin against thee, go show him his fault between him and thee alone; if he hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he hear thee not, take with thee one or two more, that at the mouth of two witnesses or three every word may be established. And if he refuse to hear them, tell it unto the Church; and if he refuse to hear the Church also, let him be unto thee as a Gentile and a publican." This rule of life holds good in denominational work as well as in the Churches. If it is believed that any man has blundered, the Christian way is to go to him face to face and tell him and seek to win him to the right course. The wrong way is to talk to everybody else about him.—Baptist Standard.

"Arise, Walk Through the Land."—

Carlyle once said, speaking of Englishmen, "The beginning and the end of what is the matter with us in these days is that we have forgotten God." Arise, walk up and down the land, in company (as did Enoch) with God, look at things through His eyes, be thoughtfully inquisitive, and sympathetically a student of contemporary human nature, and see how we stand religiously as a people. It is a big country, and meant for great things. God "hath not dealt so with any nation." This saying is generally and complacently regarded by American orators as a panegyric, but it may mean perdition. Unless we measure up to the divine thought, our condemnation will be greater. The call is not for old Abrams, but for modern Abrahams, who will carry out in all social and political and economic life not the oppressive policies of Egypt, but the law from the mount. Let us arise, then, walk, see, pray, worship and serve!—Zion's Herald.

The World's Best Seller.—

Dr. George William Carter, of the New York Bible Society, makes the observation that whilst a few books have reached a circulation as high as 200,000 in a single year, one book is reported to have run well toward a million copies in its first year. The Bible, however, today has reached 30,000,000 copies a year, or 80,000 copies a day. If all the millions of Bibles published since the discovery of printing were brought together today, there would not be enough to give each inhabitant of Asia a copy.

The Bible was the first book on the press, and has never been off. It can be bought at a cheaper price than any other book, and yet $50,000—the highest price ever paid for a single volume—was paid in 1912 for one of the first printed copies of the Bible. An ancient book, yet the best seller in a modern world; an Oriental book, yet the best seller in Occidental countries, the Bible seems to prove the rule of the survival of the fittest.—Central Christian Advocate.

Rum Running.—

Most fair-minded people will agree with Mr. Lloyd George in what he says about the British attempts to smuggle intoxicants into the United States of America when he states: "I hope we won't get excited over the seizure of liquor in New York harbor. It is not merely that America seems to be well within her rights, but I think we ought to extend a certain measure of sympathy to her in her difficulties. It is not a question whether we are or are not prohibitionists. But America is making a very bold experiment to deal with probably the greatest curse of modern civilization. She has tried many experiments, but they have been only comparative successes. She has made the decision with the courage that characterizes that great people to try the prohibition experiment, one that has never been made on this earth before. Let us give her a fair chance. Let us be quite frank." Probably most of us will heartily agree with all this.—Christian Advocate of Ireland.

A War Prayer.—

Mark Twain: "O Lord our God, help us to tear their soldiers to bloody shreds with our shells; help us to cover their smiling fields with the pale forms of their patriot dead; help us to drown the thunder of the guns with the wounded, writhing in pain; help us to lay waste their humble homes with a hurricane of fire; help us to wring the hearts of their unoffending widows with grief; help us to turn them out roofless, with their little children to wander unfriended through wastes of their desolated lands in rags and hunger and thirst, sport of the sun flames of summer and the icy winds of winter, broken in spirit, worn with travail, imploring Thee for the refuge of the grave and denied it— for our sakes who, adore Thee, Lord, blast their hopes, blight their lives, protract their bitter pilgrimage, make heavy their steps, water their way with their tears, stain the white snow with the blood of their wounded feet! We ask of one who is the spirit of love and who is the ever-faithful refuge and friend of all that are sore beset and seek His aid with humble and contrite hearts. Grant our prayer, O Lord, and Thine shall be the praise and honor and glory now and ever. Amen."

Mary Twain said of this prayer: "I have told the whole truth in that, and only the dead men can tell the whole truth in this world. It can be published after I am dead." And it was.—Our Dumb Animals.

Edison's Confession of Faith.—

He is reported to have told an Associated Press representative that he "was seeking after truth and had made much progress in regard to the great beyond and life after death." He said: "The soul after death takes flight, but in what form and manner is unknown."

"There is a great directing head of things and people—a Supreme Being, who looks after the destinies of the world. I have faith in a Supreme Being and all my thoughts are regarding the life after death—where the soul goes, what form it takes and its relation to those now living.

"I am convinced that the body is made up of entities, which are intelligent. When one cuts his finger, I believe it is the intelligence of these entities that heals the wound. When one is sick, it is the intelligence of these entities that brings convalescence.

"You know there are living cells in the body so tiny that the microscope cannot show them at all. The entity that gives life and motion to the human body is finer still and lies infinitely beyond the reach of our finest scientific instruments. When the entity deserts the body, the body is like a ship without a rudder—deserted, motionless and dead. It is mere clay, as all orthodox Christians believe. I still believe in the religion of our Lord and Master."

The unfathomable mysteries of life were appreciated by St. Paul, but their unfolding he likewise foresaw. "Now we see in a mirror, darkly, but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know fully even as also I was fully known."—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The Western North Carolina Christian Conference will meet at Ether, N. C., on November 6th to 8th. Ministers and delegates will please take due notice and be in place and on time.

October 30th the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference is announced to convene with the Holland, Va., Christian Church, Rev. Jas. H. Lightbourne, pastor. If you are going, give him notice as to how and when you will arrive.

The post-office address of Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, secretary of religious education, is changed from 1012 East Marshall Street to 2311 Hanover Avenue, Richmond, Va. Correspondents will note this change and address letters hereafter accordingly.

Here is a good chance to get a pastor. Rev. H. Vernon Winter, Miltonvale, Kans., is open to engagement as pastor. A field which would afford him good high school advantages for his young son would be very attractive to him. Bro. Winter is a fine man and a good preacher. If your Church needs him, write to him and tell just what you can do for him.

We wish our readers could see for themselves what a success Superintendent Johnston, of our orphanage, and his orphanage boys are in farming. He sent us a basket of the finest sweet potatoes we ever saw a few days ago. We have never seen larger potatoes anywhere. If everything done there is as well done as growing potatoes, the orphanage must succeed. Thanks!

God acts according to His own knowledge of the relationship and the affections which belong to it. We see this in the glorious deliverance of His beloved people at the Red Sea, in the manna from heaven, the water from the flinty rock, and in the pillar of His presence, which accompanied them in all their wanderings. He ever acts according to the purpose of His love and the value of the blood of Jesus.

When the day of judgment comes, no one will be able to escape judgment except it be by being under the blood of Christ. No rank, age or character can escape. The day of God's long suffering will be ended, and the hour of judgment will be come. One thing alone guided the angel of death on that dark and dreadful night, and that was, where there was no blood, there was no salvation. That will happen again with as many as spurn the blood of Christ.

The women of the North Carolina Conference recently held a most helpful Conference at Burlington. The program was pronounced very good, and the ingathering, financially, was most gratifying, although not up to the goal the ladies had set for themselves, but they are reaching toward it year by year, and by and by they will go ahead. Many will regret that Mrs. Carroll, the president of the Conference, felt constrained to decline a re-election this year. She has done a fine work in that office, and we regret to see her retire. Mrs. Vaughan, of Raleigh, is her successor, and while we regret to have Mrs. Carroll retire, we give to Mrs. Vaughan a real welcome to this sphere of great usefulness, and wish for her and the noble women whom she is to lead great success in the Lord's work. The work of our women is now far ahead of what the work of the whole Church was a few years ago. Indeed, the outlook for the Christian Church, though it has its hard places to pass through, is inspiring and hopeful, and the women are in the lead and doing a part for which we are grateful. May they come to lean more and more on God, and get more and more of Him in their spirit and work. Then will yet greater success be achieved.

That is a most interesting report from Mrs. Bryant, Norfolk, Va., showing the success of the woman's work in the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference. Be sure not merely to read it, but study it to get the facts as the report gives them. One item has arrested our attention, and we must call attention to it. When we entered the ministry, now fifty years ago, the whole Conference did not raise as much money for missionary purposes as the Willing Workers (the children) are now raising. It all shows what we can do if we try. Let us make extra efforts to do our part in the great work of giving the Gospel to the world. We can do wonders in any united effort on the part of the people, but when we divide and some will do only a small part for this purpose and nothing for this, then we must not expect to see much accomplished. Get together in Christ and then we shall be able to bring a harvest of good work.

The appointment of Rev. P. B. Fitzwater, D. D., as director of the evening classes of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, will establish a new program for this department of the institute work. A course of four years is to be offered, which will entitle the student to the institute diploma, men and women as teachers, pastors' assistants, while a shorter course of two years will qualify gospel singers, and other lines of Christian activity.

The popular Saturday evening class will feature the study of the English Bible by books and the consideration of the Sunday School lesson for following Sundays. The latter will be conducted in person by Dr. Fitzwater, who is already known in more than two and a half million homes in America through his weekly lesson article in the syndicate press.

Last year 1,437 students, representing 280 Chicago Churches, were enrolled in the evening classes.

By special arrangement with the employment bureau of the institute, it will be possible to assist students living outside of Chicago in securing work to enable them to support themselves while attending evening classes.

The Church at Gulf Mills, Pa., has recently celebrated its ninetieth anniversary. The event occurred on Sunday, September 30th. That day also marked the installation of the new pastor of the Church, the Rev. J. C. Barrett, who comes to this Church from Defiance College, Ohio, although he is a Southern boy and a Virginian. Among the speakers was the Rev. W. H. Hainer, of Irvington, N. J., who is president of the New Jersey Conference, and Rev. M. W. Butler, pastor of the Munice (Ind.) Christian Church. Bro. Butler was for several years pastor of this Church. He also is a Virginian. After a long pastorate three years ago, he must have found a visit there very pleasant indeed. In the afternoon the Rev. J. C. Barrett was installed as pastor, Rev. W. H. Hainer, D. D., giving the charge to the new pastor, and Rev. Guy C. Lamson, of Wayne, Pa., gave the charge to the congregation. Among the other ministers taking part, we may mention the Rev. W. C. Phillips, of the Baptist Church; Rev. A. J. Davies, pastor of the Conshohocken Baptist Church; Rev. Edwin L. Hyde, evangelist of the Methodist Church; Rev. Mr. Keller, of the Wesleyan Memorial Church; Rev. Mr. Miller, of the Holiness Christian Church; Rev. T. J. Armour and Rev. J. T. Fox, of the Conshohocken Methodist and Lutheran Churches, respectively. Mrs. K. Reiman, of Norristown, Pa., made a few remarks; Mrs. A. J. Supplee, of the Conshohocken Christian Church, read the history of the Church. The singing was pronounced fine. It was under the leadership of Bro. Thomas Pearson. Several Beautiful solos were rendered by Prof. Maxwell R. Noah, of Madisonville, Pa. He was choirmaster of the Christian Church choir at Madisonville during the pastorate of Mr. Barrett at that place some years ago. He came all the way from Madisonville to welcome his old pastor back to the State of Pennsylvania. The occasion was one of unusual interest, and the day will be long remembered as a red-letter day for the Gulf Mills Christian Church.

FROM DR. D. A. LONG.

DEAR DR. BARRETT:

I hand you a letter and some clippings in regard to the Church at Gulph Mill, Pa. The protracted meeting at this place will close tonight. Bro. J. Fuller Johnson has preached for us every night since last Monday. The pastor of the Episcopal, Baptist and Methodist Churches have all taken some part in the services. Good congregations. Bro. Johnson preaches with great earnestness and power for one so young in the ministry.

Wagons and carts pour into this place daily, loaded with cotton. Prices range over 27 cents, and the farmers are smiling and happy. North Carolina is blessed with a variety of crops and other good things—corn, cotton, tobacco, apples and peaches; fish, oysters, sweet potatoes, and all garden vegetables in the eastern part of the State. No wonder she is one of the financially prosperous States.

D. A. LONG.

SPRING HILL MEETING.

The Spring Hill meeting for many years has begun on the second Sunday in August. This year, Rev. B. J. Earp, of Newport News, came on Saturay and preached through the meeting, which closed on Friday. Bro. Earp is a consecrated worker, loves the ministry and preaches a good, practical, common-sense sermon. He has special tact in interesting the children of the community. We never have overflow congregations at this old mother Church. She has sent out so many fine workers to newer and larger fields that she is left small herself. She is like a good old father and mother who have raised a large family of boys and girls that have gone out into the world to success, and now they are left with two or three children nearby, weakened in numbers at home, but strong in influence abroad.

The meeting was enjoyed by the congregation. There were six professions—five joined at Spring Hill, and one at Waverly. These were out of the Sunday School. Deacon J. T. White is the superintendent, and loves the school, and was glad to see the boys and girls come into the Church. This old Church has a faithful set of officers and teachers, who are loyal to the Christian Church.

JAMES L. FOSTER.

CENTERVILLE MEETING.

The meetings at Centerville are generally held following the first Sunday in August. This year the manner of meeting was changed from an all-day meeting to night services only. Then, at the hour for the beginning of the meeting or at close of the first service, a majority voted to change from that date to the fourth Sunday in September.

The meeting began at 11 A. M. on the fourth Sunday in September, the pastor preaching. Rev. B. F. Black, of Norfolk, Va., came Monday night and preached through the meeting.

This was the first time the pastor or congregation had heard Bro. Black, and we expected to hear some loud preaching, but his messages were as calm, simple and earnest, yet always leading to his central truth. In his sermons, at times, he gave clear visions of deep, strong Gospel truth. He was a splendid entertainer in the home. Our audiences were small, being a night meeting, and the M. E. Church, two miles away, at Disputanta, held meetings the same week.

There was one profession, and this Sunday School boy joined the Church. There are some five hopeful boys and girls in Centerville Church and community. Deacon Geo. W. Bain is the most punctual superintendent at his work I have ever known in my forty-one years of pastoral work. This is a small Church, but faithful and loyal. May God bless the results of these meetings.

JAMES L. FOSTER.

ELON NOTES.

At a mass-meeting of the citizens of Elon College last night, in the Masonic Hall, a community Church program was unanimously adopted. The need of a community Church program, such as adopted last night, has long been in evidence here, and the steps taken thus far in this direction are calculated to lead to a program of co-operation that will fill this need.

Some weeks ago this idea was definitely begun at a mass-meeting of the citizens assembled in the graded school auditorium when a committee was appointed to draft working resolutions for such a program. This committee consisted of Dr. J. O. Atkinson, representing the Christian Church; President W. A. Harper, of the college; J. J. Lambeth, Mayor of the town; O. I. Umstead, bank cashier; J. A. Harnady, superintendent of the graded schools; R. S. Rainey, Boy Scout-master, and Charles D. Johnston, superintendent of the orphanage, which committee submitted the following report at the meeting last night:

"Whereas, we deem the Christian Church broad enough in its policy and principles to include all followers of Christ, and since there is already a Christian Church organized and functioning at Elon College; be it resolved:

"First, That the Elon Christian Church should undertake to serve the entire community, and so be a community Church.

"Second, That members of other Churches residing in the community be invited to become associate members of the Elon College Christian Church while residing with us, provided such associate membership shall in no wise affect their membership in the Church to which they may already belong.

"Third, That associate members shall have all the rights and privileges of fellowship and activities, including the power to vote on all community Church matters, provided such voting power shall not be allowed to interfere with the denominational relationship of any member of the community Church, and of committee membership accorded to regularly constituted members of the Church.

"Fourth, That the Elon College Christian Church, in seeking to serve the community, in addition to its regularly constituted officers, have the following committees: (1) community improvement, (2) health and sanitation, (3) social activities.

"Fifth, That membership on these committees, or other committees that said Church may create, is not to be confined necessarily to active or associate members.

"Sixth, That immediate steps be taken to erect a Church on the lot already donated for that purpose, to be used as a center of community worship of all activities looking to the upbuilding of the community and extending the kingdom of our Lord."

After speeches by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, President Harper, and others, on a community Church program, the report was adopted.

ANONYMOUS DOVER WRITER IS REPRIMANDED BY PEOPLE'S CHURCH.

EDITOR OF THE CHRISTIAN SUN:

In a special meeting, called in response to the request of members of the board of deacons of People's Christian Church, of Dover, Del., to consider the unwarranted, and un-Christian, as well as misleading article appearing in the October 4th issue of THE SUN, said article being under the caption, "Another Protest From Dover," and signed "A Member of People's Church," the following reaction was ordered to be sent to you, the same to be published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, in defense of truth and justice:

We, the members of the board of deacons and the Sunday School superintendent of People's Christian Church, sincerely believe that the spirit and purpose of question should not go unchallenged, written as it was by one who was so unethical as to sign, "A Member of People's Church," instead of signing his own name.

Any thoughtful person reading the article would readily detect the spirit of antagonism back of it, and it is extremely unfortunate and deeply to be regretted that such correspondence, from either a disgruntled and inharmonious member, or from an enemy outside the Church, should at any time be allowed to be printed in a Church paper. Even if the article was written by an inharmonious member, it represents the attitude of but one mind, whereas there are more than five hundred other members of the Church who would feel deeply incensed by the discrediting and untrue insinuations of the article.

We, as members of the board of deacons, and the Sunday School superintendent, most emphatically repudiate the malicious insinuations made in the article in question.

The large number of new members that have been received into the Church under Dr. Helfenstein's pastorate, doubling the membership and, moreover, proportionately increasing the strength of the Church spiritually and financially, number many of the best and most substantial citizens of the entire community, and their religious experience was just as vital and just as genuine as that of any of us who constituted the original membership of the Church.

The writer of the article states that he hears much about "educating people into the kingdom." But he has never heard such in People's Church, though such he implies. For, though the pastor and the officials of the Church believe wholeheartedly in the modern program of religious education, still the one emphasis from the pulpit and in the Sunday School is on personal religious experience.

The writer, who merely signed his name "A Member of People's Church," but who may have been an enemy of our Church from outside, as there is a great deal of jealousy in the community because of the marvelous progress People's Church is making—states that "he wonders what the future Church will be, with the modern and liberal ideas that are being injected into it," and he furthermore expresses his fear that the Church may slip from its moorings.

It is our sincere conviction that, according to the spirit expressed in the article, in case the writer were "a member of People's Church," or of any other Church, and if all the members should take his attitude, the Church would have no moorings and would have absolutely no strength, for the strength of any Church depends upon co-operation, and not upon criticism.

The dream the writer of the article refers to having had, is in itself an index to the character of one who would write discreditingly of his Church in an anonymous manner, the interpretation of his dream being his own attitude.

Sincerely yours in the Master's work,

WHERE THE N. C. CHRISTIAN CHURCHES SEND THEIR CONFERENCE MONEY.

Inquiry comes to us as to where the North Carolina Christian Churches are to send their Conference money. The Churches of each Conference will send their money to the treasurer of their Conference. To illustrate: The Churches composing the Eastern North Carolina Conference will send their Conference money up to the treasurer of that Conference, which meets this year with the Church at New Hope, October 23d, and so with each Conference, the money should be sent to the treasurer of that Conference. The reports and moneys are to be sent to the Conference in which the Church is located. Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, secretary of the old North Carolina Conference, gave explicit instructions as to this matter in THE SUN of October 4th. (See page 6, beginning at bottom of middle column.) Read your Church paper, brethren, and find what is to be done. The Conference money in each case goes up with the report to Conference.—EDITOR.

A GREAT QUESTION FOR CHRISTIANS.

In one of our hymns we read—

"Holy Spirit, faithful Guide,
Ever near the Christian's side."

The question has been raised as to how He guides us, and in what. In John 16:13, we read: "Howbeit when He, the Spirit of truth is come, He will guide you into all truth: for He shall not speak of Himself; but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak: and He will shew you things to come."

There are two outstanding facts in the work of the Holy Spirit, viz: (1) He is a faithful guide, and to that end His place is by the Christian's side; (2) His chief work is to guide the believer into all truth—that is, all truth pertaining to the divine life.

The Holy Spirit is called in the Greek Parakletos, and Parakletos means one who is sent along with another to give help or assistance when needed. One authority says: "Parakletos means one who is called to go alongside of another to give help in any time of need." The poet must have known of this meaning when He wrote that line "Ever near the Christian's side." And what is the Holy Spirit ever near the Christian's side for? To give help to him in need, and at any time. What does the Christian generally need? Oh, he needs to be guided into all truth which may pertain to his life and service.

But what does the Spirit influence in guiding people into all truth? Does He guide the intellect, the will, or the emotions? Most certainly, He guides all—the whole man—provided He has been given the right of way into the life of the individual to be guided. The Holy Spirit does not operate on just one part of the man. Where the way has been truly and fully prepared for His coming, He sweeps into the life, dominating the intellect, the will and the emotions, so bringing the whole man into subjection to the mind of Christ. In doing this, He illuminates the man, intellect, will and the emotions, giving them all over to the service of God. This is necessarily true. How could the Holy Spirit guide a man if his intellect were in subjection, while the will and the emotions were not in submission to His leadership? Of necessity, a man cannot get the guidance of the Holy Spirit till the whole man has yielded to the influence of the Spirit. When a man has his intellect fighting his will, or the will fighting the emotions, or the emotions fighting the intellect, there can be nothing but confusion, and the intellect is liable to go astray or the will may plunge into the depths of confusion, or the emotions may "put the fat in the fire" by overdoing. Under such conditions there can be no safe guidance. But let us change the scene a bit. Let us suppose that the whole man—the intellect, the will and the emotions—have all been brought into submission to God, and they have been given to the Spirit for direction and wisdom in the service to be rendered, to the extent that the submission of the individual is complete—to that extent will the Spirit's leadership be complete.

Many object to this position on the ground that we cannot know when the Spirit is fully in charge of the whole man. That position is maintained only by those who have not the Spirit's guidance. He judges everything by himself, unaided by the Spirit, and so he cannot help going astray. A man with open eyes, out in the light, has no trouble to discover the presence of the light when it had been given. So we think the individual, when he is under the Spirit's control, intellect, will and emotion, cannot fail to know of the fact. The absence of such a condition will keep one in the dark, not knowing that he knows any spiritual factor as influencing his life at all.

The late Dr. Arthur T. Pierson, one of the keenest minds of his day and a well-informed man, is quoted as having said:

"The Holy Spirit quickens the utterance; He unlooses the tongue, and we speak with a tongue of fire. Our speech is 'not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power.' Here is the secret of power in service. The Lord bade the disciples tarry 'until they were endued with power from on high,' and they were to be 'witnesses' unto Him. This is the grandest result of being filled with the Holy Ghost—we are qualified to be His witnesses. The secret of power in winning souls is not intellect, learning, culture, human eloquence—it is simply and solely the Holy Spirit. A supernatural Gospel must be accompanied with a supernatural energy, and then it overcomes the natural heart. All our preaching and teaching, even though it be of the truth of God, is but as sounding brass till God's Spirit puts a divine soul into the utterance. Then we may speak with an ungrammatical, uncultured tongue; but the power of God will go with it."

That is what is called the enduement of the Spirit, and when that is complete, such things will be done as to astound men and women who know nothing of the blessing of full submission to God. They may have great intellects, but without the Spirit of God to guide, all is vain so far as divine guidance is concerned.

DEATH OF MISS CHRISTINE PENROD.

And is Miss Penrod dead? She is, so the papers announce. We did not know of the sad event till today—October 17, 1923, and after she had been dead for almost ten months. We are grieved that the noble soul is no more among mortals, where for more than thirty years she had been so highly useful. Indeed, not only had she been highly useful for the last thirty years, but through the first twenty-eight years of her life she was also useful, even though the greater portion of her early life was spent in preparation for her later life-work. She has spent the last thirty years of her life in missionary work in Japan, and what years they were! How we should like to read a well-written biography of this noble soul! The following sketch was written by one who had known her well for many years, and appeared only in September of this year in the Christian Missionary. It is well worth a careful reading. Her life was so full of energy, thought and service that it seems that not a bit of it should be lost. Indeed, it cannot be lost, for she poured out her life upon the lives of other people, till the impact of her life upon others has left a lasting impression. We talk of laying up our treasures in heaven; we dare say she laid up little in this world's goods, but she has a storehouse full of the better things of the earthly life. And what is better than to leave behind us a streak of light in a darkened land?

The following sketch of her life was read at her burial in Japan on December 5, 1922. We can scarcely restrain the fingers from the typewriter, but we must let Dr. Woodworth tell the beautiful story of her life so much better than we can that it would seem too bad to spoil what he so well says by that which must fall so far below the story he tells of her life:

From Labor to Reward.

Miss Christine Penrod was born at Crawfordsville, Ind., January 4, 1864, was educated at Union Christian College, Merom, Ind., and came to Japan as a missionary in 1892, thus, on October 15th of this year, she completed thirty years of service in Japan.

All that have known her agree that she was a remarkable woman, doing a work which few women have the capacity to do. It may be well, therefore, at this time to recount some of the qualities that have brought her into such prominence in Japan.

I may name among these in the first place the strong body she possessed as a basis of what she was able to accomplish. Few men have the physical strength and endurance that she possessed. Some of her volunteer helpers in rescue work supposed that while they were engaged in assisting her they would have certain hours for service, certain hours for Bible study and fixed hours for sleep. But in a large family with babies and rescued women of all ages, somebody is sick all the time and needing constant care. At any time some crazed woman may begin to scream, or try to run away. It is not surprising then that some who came to help Miss Penrod found their dreams of delightful rescue work rudely shattered. But Miss Penrod seems rather to have enjoyed the hardness of the work, and during all the years of her service almost defied the laws of nature that others carefully observe.

Another quality apparent in her work was that of thoroughness. As a teacher in the common schools in America, or as teacher in the Sunday School, no hours were too long and no pains too great to make her work a success. In her student days she once engaged to clean a college building, and used twenty-five dollars worth of soap at a time when beefsteak was selling for ten cents a pound. The college treasurer was aghast, but he paid it. But probably that building was never so clean before or after as it was at that time. After she came to Japan, again and again she displayed the same quality. One time at Sendai she undertook to clean the preaching place in preparation for Christmas. After cleaning everything in sight, she took up the mats and scrubbed underneath, but the rusuban, who was absent at the time, was seriously offended, taking such efforts at cleansing as a reflection on her. In the reform work she did among the women, she was not satisfied unless she could bring them up to the high standard of Christian belief and character which she herself held.

One may easily suppose that she was a woman of strong will, underterred by any obstacles where duty called. Those who are familiar with Jisikan doings may remember an occasion when certain governmental delays made it impossible to secure coolies for the burial of a baby because of the lateness of the hour and because the rain was falling. But at last she did succeed in getting a kurumaya to go with her. So she set off at night in the kuruma, carrying the little coffin in her lap, but at one place had to get out and assist the kurumaya to ascend one of the slippery Ushigome hills. They had difficulty in finding the grave, for the attendants were gone. So she and the Kurumaya completed the burial, filled the grave and returned at midnight triumphant.

All who have been in contact with Miss Penrod have been impressed with her sympathy and love. They may have disagreed with her and opposed her methods, but no one ever doubted the earnestness of her heart or the sincerity and purity of her motives. These qualities were especially manifest in her dealings with outcast women. Who but she would think of sitting up all night with one of the new women, pleading and praying that the woman might give up her purpose to run away? No seeker for pearls, gold, or hid treasure could be more zealous and indefatigable in the quest than she was to save these women to the Lord whom she loved.

In her consecration, too, Miss Penrod was unsurpassed. She never spared herself in waiting on the sick through the day or all through the night. Nor was she less sparing of her pocketbook than she was of her time and strength. Always the needs of others had the first claim over herself. If it had not been for the kind offices of others, at times she could not have made a presentable appearance in public. We have heard how one of her very dear friends once gave her a hundred yen to buy necessary clothing for herself. But all the money, even to the last penny, was spent in relieving the needs of those in her family which she considered greater than her own. Those who desired to help her learned by experience that the only way to make sure that their presents were used as they desired them was to give them in such shape that they could not be passed on. Naturally she could not save money, but she found fulfilled in herself the great promise, "My God shall supply all your needs according to His riches in glory by Jesus Christ." Having nothing, she possessed all things. With no prospect of paying a cent for the services, she received in her last illness, no millionaire could have been served more devotedly, lovingly, tenderly than she. The Master may say truly to her, "I was an hungered and you gave me meat; I was thirsty and you gave me drink; I was a stranger and you took me in; naked, and you clothed me; sick, and you visited me; in prison, and you came unto me."

Miss Penrod has met with some criticism, but the cause of the criticism was that she was absolutely conscientious. She doubtless made mistakes in judgment, for every one does. But as the needle points to the pole, her heart and aspirations pointed to the one purpose to be faithful to the leading, as she saw it, of the Lord Jesus Christ. Originally she came to Japan as a missionary under the American Christian Convention; but when she came into touch with the holiness movement, which she unreservedly endorsed, she did not find the fellowship in her own mission that she desired, and she was received into the Japan Evangelistic Band. In her rescue work, even in that mission, she felt hampered in carrying out her plans, and she did not hesitate to start a new venture, which, to put it on its feet, ought, from a human standpoint, to have required ten more years of her useful life. But in this, too, with all love to those who differed from her, she followed unswervingly the guidance of her conscience.

As one thinks of her career, it is plain that she was an extremist, an extremism which in her was not a discredit, but an honor, and a glory. She accepted the Wesleyan view of holiness, and it was to her not only an inspiration, but a passion. It colored all she thought and did. Anything which diminished the greatness of her Lord as Lord of lords and King of kings was held in strong abhorrence. One of her Jiaikan difficulties grew out of the fact that some under whose direction she labored did not hold with her to the deity of our Lord.

However that may be, we all feel that a great life has come to an early end at a time when we might have expected its greatest fruitage. In her lifetime she sought the hardest place, saving others, but unable to save herself. Her work on earth is in a sense done, but, like Abel of old, being dead, she still speaks. So her voice, though silent in death, will continue to be heard through those whose life torch has been lighted by the torch of her faith and hope and consecration, so that it may be that the work she began may be carried on with greater success and zeal because of the inspiration of her life.

After all, shall we not say that hers was a successful life? The Lord used her here for His glory, but in the glory land it is said: "And His servants shall serve Him." So we believe she has been called to higher and more glorious service of the Lord. A. D. WOODWORTH.

A NEW KIND OF REVIVAL PROPOSED.

Can it be realized? Possibly, but it is not likely. Such efforts in the past have not been crowned with success, so far as we know, and we do not hardly expect it to be crowned with success in the future.

The Religious Herald tells us of the effort, and then offers a word of sensible comment on it. It says:

"The Boston Herald of September 26th advertises a 'Great King's chapel revival. Many denominations to aid. Preachers of world-wide fame, writers, college heads to occupy pulpit daily from October to May.' If this is to be a revival it will be the first of its kind. A revival may be served by several preachers, but they must be all of one mind if not all of one denomination. They must all be evangelical. If this novel method succeeds and souls are converted, then the New Testament is not the sufficient and only guide to the kingdom of God."

Human greatness may have its place in revival meetings, but we are quite sure it must be willing to take a back seat and make very little show of itself. Human greatness is not the essential power of a genuine revival.

Brethren, if we are to have a real revival season among us, we must get in the right way—it must come from heaven as God's gift in answer to prayer and as the crown of real humility.

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK.

We are in a position to use the following to a great advantage: Used school books, and any other kind for our library we are just starting here. We can use winter clothing, etc. We wish to thank our kind people for the liberal offerings they have made to the mountain work. All donations should be directed to Miss Morey or Rev. M. T. Sorrell, Fancy Gap, Va. (via Mt. Airy), as they have charge of the work.

ALABAMA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The Alabama Christian Conference met with the Church at Cragford, Ala., Tuesday, October 16, 1923, and was called to order by Rev. G. D. Hunt, president. After devotional services, ministers and delegates were enrolled, and the Conference was organized by the election of Rev. C. M. Carter, president; Rev. E. M. Carter, secretary, and J. W. Payne, treasurer. The president proceeded to fill vacancies on committees and to appoint other committees. The executive committee made its report, which was adopted.

The annual address was delivered by Rev. J. H. Hughes. After announcements by the president, the Conference adjourned for dinner.

The Conference reassembled, and after devotional services resumed business as outlined by the program. Rev. J. D. Hunt read the report of the committee on moral reform, which, after discussion, was adopted. The report on superannuation was read by Rev. C. M. Carter, chairman. The report was adopted. Rev. G. H. Veazey made the report of the committee on foreign missions. This report, after some discussion, was adopted. After the transaction of miscellaneous business, Conference adjourned.

At 7:30 P. M., Church services were held; Rev. J. D. Dollar was the principal speaker. It was a season of worship.

The second day, morning devotional services were conducted by Rev. J. W. Elder. The roll was called, and minutes of the first day's sessions were read and approved. After announcements, the report of the Sunday School board was read by J. W. Payne, chairman, and adopted. Then followed the report of the home mission board, read by the chairman. The discussion was led by Rev. J. D. Dollar. Different fields of operation were discussed, special stress being laid upon the work in Northern Alabama. The discussion was not without fruit, many enthusiastic speeches and a contribution of more than $400.00 was made; but, best of all, the power of the Holy Spirit was in the congregation.

The time appointed for preaching having arrived, the sermon was preached by Rev. H. W. Elder, who took for his subject, "Seeing Jesus." The sermon was a most fitting close for the morning session. Conference adjourned for dinner.

The afternoon devotional services were led by Rev. C. M. Dollar, the oldest minister of the Conference present.

The report of the committee on Christian Endeavor was read by Rev. J. H. Hughes. The discussion of the report was led by the chairman and Miss Pattie Coghill. A paper proposed by Miss Lucy M. Eldredge was read. The report was adopted. It was also decided to appoint a committee to act with a like committee from the Georgia and Alabama Conference in connection with the Board of Religious Education to arrange for a Chautauqua, to be held at Bethlehem College next year. The report on Christian education was read by Rev. E. M. Carter, chairman, who led in the discussion. After much emphasis laid on parts of the report, it was adopted. Then followed the report on religious literature, by Rev. C. M. Carter. A short address by P. J. Kernodle, managing editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, the appeal in behalf of that paper having been made the evening before by Bro. C. H. Mitchell. The report was adopted.

The woman's missionary board reported, through its secretary, that they would request more time at the next Conference. The report of the board will appear in the Conference minutes.

"Our Orphans' Home" was presented by Chas. D. Johnston, superintendent, in an earnest appeal. Miscellaneous business transacted. Members of mission board and delegates to the Southern Christian Convention elected. Adjourned.

ELON LETTER.

As Dr. Barrett has well said, Elon is a busy place these days. Every hour or so a material man or salesman of some article drops in to see if he cannot help us out in our building program. Everybody seems to know about our plans. I suppose this is attributable to the big sign the Joe W. Stout & Co. have erected on the campus, facing the railroad, and which reads as follows:

"Joe W. Stout & Co., General Contractors,
Now Building
A Bigger, Better
Elon College."

I cannot say that I am always glad to see these knights of the grip come, but I try to greet them cordially, treat them courteously, and hear them patiently. Some are real salesmen, and know how to adapt their method of approach to the local situation. Others have a little speech which they deliver to all and the earmarks are plainly evident. Salesmanship is a real profession, and I have learned a lot from these ardent devotees of the several lines which will stand me in good stead on many an occasion. They could teach college professors and preachers a lot about getting their ideas sold.

I am, however, always glad when our sacrificing friends and supporters come to see us. They come because they love us. Recently we have been fortunate in having a distinguished train of such men call to see the greater, better Elon we are trying to provide. Col. J. E. West, Virginia's honored Lieutenant-Governor; Mr. P. J. Carlton and his brother Herbert, Dr. W. W. Staley, Dr. and Mrs. W. S. Long, Col. Junius H. Harden, and Mr. J. J. Blair. These friends made us happy by their presence and their words of approval and encouragement respecting our plans and programs. Col. West and the Carlton brothers were insistent that a fence be built around the campus, and the campus grounds beautified with walks, driveways and shrubbery. Dr. Staley, just recovering from his serious illness, made us happy by his words of commendation and his perennial flow of jokes. Mr. J. J. Blair, as the North Carolina State inspector of school buildings, gave official sanction and approval to our plans. His good words and kindly expressions we shall not forget.

While Dr. and Mrs. Long and Col. Harden were here, a picture was made of the remaining four members of the location committee and of Uncle Wellons, who made the first prayer on the present site under the stately gum tree in front of the east dormitory. The members of the location committee were Dr. W. S. Long, Colonel Junius H. Harden, Dr. J. Pressley Barrett, Dr. G. S. Watson, and Mr. F. O. Moring. Brother Moring has passed to his reward. The other brethren were all present when the picture was made, and they, with Uncle Wellons, made a very imposing picture. Shortly, we hope to print this picture in THE SUN.

The friends of the college are always welcome. It does us good to greet them and to hear their gracious and encouraging words of commendation and optimism. W. A. HARPER.

THE RURAL CHURCH OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

BY S. L. BEOUGHER.

Part II.

The rural pastor has not always looked upon himself, nor has he been looked upon, as a community leader; but if the Church is to realize its function as a community-building institution, the country clergyman must be a community leader. We need a permanent country pastorate. There should be developed a country clergy as a professional group that tends to specialize itself and that tends to induce other men to make it their life-work. The idea of the country pastorate as a distinct vocation should be promulgated among young men. Then it will follow almost inevitably that special preparation will be necessary; and this preparation in general should consist in the apprehension of the rural problem and of the relation of the Church to that problem. It is argued that the training for a country clergyman in its fundamental aspects should not differ from that of the clergyman who is to work in the city—partly because the problems of human life are the same everywhere, and partly because it is impossible to predict where a man will find his best opportunity. But let us remember that we have before us the great problem of country life as a specific question. Many agencies are at work trying to solve this problem; shall the Church meet its peculiar obligation? If the Church desires to keep its place in the country-life movement, it must train its preachers for its special work. At the present time a number of theological seminaries are offering courses on the country Church and sociology, and some have established chairs of rural sociology. The question arises, therefore, whether in the special training of the country clergyman the agricultural colleges may not help. The student would be expected to take courses in rural sociology, agricultural economics, rural education and rural government.

The country pastor thinks he is "looked down on" by the city pastor, but it is not true. Look down on a man who has a chance to breathe deep, to think without haste, to look far, to shepherd God's flocks on the hills? This is the man to look up to, and even envy. All of God's out-of-doors is his to revel in. Men used to wonder why Charles Kingsley could be content with the little country parish of Eversley, made up of three small hamlets, peculiar for nothing, as he said, "but want of houses and abundance of peat bogs," a most unpromising and unattractive field of labor. How could a man be content with such a place when London, for example, would gladly welcome him? But he often said, "I love home and green fields more and more, and never lust after Babylon or the continent." Nor must it be forgotten that distinction and fame came to this Eversley rural minister. He was not "lost in the country." It was not long before a path was worn to his door, and hither came men and women from all parts of the world. But his fidelity to this opportunity, by his refusal to leave the country which he loved and the needy folks whom he loved more, by his writings in the interest of the oppressed and down-trodden, by his appeals for justice for men everywhere, he made as large a contribution to the progress of the kingdom of God in the nineteenth century as any man who preached in any city pulpit in the same period of time.

"The field is the world," said Jesus. There is no east, no west, no home field, no foreign field, no country Church, no city Church to that minister, who, like his Master, carries the world on his heart. It was said not long ago that the time would come when it would be as great an honor to be a successful country minister as a city minister." The reply was "that the time was already here, and had been here ever since Charles Kingsley put Eversley upon the map of the world."

Let nothing said herein be construed as unfriendly criticism of the man who is faithfully bearing the heaviest, loneliest burdens of the Church—the country minister—for he deserves praise, patience and appreciation. But he needs to enlarge his own capacity for effective service by seeing broader visions and discovering larger ideals of efficiency. He should not always be blamed for his failures. Too often he is called to his Church with the cheerful hope that he will accomplish the impossible, in spite of inherited difficulties of long standing. And if he fails to crowd the Church, fill the contribution box and make people love each other who are determined not to, then he may be pronounced unsuccessful and is allowed to move on in disappointment. Rather, let him stay at his task five years instead of one and he will compel success. The country Churches must not expect much stronger leaders as long-time pastors, until they pay living salaries, which will make it possible for the strongest men to rear cultured families in the country parishes. Continuity of leadership of the right sort will go far to solve the rural problem.

The conditions in the urban Church, in contract to those of the rural Church, are very striking. The city during the last century has had phenomenal growth in prosperity and population. The old frame buildings of a generation ago have been replaced by fine structures adapted to present needs and furnished with the best up-to-date equipment. The rural communities, during the same period, were being deprived of their best families, and the remnant that remained were so heavily burdened with current expense budgets that new buildings seemed impossible. When we come to know conditions and causes, such as now confront at least seventy-five per cent of our rural leaders, we are no longer surprised. The new vision of man as related to the larger appeal has called forth a new type of Church architecture. We have come to believe in the whole man—both the temple and the tenant. We now seek not merely to save souls, but to save the total man, since as Hugh Price Hughes once declared, "All the souls he knew anything about possessed physical bodies and lived on earth among men." The Church of half a century ago did not think to provide for physical and social beings, and in the building there was no place for the boy and girl. But in the twentieth century, utility is written large in religion and education, as well as in business. The Church edifice of today should be beautiful and artistic, but it must be practical and able to meet the test of utility. The country Church building, as it now exists in many communities, is one of the chief barriers to success. While it is true that the demand for able leadership is imperative, it is equally important that they have adequate buildings through which to do the work. It must be a place in which to work and worship; a community center from which shall radiate an atmosphere of reverence and righteousness, and a spirit of unselfish service for others. The salvation of our young people is conditioned on the human side by the manner in which we provide a place for them in our building and speak to them in our message. The modern Church needs not only an audience room and a Sunday School room, but committee rooms, social rooms, a boys' club room, reading-room, gymnasium, kitchen and dining-room. The rural Church must be more completely than now a Christian social center. This means able leadership, better salaries, better business methods and better buildings. Community confidence will be restored in the rural Church when modern Christianity ministers to the needs of all men and all the man.

FROM REV. B. J. EARP.

DEAR BRO. BARRETT:

I just feel so happy in the service of my Master that I want to tell you and THE SUN readers about it. Vacation is over. We had a mighty good one. We spent one week of it over at Spring Hill with Bro. J. L. Foster in a good revival. Since then we have been with Bro. W. B. Fuller three weeks in his field. We enjoyed it very much. The people were nice to us, and God blessed our efforts together. I am back at Newport News now, with revival work for the year over, and all organizations of the Church working just fine. I am so happy that I have the opportunity of serving a people who want to do something for Christ and the Church.

An unusual birthday celebration took place last night (October 11th) in our field of service here. A surprise party was given in honor of our oldest member, Mrs. Susiana Griggs, who is now ninety-two years old. Perhaps the most interesting feature of the evening was the placing of a large cake on a table beside the easy chair of Sister Griggs, while her pastor, who was assisted by Messrs. O. H. Griggs, E. N. Belote, Mesdames R. L. Smith and W. B. Baker, lighted the ninety-two candles that adorned the cake. It was quite a picture when all the lights were turned off, and the relatives and friends who had gathered looked with pride on the scene of so beautiful a cake and a life so ripe with age. Then Mrs. Griggs was asked to blow out the candles. To the astonishing surprise of her children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, she succeeded in blowing them all out. A special service was conducted, consisting of the following program:

Grandma Griggs' favorite song, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul"; her favorite psalm, "The Shephard Psalm," read by memory in concert; a short address by her pastor on "Our Appreciation of Old Age," closing with a short prayer. Refreshments were served, consisting of ice cream and cake. Both the pastor and the Newport News Christian Church feel very proud of their oldest member, Mrs. Susiana Griggs.

The News-Daily Press says:

"The fourth quarterly conference of the Newport News Christian Church was held Wednesday night with a good percentage of the membership present. All committees and organizations of the Church had their reports ready for the last quarter of the Conference year. C. D. West, the treasurer of the Church, declared that the past quarter had been the best one in the history of the Church. The treasurer's report showed that all bills were paid to date and that a small balance was left in the bank to the credit of the Church.

"At the recommendation of the pastor, Rev. B. J. Earp, a new fund was started by the Church, to be known as the 'parsonage fund,' and the pastor was made treasurer of this fund, the same to be kept in the bank until the Church deemed best to begin the building program.

"A motion prevailed, made by C. D. West, the chairman of the finance committee, that the pastor call a meeting of the finance committee next Monday night for a reorganization, and that the budget for expenses next year be arranged at that time.

"The following delegates were elected for the annual Conference, which meets at Holland, Va., October 30th, to November 1st, inclusive: C. D. West, Mrs. C. E. Chappell, Mrs. R. L. Smith and Mrs. R. L. Stringfield.

"The special committee appointed some time ago to purchase new song books reported that 100 new books had been purchased and paid for with the name of the Church printed on each, with the exception of one, and that one had the name of the pastor printed on it.

"The pastor expressed his highest appreciation of the pleasure of being permitted to serve this kind membership as their pastor, and declared his delight at the progress the Church had made during the past year, and particularly during the past quarter. He declared October 10th as being one of the happiest days of his life. The meeting closed with the C. E. benediction."

QUIET TALKS ON SIMPLE ESSENTIALS.

BY S. D. GORDON,

Under the Auspices of the Atlantic City Council of Churches.

(No. 6) THE HUMAN GOD.

Men hunger for the human touch in—God. It's in us humans to want to know by the feel.

We crave the human touch, from cradle to grave. No fingers hold so tight as baby fingers. Children cling to mother and father and each other. The hand-clasp, lip touching lip, the light caress, the tightening hold of the hand as life ebbs out—the hunger for the human touch is in our blood.

That's why Jesus came, for that human touch, to get it, and to give it. The hunger itself is a bit of God.

Man is like God when he is truly human. That word "human" has two meanings. The hurt meaning has become the common meaning, the weakness, the selfishness, the narrowness in man. Originally, truly, it means the distinctive traits in which man is different from the lower creation, and is like God.

God is like man, the true human, in the power to reason things out, the twin power of speech, the moral sense, and its twin, moral choice most, rarest in—love. That word "love" tells most what God is. Love is a human thing. We know it. That's God's most distinctive trait.

The difference between God and man is in the limitations found in man. God knows no limit in power or knowledge or love. It's a radical difference in degree, not kind. Though too great for words or mental grasp.

Now, Jesus was God showing us these two things. He made plain what the true, fine human is. And he made as plain what the real God is. Do you want to see the true human? Look at Jesus. All there is of the human is in Him.

Do you want to know the real God? Look at Jesus. When you are looking at Him, you are seeing the Father. All there is of God, within the true human limitation, is in Him.

Jesus shared all our human experiences. He earned bread and bed by sweat and toil. He knew family ties, friendship's sweets, sorrow's pain, indignation over wrong. He loved deeply, sympathized tenderly, and wept real tears.

He was tempted as we are. Many a time his brow was knit and moist, and his hand clenched, as he felt temptation and fought it. And he overcame temptation precisely as every man can and may, by the use of His will, His choosing, and the use of His knees. Neither without the other.

Except—yes, there is an outstanding exception. One experience He never had. That which grows out of wrong choice. But—but, that's not a human experience. It's lower down. He was more truly human in this that he refused to make wrong choice.

Jesus is peculiarly the racial Man, our Fellow. All sorts are drawn to Him—little children, the aged, ruggedly strong men, fine-fibered woman, virile eager youth, student, scholar, unlettered, both sexes, all social sorts—all alike gladly confess His pull upon their hearts.

And He alone was the Son of God in the same distinctive sense. The Father was as drawn to Jesus as we men are. There was the fullest understanding and oneness of purpose, appreciation and love, between Jesus and the Father as between Jesus and man.

Here is the Book's own story of how it happened that Jesus came. God and man used to live together in a garden. It was a wondrous garden, full of trees and birds, and all growing things good to see and to eat. They were fellows together, walking, working together day by day.

They used to meet in the twilight for a friendly talk, sometimes without words, as only real friends can do.

One twilight, God came to the usual trysting-place for the touch with his friend. But the man wasn't there. God was there. God didn't go away. God has never gone away.

But the man went away. Then he went farther away. Then he lost the way back. Then he didn't want to come back. And away from God, he got into bad shape. His will grew strangely stubborn. He got strange ideas about God not loving him.

All this was very hard on God. He sent messengers after the man. They were all treated badly. Then God said, "What shall I do? For the sake of my own breaking heart, I must do something."

And this is what He did. One day He hid away the God part of Him, and came in among us as one of ourselves. And we called His earth name Jesus. He was a real man. He lived our life.

Then one day He got down, in, under, the load of our stubborness, our selfishness to get rid of it. And the load was so heavy it broke His heart. And the blood came. And He used the blood to clean us up, and break our hearts, and bend our wills and draw us back. And He is doing it.

A little girl in bed screamed out when the storm broke. The mother, coming quickly, said, "Didn't I tell you, dear, not to be afraid? God is watching; you won't get hurt." "Yes, mother," the child said in a shaky voice, "but when it thunders like that I want somebody with skin on."

May I, with utmost reverence, use the child's child-talk? Jesus was God, coming with skin on. He came that we might know God by the human feel.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

THE STEWARDSHIP OF LIFE.

(An address before the Woman's Conference, at Burlington, N. C., October 12, 1923, by Mrs. W. A. Harper, of Elon College, N. C.)

In our annual gatherings so far, we have had a great deal to say about the money side of missions. The enterprises of the Church cannot flourish without money. The cause must have money, and it is good for us to give it. The more we give, the more we have to give and the happier we are. He who knew best about such matters said: "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

I do not wish to depreciate what we have done. Rather, I would encourage us to give more than we have ever given. I should like to see at least a 10 per cent increase in the apportionment to each society. Such an increase could be raised, I am sure, and it will do great things for us to take such a forward step. Nothing succeeds like success. Nothing guarantees success like progressive measures. I hope we shall take such a forward-looking step at this session.

But I also wish to point out that stewardship involves far more than money. It involves time, and service, and life. It is related of Abraham's steward that he was faithful in all things. It is related of the Phillippian Church that they gave more liberally than others because they first gave themselves to the Lord. That is the challenge I make to us now. We will not give less, but more, if we first give ourselves unreservedly to the Lord.

This surrender of self is not to be a matter of profession; the profession is a part of it. In the last analysis, it is a matter of deed and performance. Our life, in other words, should square with our profession. When we say we have laid ourselves on the altar, we must live in such a way of service and sacrifice that our words will carry conviction of the truthfulness of what we have said.

Women are said to be especially able to suffer and sacrifice for others. And I think through the Christian centuries we have proved it to be true. In this era of enlarged freedom and increased ability for service, we need constantly to remind ourselves that increased opportunity means increased obligation and duty. We must do more now for Christ and the Church than our mothers did or could do, or we will not be doing as much as they did with their limited resources and narrower range of interests.

We read in the papers of the excesses to which certain sectors of society abandon themselves in a wild orgy of social conviviality in a ceaseless round of card and theater parties, dances and dinners of many courses. This is the desecration of the larger freedom of womanhood. I cannot believe that this frenzy will succeed in its attack on all women. My conviction is that the new freedom and enlarged sphere of woman's activities will mean a completer consecration to the kingdom and an ampler Christian service for its promotion. We must, even those of us whose chief interest is in the kingdom, find some way to win our sisters who are butter-flying their lives away in the mad whirl of amusement, not to say vice, to a saner view of living and induce them, too, to make the service of the kingdom the paramount concern of their lives.

But I wish to be specific in my suggestions, though I realize that life cannot be reduced to uniformity. It would not be right, even if it were possible, to make a program for us to live by. What we need is certain principles, and then the exercise of our best judgment in combining them in actual living.

Recognizing this fact, I would say that Christian stewardship requires, at the hands of Christian women, that they make their homes radiantly Christian throughout. The life of the Christian's home should be permeated with the spirit of Jesus. The atmosphere of reverence will be there; of devotion, of mutual service and sacrifice, of complete consecration. The amusement life of the home will be such that Jesus is always welcome as a personal guest. Nothing will be countenanced there which would cause Him to disapprove or to suffer anew on the cross. Of course, there will be Bible reading, and prayer, and song, and story, and good books, and other literature. Our homes are the basis of our life. As they go, so will go the Church. Home is woman's palace, her throne. Let us rule here as Christians, and all else will be well.

In the community, too, we women should carry with us, in the larger opportunity which is ours the spirit of Christ. Our various clubs and societies, the parents' and teachers' club in particular, offer us a splendid avenue through which to exert Christian influence. And in politics we must remember we are Christians first and citizens second. Let us not alone condemn the evil in our communities, but let us likewise find helpful things to take the place of the evil we want removed. Let us strive to infuse every realm of living with the spirit of Jesus.

In the Church we women have always been faithful. We go to Church, it is said, oftener than the men, and delight to aid our pastors in their work. Let us keep this up, and at the same time put forth every effort to bring the men, too, into larger and more active service. Stewardship obligates us to see that others whom we can influence discharge their duties for the kingdom as much so as it obligates us to do our own part well. Here we have a fine door of service open to us. I should like all our societies to resolve at this time to put on a special campaign for a year to get people, and especially men, to attend the public services of the Church.

In our missionary societies we will suffer no retrenchment of any character if we have our stewardship obligation in mind. We will push the circle plan, larger giving, mission study, public programs, the circulation of our missionary magazines, and every other method of making our work thoroughly efficient in all departments.

And, finally, we will not fail to put forth every effort to secure life-recruits for the service of the kingdom at home and abroad. Being willing ourselves to make full surrender to the interests of the kingdom, we can, with hope and confidence, undertake a work of social stewardship in leading the young to dedicate their lives to Christian service. So shall we rejoice our own hearts, promote the kingdom, and make happy our Father.

OUR BUILDING HAS BEGUN.

A letter from Rev. M. T. Sorrell, dated Fancy Gap, Va., October 12th, brings these good tidings:

"We began our building for preachers and teachers' home this morning, with the expectation and hope of having it completed in three weeks."

This is good news indeed. It is to be a four-room house, and includes a living-room, two bed rooms, and a combination kitchen and dining-room with pantry. It is to be a very simple, but neat, structure. The Alamance Insurance and Real Estate Company, through its architect, very kindly furnished us the plans and specifications from a building recently finished in Burlington. Bro. Sorrell writes that a more satisfactory plan, in his judgment, could not have been found anywhere. Mr. and Mrs. Sorrell and Miss Morey are to occupy the building the present year as soon as it is complete.

Now, for furnishing the building. We are going largely on faith, both as to the money with which to build the building and as to equipment. Some of our good women of the woman's missionary societies are seriously considering furnishing a room or some portions of the furniture of a room. We are just waiting and hoping to learn by any mail now of a society that has voted to furnish a room. Or, if not to furnish a whole room, to make a donation for the purpose in addition to and wholly outside of any other work their society is doing. In this instance, particularly, the King's business requires haste. The furniture ought, by all means, be packed and shipped by November 1st. If any woman's society will vote in part of a fund and will state the amount, the writer will be responsible, and on that promise the furniture will be purchased and sent forward and deferred payments can be made to suit the convenience of the society. We do not wish anything fine or fancy, but we do wish that which is inviting and durable. An estimate has been given us by a reliable furniture dealer of $50.00 for the living-room, $75.00 for each of the two bed rooms, and $50.00 to $60.00 for the combination kitchen and dining-room. This will give us very neat and very substantial equipment. Of course, those occupying the rooms will furnish their own linen, covering, etc.

LATEST REPORTS FROM JAPAN.

The following, dated October 9th, gives the best information I have for SUN readers relative to our needs in Japan. We appreciate all the money sent in, and since the above was written we have forwarded to Dr. Minton $55.40:

"DEAR BRO. ATKINSON:

"Just to acknowledge receipt of your good letter of September 27th, inclosing $144.31 toward the Japan relief fund, which is very gratefully received.

"I am happy to say that thus far Mr. Garman has found none of our workers that have lost their life, but he states that many of them are destitute of funds, due to the earthquake. These he is giving relief as speedily as possible. I have cabled him $2,000 for this purpose, and will send more in a day or two. His letter states that our large mission home is badly damaged, and that our largest Church in Azabu is in such a condition that it will have to be built entirely new. One of our other Churches was damaged, but he had not yet learned how great the damage was. Our new building program is for the time being stopped, but I hope for some definite word concerning it before the board meeting. A wireless message from Garman yesterday calls for $3,000 at once to make immediate repairs to some of our buildings in order to avoid further destruction. I am not sure whether this refers to the mission home or one of the other properties. He thinks he can get hold of perhaps half the amount from some of our other funds over there. So I shall try to cable him the other half in a day or so if possible.

"I fear that our property losses are such that it will take a good many thousand dollars to put it in shape, but how thankful we can be that the loss of life among our workers has not been so severe as we had first feared. The house where Miss Stacy and Miss Crew were to have lived, and which is located so that I had absolutely no hope of it being spared, still stands intact in spite of the fact that it was the nearest to the center of the destruction in Tokyo of any of our properties, and that fire and ruins were all about it. Our other properties were farther out, but were more severely damaged, and the theological school in which we are interested was still farther out, but was damaged to the extent of $200,000. It is difficult to understand."

A WORD FROM JAPAN.

Mrs. Susie V. Fry, on a card dated Utsunomiya, Japan, September 30th, says: "Please tell our Southern friends we are all safe. The picture on opposite side of this card is the W. C. T. U. helping bind up the wounds of the crippled and the suffering. If you had money en route on September 1st, please have your postmaster send duplicate order. With kindest regards."

The card that Mrs. Fry sends is interesting in its revelation to help that Christian organizations are carrying to the destitute and distressed and wounded in Japan. J. O. ATKINSON.

MEN AND MILLIONS FOR SEPTEMBER.

As the fall now approaches and we make arrangements to meet our other obligations, we should certainly include in those obligations our pledges to Men and Millions. September being a between month, payments were not as large as could be wished. We are hoping that October will show up better, as we should pay our obligations to the Lord's work out of our first fruits.

MONDAY.

HOW GOD SPEAKS TO US.

"Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."—Matt. 4:4.

Among the many things that prayer is, we are told that it is conversation with God, and certainly it is the only time that we attempt to talk with Him. But we pray and talk to Him and often fail to get an answer. This is where so many folks break down spiritually. Our religion and natures demand words from God, and when we do not hear Him we have nothing to hold us to Him but blind faith. Where and when did God speak to you last so that you understood what He was saying and that it was He who was speaking? Has not the whole thing been rather vague to you and sometimes almost a failure? We can't enter into conversation with any one without understanding the language of the other party. Neither can we with God.

What is God's language? Good works speak. "Believe me for the very works' sake." His words speak (the Scriptures); "Thy word is truth." The crises of life speak; out of the World War folks are learning better things which are His will. The increase of knowledge speaks, "as God gives us the light," said Lincoln. Yea, in other things He is more specific than in these. He speaks in our language, in the things we know about science, in the answers to our inquiries, in the demands of justice and righteousness, in the appeal of trust and deeds of kindness and every expression of love. Obviously, the more one knows about these things, the greater is the appreciation of God and the greater the stock of words between us and Him. "Blessed are the truth-lovers, for they shall hear the word of God."

PRAYER.

Dear Father, we thank Thee that, in every thing good, Thou art speaking to us, and even in the evil Thou art warning us. Grant us constant communion with Thee in all the things of life. Amen.

TUESDAY.

HEARING THE VOICE OF GOD.

"Every one that is of the truth heareth My voice."—Jno. 18:37.

Truth is with us all the time. If so, there is a divine voice with us all the time. In our relation to everything, there is one voice that speaks louder than all the others. It is the conscience. It sits in judgment over our words and deeds, and even our motives, telling us what is right and wrong. It is our spiritual ear. It is the brain function of the soul.

If righteousness is the chief feature of the kingdom of God, then sensitiveness to right and wrong is the chief condition to obtaining it. Our physical ears are confused by a thousand voices, and they break down. Conscience never does. Through it we are always in touch and direct contact with God. Train thy conscience and follow in guidance.

PRAYER.

Dear Father, grant, we pray Thee, that Thy lovingkindness may be followed today by our own obedience to Thy laws; and confirm Thou in us the best purposes of life by renewing our sense of Thy presence all along the way. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE SOUL'S TRAIL BLAZING.

*"He will guide you * * "—Jno. 16:13.

"The Lord shall guide thee continually."—Isa. 58:11.

From the time we know nothing on unto eternity, life's developing process is one of trail-blazing in truth. We fight our way and press forward into something new every day, and, if we are wise, we are continually learning how to go from what we are to what we ought to be. It is making our way unto the unknown—trail-blazing the truth.

It has been said that our brain is like a city. Our thoughts are the streets, our ideas are the houses on the streets, and our train of thoughts is the automobile we ride in. God is at every intersection of thought, directing us to the right places. If we are to follow Him in this life, we must fill our streets with ideas and ideals—houses we may properly live in; we must remove all the rubbish of prejudice and ignorance, and store the mind with truth and extend our streets as far as possible, thus understanding more of Him and able to follow His guidance unto all wisdom. All light is His guidance, and there is no thrill the greater. There is no possession so glorious as the divine impulse.

PRAYER.

Lord, Thou knowest what we need. Give unto us this day that which we need most. We present ourselves to Thee, with open hearts and minds. Guide us into all truth and forbid that we shall do anything but follow on. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"A wise man's heart discerneth time and judgment."—Eccl. 8:5.

We are too busy to do lots of things we would like to do. I wonder what we would do with it if we had another hour added to our day, making it twenty-five instead of twenty-four? How much time do we throw away now? I once saw an advertisement which read as follows: "Lost, one golden minute, set with sixty diamond seconds; lost forever. No reward offered for its return." And Kipling says:

"If you can fill each golden minute
With sixty seconds of distance run,
Yours is the world's and all that's in it."

Our every minute bears precious jewels of duty, of probation, of education, of opportunity, and the wise redeem their time by making the best of them, not as the foolish virgins, but as the wise.

PRAYER.

Lord, Thou dost give us richly of time. Grant that we may use it for good and be rich in its values, and at the end receive Thy benediction of "Well done." Amen.

FRIDAY.

WHAT WOULD YOU SAY?

"Is it well with thee?"—2 Kings 4:26.

When you die, how many people will be sorry, and what will they be sorry for? If you were to write your own obituary, what would you say? How many enemies have you, and why are they your enemies? What is the best thing you ever did? How well do you know God? What is the source of your greatest pleasure? How careful are you to cultivate the best gifts? Answer these honestly and according to the standard of righteousness, and get down to the rock bottom for better living.

PRAYER.

Dear Father, once more we look to Thee for help. Our failures challenge us to go forward to Thee. Lead us on, O Christ, and hold us so close to Thee that our every word and deed may reveal Thy presence, and others may be refreshed and go forward also. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"CUSSING."

"Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain."—Ex. 20:7.

There are two ways of swearing. One is a solemn appeal to God which vouches for the faithfulness of the heart; the other is plain "cussing," which the spirit of God is opposed to and which is opposed to the spirit of God. The first explains itself; the second must be described as being irreverent, degrading, unhallowed, vulgar, impious invocation of destruction on things. Stealing may be excused, immorality may be controlled; even murder may have its paliating circumstances, but for the man who "cusses," we can plead no passion, no appetite, no good manners, no politeness or bravery, no wisdom nor intelligence, no irresistable temptation, no personal gain, for his words are directed against Almighty God. All that can be said of it is that it is a habit, and no good can be pleaded for an evil habit. As such, it is a plague to the life, and a leper to the soul. As a principle, it is cowardly because it takes advantage. In conversation, it is boorish because it offends all decency. As a practice, it is foolish, because it works harm. As characteristic, it is wicked, because it is a sin against God.

Polycarp said: "I will not curse my God. He has done me nothing but good." Swearing men cannot frequent holy places. It is against God and religion.

PRAYER.

Dear Father, Thou who committest to us the solemn trusts of life, may we be awake to the instant claims of pure speech. Help us to resist the temptation and flay the habit, and draw our minds to Thee, that Thou mayest own us, and that we may be one with Thee. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE SABBATH AND MAN.

"The Sabbath was made for men."—Mark 2:27.

These are the words of our Lord Jesus Christ confirming the use of the Sabbath, and affirming that it was made for each one of us. Today, study to know thyself, study to know thy God, and anything that contributes to thy knowledge and to thy worship of Him; anything that contributes to the deep content of the soul, anything that adds to thy personal refinement, or physical and mental and spiritual betterment, anything that restores balance and tunes the life to the harmonies of the infinite; yea, even restores thy tired body and frazzled nerves, is consistent with Sabbath observance. Thou art under everlasting obligation to this day for the culture of thy higher nature. This is what is meant when He said: "Remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy."

PRAYER.

Blessed Lord, have mercy upon our frailty. Give us strength to turn to Thee today. Support us in all its institutions, and forbid that we shall be lax in striving for our better selves, that this and every Sabbath may be all that Thou hast intended it should be. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

THE ORPHANAGE FARMING.

DEAR FRIENDS:

Mowing, raking, hauling hay and digging sweet potatoes for several weeks has kept the superintendent of the orphanage so busy that he has not had much time to write letters or think about what to write. My father was a good farmer, and having his training till I was grown has been quite an asset to me on the orphanage farm. I have found since having charge of the work here that it has been necessary for me to devote quite a lot of my time to the farm in order to make the farm pay and also to raise vegetables for the children to eat through the summer.

While we were very dry during the spring and first part of the summer, we still have here vegetables of all kinds from our garden and still have roasting ears and beans this late in the season.

We have put sixty-five tons of silo feed in our silo, thirty-five tons of hay in our barn loft, and two hundred and sixty bushels of sweet potatoes in our potato house. Our corn is to be shreaded yet. This work has been accomplished with our little boys, except the boy I have had hired to look after the farm when it was necessary for the superintendent to be away. I give you this bit of information to show you that we are trying to do our part, too.

To care for one hundred and five children and give them three meals each day, takes a lot of thinking, planning and carrying out plans. Our wheat crop this year was no good, and the dry weather ruined our Irish potato crop, and we will have to buy our flour and Irish potatoes from now on. Irish potatoes is one food the children all like, and would eat them three times each day. I would be very glad if our friends would donate us some flour and Irish potatoes. It would save our bank account and make the donor happy and us very grateful.

Thanksgiving will soon be here, and crops are good this year. Cotton and tobacco are bringing good prices, with peanuts better than last year. Business is in better condition than for several years, so I truly hope our Churches, Sunday Schools and friends will take an interest in swelling the Thanksgiving offering for the Christian Orphanage to larger proportions than ever before. We must not forget the orphans and widows in their distress.

One denomination in North Carolina last year gave its orphanage for Thanksgiving the prize sum of seventy-five thousand dollars. Think of it! Our denomination in four States gave its orphanage the sum of six thousand. Do we love our orphan children as well as they?

FIFTY YEARS OF SERVICE.

Any article that serves the public for half a century can be depended upon as filling a need. Peloubet's Select Notes have this year entered upon the fiftieth year of service. Dr. Peloubet has passed to his reward. For twenty years before his death, he associated with himself in the preparation of his notes Dr. Amos R. Wells. The fiftieth volume is written by Dr. Wells, one of the most voluminous, as well as most popular, Christian men of letters our country has produced.

The quality and method of the Peloubet's Notes is too well known to call for comment here. Yesterday a Christian worker remarked that he had used this commentary for thirty years and could not do without it. That is the attitude of many thousands.

Dr. Wells dares predict fifty years more of service for Peloubet's Notes. Let us hope so, and that he may for many years be their editor.

The Scripture used in the commentary is the American Standard Version. This will commend itself to all who have carefully examined the merits of the various versions. The concensus of opinion is that this translation represents most accurately the original Hebrew and Greek. It follows the King James Version, except where a change is necessary to reproduce what the real Scriptures said.

Speaking of the plan of the book, Dr. Wells says: "From the beginning, this book has given a lesson treatment aimed to be the most helpful to the pupil in his study of the lesson, and to the teacher in his presentation of lesson facts and truths. It has not distributed the material into little compartments, one for illustrations, one for quotations, one for Oriental lights, one for textual notes, one for practical applications, and so on. That is not the way to gain or give a clear-cut idea of the lesson. On the contrary, the Bible order is followed, and the teaching material is introduced just where the pupil and teacher need it and will find it most effective. For this reason also we do not present separate treatments for the different grades; all the space is needed to give the information and inspiration required by the teachers of all grades as fundamental to the lesson. Prefixed to each lesson, however, are suggestions as to methods which may be followed by teachers of the younger and older classes."

For schools that use the Improved Uniform Lessons, this book will find a large and useful place. The International Lesson Committee has discontinued issuing adaptations of these lessons to the primary and junior ages. However, certain members of the committee have made such adaptations for 1924, and these also are incorporated in the book.

The book may be ordered from THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Richmond, Va., or the Church Supply House, Burlington, N. C., for $2.00, postpaid.

W. A. HARPER.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

PREMIUMS GIVEN FOR NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The subscription price of THE SUN, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year.

SCHEDULE.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.
4. To one securing 75 Subscriptions, one Remington Portable Typewriter, with standard keyboard and case ($60.00 f. o. b. Richmond).
5. To one securing 30 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or one Lady's Wrist Watch will be given, guaranteed by Jahnke Bros., Jewelers, of Richmond, Va. ($30.00).
6. For 25 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or Lady's Watch ($25.00), likewise guaranteed by Jahnke Bros.
7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

The contest will close on October 31, 1923.

Remittances made on this campaign are to be net. Post-office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

November 4, 1923.

Subject: "World-Wide Prohibition—World's Temperance Sunday."—Ps. 101:1-8; Prov. 23:29-35.

Golden Text: "I will set no base thing before mine eyes."—Psa. 101:3.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 63:1-7.

World-Wide Prohibition—A World Ideal.

"I will set no base thing before mine eyes."

Men become in character like unto what they see and hear and think about. A base thing before the eyes constantly develops a base character. Uplifting surroundings elevate men and women. No power is more effective in insuring a happy and true life than a noble, Christian ideal which ever urges toward higher, better things.

In the familiar tale of "The Great Stone Face," little Ernest spent days in meditation before the great work of nature formed on the mountainside in the likeness of a great face. Very familiar with the legends surrounding the "Great Stone Face," very eagerly he awaited the fulfillment of the prophecy when the great man with countenance like the mountain face should appear. At length, after a life of simplicity and service, Ernest himself was heralded as the likeness of the Great Stone Face, and the prophecy was fulfilled. Ernest had become like what he had admired and reverenced most. And daily life sees, as in the fanciful tale, boys and girls growing in terms of their ideals. As great truths grip their lives, they take their places to spread that truth. World-wide prohibition will only be possible when brought about by those whose ideal it is, and for those who are to follow, that base things may be removed from before all eyes.

Prohibition in the United States grew out of education concerning the evils of the liquor traffic. It was secured first in ideals, then by law. The task remains to develop a national conscience which will demand the keeping of the law. Men and women came to think of the blessings to be enjoyed in a land free from the open saloon, free from the sorrow and sickness and sin caused by the legalized sale of liquor. A Christian nation owes to its boys and girls the chance to grow up away from such evils. A Christian nation owes a home to the boys and girls who are to be its rulers and citizens, which will produce the best type of men and women. A Christian nation and the Church of Jesus Christ must demand that the good and the pure and the right are held before the eyes of boys and girls, and that "base things" are removed.

To the boys and girls of the world, world-wide prohibition will bring great blessings, as expressed in the Scripture lesson of this "World's Temperance Sunday."

"I will sing of lovingkindness and justice."

Does intemperance lead the thoughts of men to justice, or their hearts to lovingkindness? A little lad in a Sunday School class was hearing of the Father who lives in heaven, "who cares for you just like your own earthly Father." And he asked: "Does He come home drunk every Saturday night?" The boy was starting out handicapped in life because of such a conception of "father." The national prohibition law in America has restored fathers to many little lads. It has made justice possible in many instances. Instead of taking away "personal liberty," it has given just rights to many from whom they were being taken by a legalized liquor traffic. A business, permitted by the law of the land, was robbing countless hosts of joy and righteousness and justice. Does not this fact alone entitle the world to look forward to a time when the evil will be driven from every nation, and peace and happiness restored?

"I will walk within my house with a perfect heart."

Prohibition has changed many a house into a home. Merchants testify that money which used to go for booze goes for shoes and clothing. Savings banks testify to a large increase in the amount of money saved since prohibition went into effect in the United States. Officials show records of a great decrease in the number of arrests for drunkenness and all causes. The sober man will walk and work in his house "with a perfect heart." Upon the integrity of the home, the safety of the nation depends. The ideal of world-wide prohibition promises homes which will be giving to the world citizens with safe thoughts and right motives, while the liquor traffic can only give weakened minds, diseased bodies and ruined souls.

"Mine eyes shall be upon the faithful of the land, that they may dwell with me."

In writing to the people of Thessalonica, Paul urged: "Be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love; and for a helmet, the hope of salvation." Drunkenness drives man from God, and thus drives him from the best things in life. He knows little of faith and love and the hope of salvation. But with the faithful, God dwells. If the world is to be won to Jesus Christ, prohibition will be one of the mighty agencies to make it possible for men to love and worship Him. Weak in their own power, with Him, they can overcome all sin. Because men are often weak, the base things must be taken from before them. Can any Christian Church member, who really wishes the world to be better, and God's will to be done on earth, as it is in heaven, condemn world-wide prohibition, or with any degree of sympathy aid the liquor forces in breaking the law or securing its repeal or modification? Surely it must be a selfish American who, because he feels strong himself, has no concern for the weaker brother whom he may uplift, or send to ruin. God dwells with the faithful nation, and with the faithful child, but He yearns to be with every child of His.

"Who hath woe?"

With a list of the sorrows in the train of the drinking of liquor by the wise Solomon, the lesson closes. Woe, sorrow, contentions, wounds, redness of eyes enter into the terrible picture which he draws. Attractive in appearance, it "biteth like a serpent." Promising pleasure, it gives death. It is indeed a sorry scene, and one which is given as a warning. The other side of the picture is as inspiring as this is depressing. "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control; against such there is no law." And these, world-wide prohibition will help to bring about.

"I will set no base thing before mine eyes." This golden text is indeed a golden word to hide in the heart, and we shall do well if we can build it into the growing souls of our young people. World-wide prohibition is an ideal worth striving toward. Professor Charles Scanlon, LL.D., declares: "At least the idea of world-wide prohibition is no longer fantastic. To thoughtful people, well informed on this subject, the question is not "if," but "when?" The day is coming. Every Christian should have a share in hastening it.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

November 4, 1923.

Topic: Lessons from the Psalms. 11. The Church Psalm.—Ps. 84:10-12.
(Consecration Meeting.)

Thoughts for the Meeting.

Is the Church a pleasant place to you? Every Church is God's house in which every child of His should be very welcome and happy. Verse 1.

Life without worship is incomplete. We long for a power higher than our own, and cry out to the "living God." Verse 2.

Praise is a part of worship. Prayer is more than petition. It is praising God for His goodness, as much as asking for things. Verse 4.

Have you ever gone to Church troubled and discouraged and come away with a feeling of strength and uplift. Trust in God gives strength. He is everywhere, but in His own house do we seem to come nearest to Him. Verse 5.

Paul tells us not to sorrow as they who have no hope. We turn to the Church in time of sorrow. Why not always in joy? Verse 6.

Exercise in Christian service gives strength to the Christian life, as physical exercise to the body. Day by day, the Christian life should grow stronger, and the Christian experience grows richer. Verse 7.

"A day in thy courts is better than a thousand." Days spent in the Church are time well invested. The income therefrom is for eternity. Verse 10.

"No good thing will be withheld from them that walk uprightly." Our Heavenly Father is lavish with His gifts. No greater gift was ever given to man than the Church. Verse 11.

Illustration for the Meeting.

After telling of a very snowy Sabbath morning, where the preacher did not appear and a little company of faithful ones had gathered about—a dozen in all, and one stranger, a little boy of twelve, at length a man nervously ascended the pulpit and began to speak. Dr. Boreham described what followed thus: "The boy was sitting under the gallery. A marble tablet now adorns the wall near the seat which he occupied that snowy day. The inscription record that that very morning the boy sitting under the gallery was converted. He was only fifteen, and he died at fifty-seven. But, in the course of the intervening years, he preached the Gospel to millions and let thousands and thousands into the kingdom and service of Jesus Christ. 'Let preachers study this story,' says Sir William Robertson Nicoll. 'Let them believe that, under the most adverse circumstances, they may do a work that will tell on the universe forever.' It was a great thing to have converted Charles Haddon Spurgeon; and who knows but he may have, in the smallest and humblest congregation in the world, some lad as well worth converting as he was." Was it not worth while, the few moments those people spent in the Church that snowy morning?

Plans for the Meeting.

Prepare for the meeting early. "Fail to prepare means to prepare to fail."

Suggested Hymns: "How Firm a Foundation," "Marching to Zion," "The Church's One Foundation," "O Zion, Haste," "Church of God, Awake."

FOR DISCUSSION: How can I make my Church mean more to my life? How can I help to make the Church mean more to others? How can we make the Church mean more in the community? Ways in which the Church has helped. Our part in sending the message of the Church to all the world.

Make the theme of the consecration service, prayers, verses and songs "Helping Through Our Church." Let the roll call be followed by silent prayer, followed by one or more familiar hymn, begun without announcement and sung softly without accompaniment. Close with appeal for Church devotion and loyalty, a verse of "Take My Life and Let it Be," and the benediction.

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

TOPIC: Trust God: For what, and why?—Ps. 37:3.

"Trust in Jehovah, and do good:
Dwell in the land, and feed on His faithfulness."

If you had a strong, armed soldier to stay with you all the time, would you not feel safe from harm?

If you had a very wise man to teach you, to show you the best things to do, and the right things to say, would you not feel safe, and sure that you would not do the wrong thing?

If you had a kind nurse to care for you when you were sick, one who was always loving and kind and always there just when you needed her, would you not be glad?

If you had a guide who could tell you the way you should go, and the work you should do all through your life, would he not be a great help?

Your Heavenly Father is just such a protection and teacher, to care for you and to guide you. Aren't you glad that you knew Him, and can trust Him, and don't you feel safe with such a Father? We are glad for that, and also that we can "do good" with His help.

Rheumatism and Indigestion

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its affects in their practice, believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect, and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

If you suffer from Rheumatism, Indigestion, or from any curable disease, accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to—
Shivar Springs,
Box 16-D, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons (two five-gallon demijohns) of Shivar Spring Water. I agree to give the water a fair trial in accordance with instructions which you will send, and if I report no benefit you are to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

FISHING.

"And passing along by the Sea of Galilee, he saw Simon and Andrew casting a net in the sea: for they were fishers. And Jesus said unto them, Come ye after me and I will make you to become fishers of men." (Mark 1:16, 17.) Jesus can make any one a fisher of men. A high degree of mentality and the ornaments of learning, will not, cannot make a fisher of men. Great versatility and eloquence of speech with tongue or pen cannot, do not, make one a fisher of men. That high and heavenly art is the work of Jesus alone. Do you sincerely desire to learn how to win, how to save men? Come after Jesus! Let Him have all of your life, and He will do the rest. Be assured of that.—R. B. W., in Methodist Protestant.

CALLED TO ACCOUNT.

Just as the tiny shells make up the chalk hills, and the chalk rills together make up the range, so the trifling actions make up the whole account, and each of these must be pulled asunder separately. You had an hour to spare the other day—what did you do? You had a voice—how did you use it? You had a pen—you could use that: how did you employ it? Each particular shall be brought out, and there shall be demanded an account for each one.—Spurgeon.

PAYNE—DAVIS.

Mr. Robert E. Payne, of Linville, Va., and Miss Mamie E. Davis, of Keezletown, Va., motored to my home on September 22, 1923, and were quietly married. Mr. Payne is a plasterer by trade. They will reside for the present with his widowed mother at Linville. They have many friends in their home communities who wish them much happiness.

A. W. ANDES.

HANLY—KIMBRO.

Married by and at the home of the writer, Burlington, N. C., October 14, 1923, Mr. Thomas Franklin Hanly, of Winston-Salem, and Miss Clara Mae Kimbro, of Union Ridge, N. C. They were accompanied by a few of their many friends, who wish for them a long and happy life.

P. H. FLEMING.

CARPER—REYNARD.

The home of the officiating minister was the scene of a quiet wedding on the 13th of October, 1923, when Mr. J. Lee Carper and Miss Susie Reynard were united in matrimony. The contracting parties both live near Palmyra Church, Bro. Carper being the superintendent of the Sunday School there. After the ceremony they took the train for Washington, D. C., for a honeymoon trip of a few days, after which they will reside at the groom's home. May their wedded lives be happy.

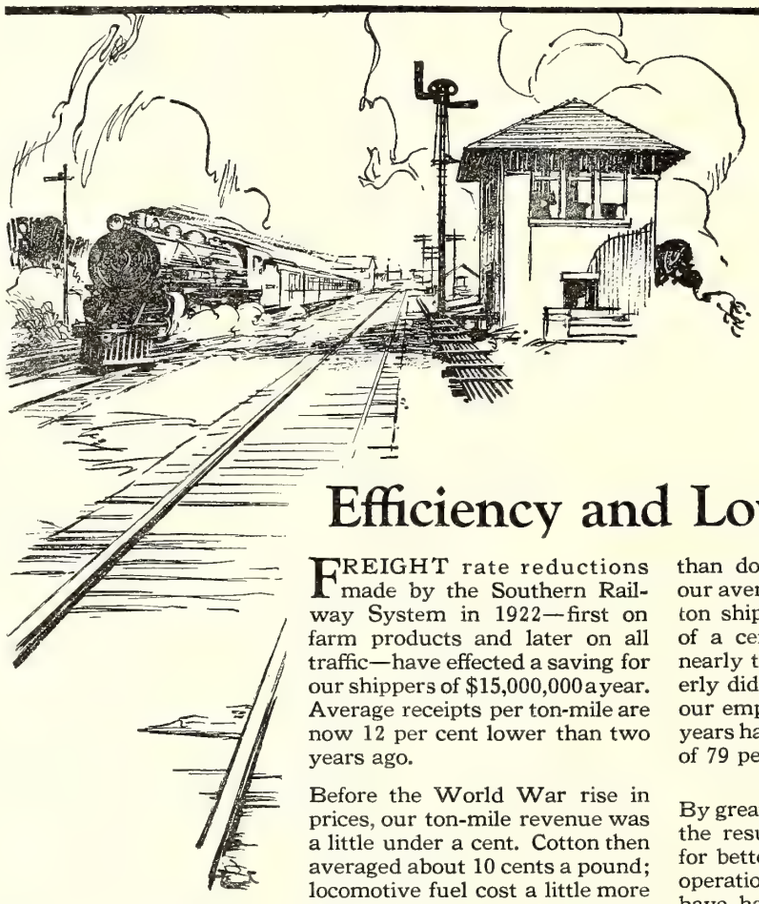
SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM



Efficiency and Lower Rates

FREIGHT rate reductions made by the Southern Railway System in 1922—first on farm products and later on all traffic—have effected a saving for our shippers of $15,000,000 a year. Average receipts per ton-mile are now 12 per cent lower than two years ago.

Before the World War rise in prices, our ton-mile revenue was a little under a cent. Cotton then averaged about 10 cents a pound; locomotive fuel cost a little more than a dollar a ton; the average pay of our employees $880 a year.

While our average freight charges today are 40 per cent above the pre-war level, cotton sells at more than double the old prices, and our average freight charge on cotton shipments is only a quarter of a cent a pound. Coal costs nearly three times what it formerly did, and the average pay of our employees for the past three years has been $1,580, an increase of 79 per cent.

By greater efficiency of operation, the result of large expenditures for betterments, and the loyal cooperation of our employees, we have have been able to absorb a part of the excess of the increase in operating costs over the smaller increase in rates. We are continually working for greater operating economies.

Southern Railway System deposits in Southern banks an average of $150,500 each banking hour.

MITCHELL.

Mrs. Nettie Mitchell was born in Rockingham County, N. C., and died at her home, in Schoolfield, Va., at the age of 36 years. She leaves a husband, six children, mother, two brothers, two sisters, a number of relatives and a host of friends.

Sister Mitchell confessed faith in Christ when a girl, and united with Happy Home Church, where her membership was at her death. A neighbor gave this testimony concerning her life: "She died happy, trusting in her Saviour."

Burial service was conducted by Rev. Mr. Strader, a M. E. minister, assisted by her pastor. Interment was made in the Church cemetery Sunday, October 14, 1923. Peace to her ashes. May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

L. L. WYRICK.

RUSSELL.

Died at her home, Haw River, N. C., October 13, 1923, Mrs. Virginia Scott Russell, wife of Mr. M. A. Russell, aged 60 years 6 months and 13 days. Her husband and seven children survive her.

She was a member of the Haw Christian Church, and was fond of her Church and delighted in its services when she was able to attend. She trusted Christ and was not afraid to go when the end came.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer from the Christian Church at Haw River, N. C., and the interment was in the cemetery at Graham, N. C.

The large audience that attended the funeral spoke the esteem in which she was held. P. H. FLEMING.

STOUT.

William A. Stout died September 29, 1923, at the age of 76 years 1 month and 22 days. He was married May 6, 1866, to Elizabeth Bray, who preceded him in death just ten months. To this union, four children were born, three of whom survive—J. E. Stout, A. R. Stout, and Mrs. Daisy Hodgin. There are fifteen living grandchildren, eight great-grandchildren, and many other relatives. He was laid to rest in the cemetery at Park's X-Roads September 30th, where he was a member, in the presence of a large congregation. Burial by the pastor and writer, assisted by Rev. G. R. Underwood, of Bennett, N. C.

T. J. GREEN.

KING.

Little Benjamin William King was born September 7, 1923, and died October 2, 1923, and was buried in the Waverly Cemetery October 3, at 4:30 P. M. He was the son of Mr. W. B. King and Mrs. Pearl King, of near Waverly, Va.

The Cost of Carelessness.—

Last year the national dead-letter office handled no fever than 16,586,419 letters, and it has been estimated that these letters cost, when thus heedlessly misdirected and in most cases lost, the enormous sum of $3,000,000. The business losses thus caused, the suspense and vexation, possibly the interruption or destruction of friendships and other matters of the spirit, cannot, of course, be put into the estimate. All carelessness has long consequences and results that widen far out beyond the original offender. The heedless addressing of letters is only a specimen of this very common and very disastrous fault. If in our own case we should keep an account of it, we should be amazed and horrified at the sum total.—Arrow, in Christian Endeavor World.

Tiny Tides on the Great Lakes.—

Theoretically, there is a tide on all inland bodies of water, varying with their size, location and depth, states the United States Hydrographic Office, as cited in the Nautical Gazette (New York). We read:

"As the range of tide on as large a body of water as Lake Superior is only about 1½ inches (at its western end), it will be seen that for all practical purposes tide on lesser inland waters becomes negligible. The greatest tide-producing force is exerted on lakes under the equator, where the moon, three hours up, produces high water at its eastern and low water at its western end, with a rise that bears a definite ratio to the length of the lake. In the latitude of the Great Lakes the tide-producing force is much lessened. Here the high-water point moves from the eastern end to the western end along the southern shore. The center of a lake is an area of no tide. This is seen by the oscillation of water in a tank when high water is produced alternately at each end; the line of the transverse axis shows no rise or fall."

France and the Pope.—

The letter of the pope, which generally is regarded as a direct message to France, and also a plea for German sympathy and support, seems to have been impolitic from the Catholic standpoint. Aside from any relation to the trouble between Germany and France, the pope seems to have tried to tie Germany closer to the vatican, thinking perhaps that France is tied so securely that she cannot break loose. The reply of Premier Poincare speaks of "the holy see, where errors may be made." This direct charge of papal infallibility certainly is not very palatable to the pope. France has re-established diplomatic relations with the vatican, and the papal letter did not bind the vatican and France any closer together. There is unmistakable evidence of growth of papal favor both in Italy and Germany. The government of Italy never has been so close to the vatican since the break fifty years ago as it is now. Catholic France excuses the pope in part by holding that he may have been misled. But this, too, is rather severe on the papal doctrine of infallibility.—Telescope.

"Peace to His Ashes."—

For some weeks the papers have carried accounts of the proposed removal of the bones of General Oglethorpe from England to Atlanta, Ga.

General Oglethorpe was the first colonial Governor of Georgia, and the founder of Oglethorpe University, of Atlanta, of which institution Dr. Thornwell Jacobs is now president. General Oglethorpe went back to England, where he died and he and his wife were buried in a cathedral in their native land.

Dr. Jacobs conceived the idea of bringing the remains of the Oglethorpes back to this country and placing them in a vault prepared for the purpose on the grounds of the institution which was founded by the distinguished Englishman, and which bears his name.

Dr. Jacobs secured the endorsement of the authorities at Washington in behalf of the undertaking, and went to England to confer with the authorities there. The pastor of the Church in which the bodies repose gave consent, and the way seemed clear for carrying out the project. Dr. Jacobs expected to start soon for this country with the coveted bodies which for more than a century have been undisturbed. The tombs had been opened and the coffin found in a remarkable state of preservation.

The American Treaty With Turkey.—

While the Turks and the allies have been wrestling at Lausanne, we have been told from time to time that progress was being made in working out the new treaty between the United States and Turkey. So far, our State Department has completely closed its ears to the appeal of the Federal Council and other organizations that we do not resume diplomatic relations with Turkey until that country has made some sort of reparation to the Armenians and has provided them with a safe national home. The State Department's answer to those who protest is that no information which it has received indicates that such a stand on our part would secure the desired result. The administration is ready to refuse to recognize governments in Russia and in Mexico for years because the protection which they accord property does not suit us. According to reports from Lausanne, our American observer there, Joseph C. Grew, has been very active, and very successful in getting rewritten sections of the treaty between Turkey and the allies concerning foreign concessions. Is justice for the weak of so much less interest to the administration than commercial interests? Will we refuse to take the hand of a robber, but grasp that of a murderer and robber combined? Has the United States, which we are told on the highest administrative authority holds the moral leadership of the world, thrown over the cause of the Armenians just as completely as has that moral inferior, Europe? Why cannot we demand certain standards of justice in a government before recognizing it? It is not too late for the administration to change its mind, even now.—Christian Work.

Allen versus Pinchot.—

A few days ago there was held in the city of Washington a "Citizens' Conference" in the interest of law enforcement. The discussion centered in the enforcement of the prohibition laws. Governor Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, was one of the speakers. It so happens that there are 1,300 saloons in Philadelphia, which are openly defying the State authorities. Governor Pinchot said in his speech that it was the duty of the President to enforce the law.

Governor Allen, of Kansas, directly opposed this view of Governor Pinchot's. Allen said no State should call on the Federal government to enforce a law until every resource of the State had failed. He said if he were Governor of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia would awake with the full military force of the State in charge, and it would go to sleep with a padlock on every saloon, and all the keepers under arrest. He said if a band of men were to loot the national banks of Philadelphia, the Governor would not call on the President to save the situation, but would have the militia of the State ordered out.

This looks like a piece of cheap politics. Governor Pinchot has been spoken of several times as a possible, if not probable, candidate for President in 1924. His settlement of the miners' strike gave him a little boom. We opine that his speech at the recent conference will act like a boomerang, as it will be construed by most people who read it as an effort to "pass the buck" to the President. It is the duty of Mr. Pinchot, as of every Governor, to "sweep around his own door-step," and if he does not do it he, and not the President, will be held responsible.—Ex.

NOTES-PERSONALS

President W. A. Harper spent last Sunday at Waverly, Va. You may be sure he had his eye on Elon.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, of Elon College, N. C., spent last Sunday in Virginia, visiting the Wakefield pastorate.

Did you ever do it? Do what? Spend your time in wishing for blessings which you made no effort to get? Then, that was a vain thing to do.

Do not let your thoughts fly out at the window, for when you do you have let them go beyond your control, and when a thought is beyond your control you cannot tell the mischief it may do?

Is there no way Christians can stop fighting each other? When Christians go to war, then the devil gets time for a vacation. When all Church members become Christians, then fighting will rarely be seen.

The Methodist Protestant says the preacher who does not know how to go into a sick-room is living too far away from Christ. That is a suggestive thought and well worth the consideration of every pastor.

Some one has said that doubt is negation, and the man who has nothing else on which to build is building on the sand, and the first storm which sweeps the coast of his life will tear down all he has built through a lifetime. Beware of doubts!

The editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN spent last Sunday with the First Church, Greensboro, N. C., supplying for Pastor Clem, who was away. That Church affords a large field of usefulness. We enjoyed the day with them. We wish them great success in their work.

Here is wisdom for the preacher: "It is a great joy to feed the flock of God, but no man can do it who has not himself grazed in the heavenly pastures." How true that is! Brother, where have you been grazing the past week? You will most likely feed, or try to feed, your flock on the grazings of the past week. Take heed what you read.

There was one characteristic of Jesus as the preacher of the Gospel, which we fear is all too scarce with many a preacher, and that is, it was said that he could not be hid. His work and presence were so filled with power from on high that he could not be hid, but a great many preachers not only can be hid, but they can be hid by their own preaching. What a calamity!

The Christian Herald is calling for a gift of $250,000 to aid it in giving a home to dependent children left so by the earthquake in Japan. Now, they wish to enlarge their work. That is surely a great work and a blessed opportunity to do good. Thousands of people were killed, and many a child was left parentless and homeless. Let every one who can help the Christian Herald do so, for the need is very great.

Bishop Warren A. Candler is quoted in the public prints of the day as having recently said: "St. Paul expressed the true conception of Christian life when he said: 'We look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen are eternal.' The same principal is implied by our Lord's exhortation, 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things (that is, the things which are seen) shall be added unto you.'" Wisely said, and withal much needed. Take it to yourself and see what it can do for you.

How true is this paragraph given to the public press by a bishop in one of the great Churches of the land. Does it fit in your Church? "Bishop Ernest L. Waldorf, of Witchita, Kans., last night told the delegates attending the forty-second annual national convention of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, that Church people today go to Church in fine automobiles, and appear in the pews with diamonds and declare that they are too poor when it is necessary to foot the bills to carry on the work of Christianity." How many of the so-called Churches can see through such a situation?

We have poor standards of success. If a man is eloquent, we often think that he is the successful man, but we are not always sure of it. It is said that it was a poor country parson who, in preaching a plain and simple sermon, reached the heart of Chas. H. Spurgeon and brought him to Christ. He was by men perhaps classed as a fifth-rate preacher, but he did, in that sermon, do a great deal more than many of the big and eloquent preachers did, for Charles H. Spurgeon was the greatest preacher of his day, and the man who won him to Christ will have a big reward for the plain and simple sermon he preached on that occasion.

Here is a suggestive thought for thinking Christians. It is from the pen of Rev. A. A. Bornar, one of Scotland's sturdy preachers. He says: "A holy life is made up of a number of small things. Little words, not eloquent speeches or sermons; little deeds, not miracles or battles, not one great heroic act of mighty martyrdom makes up the Christian life. The avoidance of little evils, little sins, little inconsistencies, little weaknesses, little follies, indiscretions and impudences; little foibles, little indulgences of the flesh, the avoidance of such little things as these goes far to make up, at least, the negative beauty of a holy life."

What is faith as set forth in Heb. 11? Well, there are differences of opinion, but the best definition we have seen of late is from the pen of Rev. H. A. Brown, of Winston-Salem, N. C. In a recent issue of the Biblical Recorder, he puts it this way: "The word faith is a very comprehensive term. It yields itself to a variety of applications in its every-day use, but as used in the quotation from Jude 3, it means the embodiment of doctrine—a system of teaching; a gospel of salvation; a mannor of life and a zeal for truth." Now, look at the question of faith from that standpoint and see if your understanding of it is not readily enlarged.

Rev. J. H. Jowett, the distinguished English preacher, has a good word for all who will read and heed, as follows: "How can I let in the love of God? Chiefly by thinking about it. If I meditate upon it, it will steal into my soul as the sweet air into the open chamber. And then see what happens. Once admit the energy of the divine love, and all things are subdued unto itself. Because I am beloved, I shall find myself able to love. Recollect the importance of details. Life is made up of steps and incidents and trifles. 'He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much.' One way to attain unto a fine walk is to hold company with those that possess it. We, too, shall strive after a finer carriage if we hold company with our Lord. 'Oh, for a closer walk with God!'"

Why do people not read the Bible more? Very few of the people read the Bible as a pleasure and for the spiritual benefit they may derive from its teachings. Keep your eyes open and you will see many men reading the papers at least once a day, but there are many people you will not see reading their Bibles once a week, once a month, once a year. Which class do you belong to? It is good to have a Bible in your house, but if it is not read at all, then it cannot do you much good, if any. The Bible is the best-selling book in the world, and with a few it is the best-read book in the world; but with the rest of the people, what shall we say—they are not what we might call good Bible readers, and the less is theirs.

The Herald and Presbyter gives a word of timely warning to the people of this country when it says: "It is announced that the Ancient Order of Hibernians at Montreal last week was urged by its president to 'wage war' on the Ku-Klux Klan, who said that the Unity League of America has been organized to combat the Klan in the United States. The great zeal of this Roman Catholic order to destroy the Klan tends to arouse very much more than a suspicion that this and some other threatening Roman Catholic organizations need themselves to be carefully watched and are a genuine menace to the country. Bodies, such as these fighting Hibernians, that announce their mission and purpose to destroy those whom they do not like, are a danger to our civilization, and should be carefully guarded against."

"I do thank you for the fine paper you edit. May God bless you."—Rev. A. E. Cortner, Albany, Ind. Thank you, Bro. Cortner. We have known of Bro. Cortner's loyalty to evangelical truth for many years, and we are glad to know that as he grows older he grows more loyal to the truth. Bro. Cortner is soon to issue a book on Job, which we trust many of our readers will enjoy. We are wondering if Bro. C. has given consideration to the thought presented in Job 2:3, especially the last part of that verse. Who can explain how it was that Satan moved God to destroy Job without cause? How was such a thing possible? How could a finite being move the infinite One to destroy the man who was true to God, and without cause? We should like to have the thought of some of our best men and women on that question.

And what do you think of this fact? The United States has now approximately one hundred and ten millions of population, and of this number sixty-four per cent are non-churchgoers. Over one-half of the population of our country does not go to Church. A majority vote carries the election. If that is true, when applied to population, then our country is not a Christian nation, and if not a Christian nation what sort of a nation is it? It may be this or that, but one thing is sure, and that is we need to get up early and bestir ourselves to get the people to going to Church. And there is yet one more step that is even more important, and that is to get the people converted and regenerated. However it may be, if we should get people to going to Church regularly, there might be a good chance to get many of them converted. Let us get busy in inducing people to go to Church. That will be a great way to improve the same. Let this not be a matter of talk merely, but let us get busy and go after the non-churchgoers. We have no time to lose if we are to win them to Christ.

Prof. P. J. Kernodle, managing editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, was in Elon last Friday on his way home from the Georgia and Alabama Conferences, where he declared the work is in a fine and growing condition. He believes the future for our work in those States is good. He was also at Wadley and Bethlehem College. He says the work is much handicapped because the buildings are not finished, but the work is going forward. They expect to have the main college building completed by Christmas. The outlook, he declares, is good. Let us all hope for most gratifying results, and by all means do not forget to send them a "V" as help to complete their building. All money should be sent to Rev. G. D. Hunt, Wadley, Ala. Five dollars now may be worth more than ten might be at some other time, and for the reason that the need is very great just now.

The way the world does things is to hide the ugly things in the life and then make public the good things. But that is not God's way. If a good man goes astray in God's service, He does not spare him. You remember that when something went wrong with David, a man after God's own heart, he sent Nathan to him to say: "Thou art the Man." No covering up the crime of a king even. And this is in harmony with the teachings of the Scriptures. An exchange puts the same thought in a similar way when it says: "If a man in high place does wrong, his office should not be a shield and protection for him. On the contrary, he should be accounted more culpable because of his larger responsibilities. It is a scriptural teaching that 'Unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required; and to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask more.' (Luke 12:48.)"

Here is a fine tribute to the character of Christ. It was written by Mr. S. D. Gordon, as follows: "The blacksmith was right. Ignorant, blasphemous, he railed on the man trying to sell him a Bible. The man deftly left a copy behind as he slipped out. The blacksmith began reading. Caught, surprised, startled, he sprang up, crying, 'There's a man in the book.' Yes, there is a Man in the Book. That's the outstanding thing. Look at him. Born in obscure poverty, cradled among cattle, his home in an unsavory village, among people intensely clannish, he had no touch with schools, never traveled far, had no book, except one, and wrote none, left no organization, and died a death of peculiar shame. Yet within three days after, he was seen alive, and within three centuries he changed the calendar of imperial Rome. It is fascinating in these older leaves to get fleeting glimpses of an unusual man. He talks with childless Abraham under the blue, and used the twinkling stars to number Abraham's unborn heirs. He wrestled one dark night with crafty Jacob, and gives the strange soft touch which bends that rugged chieftain's will. He meets intrepid Joshua at Canaan's gateway, calmly gives orders, and is obeyed. He talks with cautious Gideon and the nation's long captivity becomes overwhelming victory. Strong Samson's father is overawed to find the Man talking with him strangely no mere man. The Jewish statesman administering the world's empire of the Euphrates is dazed by a Man of Fire in a blinding blaze of light. At first it is simply a man, in outer appearance, in tone of voice, in garb, in the interest shown. Then, quietly, unmistakably, comes indescribable overpowering evidence that he is not simply a man. And there is something more that runs along with these fleeting glimpses. There is an unusual man coming. These glimpses merely illustrate the meaning of that. That same childless exile of Ur is told that through his unborn son will come a man who will bless the race. Sightless old Israel, on the Nile, sees a Man coming to lead the race. The foremost racial lawyer speaks of a Man coming to do for all what he does for the Hebrews. The royal poet sings sweetly of a Man coming to rule, and do it right, and be as a benediction to the earth, fragrant of the dew of the new morning."

CONCERNING THE PRINCIPLES WHICH THE WORLD NEEDS.

EDITOR OF THE CHRISTIAN SUN:

Dear Sir,—On a recent reading of Mr. Wilson's "Road Away From Revolution," I was strongly impressed with the ideas hereinafter set forth.

I accept fully Mr. Wilson's conclusion that the only safe and sure way to allay the present unrest prevalent in the world and to avoid a possible bloody revolution in our own country west, is that of securing a general acceptance and reduction to practice of the principles and sentiments embraced in the teachings of Jesus Christ.

At once, there recurs to my mind a question that has lain in my mind for many years, to-wit: has there ever been, or is there now, in existence any considerable body or organization of Christians that presents to the world those principles, sentiments and practices of Jesus Christ and His early followers in such form, unhampered and unobscured by needless, false and distracting additions and excrescences as may be reasonably expected, within a reasonable time, to win the general acceptance of our people generally and promote their effective reduction to practice to the extent desired and thought necessary not only by Mr. Wilson, but intelligent and thoughtful people generally?

My answer to this question has long been "No" —there is not—or, if there is, such a body has not yet come prominently into view. In an effort to settle this question definitely and finally for myself, I have been led to think that I may get some light on the subject by a better knowledge of the principles and practice of your Church or denomination.

I beg, therefore, that you will, either directly or through your publishing house, send me copies of the doctrinal standards, rules of order and forms of worship of your Church, for which I will pay, when received, the reasonable price which I take for granted will be asked for them. I have in former years had some acquaintance, and pleasant acquaintance, with Rev. J. W. Wellons, of your body, who, if living, must be quite old by this time; and later with Rev. J. P. Barrett.

Also, please send me a specimen copy of your paper, with terms of subscription per year or shorter period.

Very truly yours,

C. H. H. SCOTT.

Drawer P, Staunton, Va.

Yes, Bro. Scott, the Rev. J. W. Wellons is living, now in his ninety-eighth year, but in pretty fair health. The present editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN remembers you well, and will be glad to hear from you again.—EDITOR.

ELON NOTES.

Commencement for the current school year, May 25-27th, inclusive, shows a program of more than usual interest. Announcement has just been made of the roster of speakers for this occasion, which list includes the names of Drs. Walter S. Athearn, H. Shelton Smith, Alva M. Kerr, and President W. A. Harper.

Dr. Athearn, who is dean of the school of religious education and social service of Boston University, has made for himself a name in the work of religious education, and is, without doubt, the most eminent authority in the world today on this subject. His life service as college professor and author especially fits him to bring a message to students on such an occasion. He will give the literary address on the final day of commencement.

Dr. Kerr will open the commencement season on Sunday morning with the baccalaureate sermon. Dr. Kerr is editor of the oldest religious periodical in the world, the Herald of Gospel Liberty, and those of the Elon students who have had opportunity to hear him on former occasions know something of the good things that are in store for them at commencement. He has a way of winning young people and holding them with the interesting messages he brings.

Dr. Smith, of the class of 1917, will give the alumni oration. He is now with the Board of Christian Education of the American Christian Convention as field secretary of administration and leadership-training. His work, to a great extent, is with the college students, and it will be a pleasure for his friends to hear him here in May.

President Harper, as has been his usual custom, will give the baccalaureate address again this year at the Sunday night session of the commencement. His address to the senior class each year on commencement always holds a wealth of food for thought and action.

Work on the auditorium building is progressing steadily, and it is hoped will be completed long before commencement. The holding of the first commencement services in the new auditorium building will mark a new period of development and growth for Elon. With no auditorium last year, the commencement exercises were held on the campus and on a temporarily constructed stage, but with the new auditorium completed, the commencement exercises will be held under more favorable conditions and will be much more impressive. It may be that the dedication exercises of the new auditorium building will be held at commencement.

J. J. Blair, of the State Department of Public Instruction, Raleigh, N. C., was here recently on a visit to the college. He made a thorough inspection of the new building, and the building program details, and spoke of them in the highest terms, saying that Elon would be the best-equipped college for carrying on its work of instruction that he knew of. He pronounced the plans as far eclipsing anything he had expected to see here.

Following the vote of the citizens of the community in establishing a community Church, committees were elected, as follows, at the mass-meeting last night:

Civic improvement—J. J. Lambeth, W. P. Lawrence, C. D. Johnston, W. C. Jeffcoat, and Mrs. W. A. Harper.

Health and sanitation—S. W. Caddell, D. W. Brown, Lucian Moore, Mrs. W. P. Lawrence, and Mrs. A. P. Perkins.

Social activities—L. W. Vaughan, W. F. Greenwood, Mrs. J. A. Hornaday, Miss Mary D. Atkinson, and Miss Marion Lee Newman.

The community Church idea is meeting with enthusiasm here by all citizens of the community, and is expected to take a very important and active place in the life of the community, especially with reference to the duties of the above-named committees.

C. M. CANNON.

All persons expecting to attend the Western North Carolina Christian Conference, which convenes November 6, 7 and 8, at the Christian Church at Ether, N. C., will please notify Hamor G. Cochran, chairman of the entertainment committee.

SOBER AND SENSIBLE WORDS.

We are living in a day of many upheavals, and that is not necessarily a day of evil. However, an upheaval may be good or it may be bad. If an upheaval be bad, the situation may be dangerous. If it be good, it may be a day of hope. So to determine whether we are in a day of dangers, we must determine whether the current upheavals are good or not good.

This is a period in the world's modern history when the old, settled customs, habits and institutions are being shaken. If any of these are left standing, we may take it that that fact in itself is evidence of solidity and vitality. This shaking up in the world's politics, in the religious thought of moderns, in the work of scientists and in the industrial life of the people, is only an added proof of the shaking up that is going on. Some people are pleased to see this shaking up taking place, because to them it is a sign of progress; but is progress always a good thing? We believe the right answer to this question will be found not in the matter of mere progress, but in the fact that to be desirable, progress must be in the right direction and in line with truth.

There has been great progress in Russia in recent years, but how many well-balanced men and women will rejoice in Russia's progress? Not many, we think; not that the average man does not like to see progress in the world in religion, politics, industry, science and art, but they do not appreciate Russia's progress in recent years, and they do not because they believe that her progress has been in a backward direction. That is a good reason for not appreciating that progress. Russia has been making great progress during the last several years, but the strides have been backward, as many of us think, and that means that nothing favorable to Russia has been accomplished, and instead of being set forward by her progress, she has been set far back, and now it will take years under the best possible management to regain what progress backward has been lost to Russia.

It is easily clear to thinking people that we ought to be careful of the progress we make, lest we go backward and so lose more, far more, than we gain. The progress Russia has experienced in the last few years in its backward tendencies may be paralleled by the progress the Church has been making along some special lines of thought in a similar period. In each instance, progress has been backward, and now it may, and most likely will, take years to regain what has already been lost. Even if the backward progress should now be arrested, it will still be a long time before what has been lost is fully regained.

May we point out the matter of loss, not by any word of ours, but by the message of a strong and learned man, who seems to know what he is talking about. Some of us who are not so learned might be discounted because of our lack of learning, but the sober words of a learned man may at least arrest attention and secure earnest consideration on the part of those who may have been helping to make progress backwards, even though they thought they were making progress forward. Some abler, and perhaps better, men have found themselves mistaken in what they had honestly thought was real progress. They found their mistake by stopping and listening to the other side.

Here we have sober and sensible words from one of the country's learned men. Surely we cannot be blamed for asking a hearing for him as to his view of some of the progress we have been making in recent years along important lines of religious thought. Stop and frankly face the issue—have we gained or lost by the changes that have come to unsettling the faith of the common people in the reliability of the Bible as the Word of God? Listen to Professor Robert William Rogers, Ph.D. (Leipzig), S. T. D. Litt. D., L.L. D., F. R. G. S., for thirty years a teacher of Hebrew and Old Testament exegesis, Drew Theological Seminary:

"The Bible is still our only basis. I say it boldly, for there is no alternative offered that deserves a moment's consideration. The great preachers have all been preachers whose message was squarely founded on or sprang from Holy Writ. Where is there an exception? I have yet to hear his name. It is true that sciolists appear from time to time and gather a following for a season, but their influence is weak, their endurance brief, and to predicate greatness of them were laughable. From Chrysostom to Cadman the great preachers have thundered Sinai and pleaded Calvary. It is absurd as well a ssilly to seek another way, and they who do are goats and not sheep, not feeding in sweet meadows on lush grass, but picking at wild hedges or poisoned cacti. The Bible has the story, the whole satisfying story of God's revelations to men, and they who know it and preach it shall not want for hearers, or their hearers' comfort in their sorrows and guidance in their doubtings. But the Bible is a very big Book, and they who have really begun to know it have spent a long lifetime upon its riches."—Exchange.

DOES SCHEMING IN GOD'S SERVICE EVER PAY?

If it does, we know nothing of it. When men scheme to carry a point, failure follows. It may follow soon, or it may follow late; but failure follows. We have heard of such a thing as "log-rolling," as "pulling wires" and operating the "steam roller," and all to carry a point in one's plans—plans made of man or by man, without such a thought as to whether it is in God's plans, whether it will meet His approval, or whether it will contribute to the upbuilding of the cause of Christ. The one point to be gained seems to be: Will it carry my plans through? Will it serve my purposes? That is selfish and cannot have the favor of God.

We may wish to have many things come to pass just because they will serve our plans, our intentions and our purposes, no matter whether such a thing will serve the purposes of God or not. This is unwise, dangerous and harmful to the cause we represent, as well as to ourselves. It would be well if we could all come to the point of submission to God and seek to have Him lead us in all of our planning, for if He lead us not, and if He does not give us success, it will not come. We once knew a minister who was a decided success in seeking to have everything go his way. We heard him say on one occasion: "If he (referring to another brother, to whom the Church had given certain work to be done) will not do as we wish, we will build a fire under him and make him do it." That is the way of the schemer, but it is never a safe way.

The principle for which we are pleading is abundantly illustrated in the life of Jacob, the old patriarch of early times. From the time he acted surreptitiously with his own father and brother, he was continuously in trouble. Everything he tried to do seemed in some way to turn against him. At the suggestion of his mother, he deceived his father and cheated his brother. After this it was but a short time till his brother Esau sought to murder him, and not a great while till his Uncle Laban took advantage of Jacob, deceiving him badly. Then his son Reuben committed an outrageous act, to his exceeding humiliation, and following closely on his footsteps Simeon and Levi played a dastardly part toward Jacob; later his sons imposed upon him by selling Joseph and leaving their father to believe that Joseph had been killed by wild beasts or murdered, and later he was robbed, as he thought, of his sons by the man in Egypt, holding one as a hostage in order to make sure of seeing Benjamin. Later still, Jacob was forced by a famine to go into Egypt, and in a strange land he died. Thus we see retribution on his path from the time he deceived his father and cheated his brother to the day of his death. What a lesson against scheming in order to carry your point or to have your own way! Jacob speaks to us in his life in thunder tones against scheming in order to carry your point—it is a most dangerous business.

It is not necessarily wrong to carry your point and get things done in your way, but this must be done, not by scheming, but by doing only the right thing and submitting all to God, that His way may prevail, and for the reason that we may be wrong in our thoughts and plans; but God is always right, and therefore His way is infinitely better than our way. We ought to know that if we carry our way, as against the plans and purposes of God, that it will surely come to nought, our plans will fail, and for the reason that they were selfish and wrong. As a matter of fact, God cannot let our selfish plans succeed, and He cannot because they are wrong. You may build a fire under some man to make him do as you wish him to do, but that will not establish your way nor prevent terrible disappointment from coming upon your life. To do right, and without scheming to have our way, is the only safe way for men who fear God to act and live. The great need of the individual is not to have his own way over the way of God, but to get complete victory over himself—that will be the greatest triumph in any man's life, for when we get victory over self, then we bring our lives into submission to God, and submission to God always means the best thing for ourselves and our loved ones, and for the cause of Christ. If you cannot have your way with a brother without building a fire under him to make him do as you wish, then it would be infinitely better not to have your way, but fall in with the way of the Lord, for His way is always right and cannot be wrong. With God in His way, you are always safe.

BY THEIR FRUITS YE SHALL KNOW THEM.

A dancing craze seems to be sweeping the earth, or well nigh so. We did hope our evangelical Churches might escape this craze, but alas! we read that some of the "straightest sects" have fallen. For instance, we have recently read in a fine Presbyterian paper that the First Presbyterian Church of New York City, the one to which Dr. Fosdick, a Baptist minister, preaches, has come now to open its circle to the dance as a means of "holding the young people." Alas! only a few weeks ago we saw it heralded by the press to the people of this country that Dr. Fosdick was winning, by his ministry,, the young people—that he was saving the young folks to the Church and the inference was he was doing it by preaching his new ideas and unfolding the new knowledge which modernism has brought to Christianity. Alas! and has it come to this so soon, that the man who was such a blessing to the faith of the young people of this day, has already lost his hold on them, so that now, in order "to hold these young people," his Church has felt constrained to open its circle to the dances, and now, we believe, have a dance once a week for the young men and women of that Church. We really were not expecting such a tumble to the world so soon as this under the preaching of the most brilliant modernist in the United States. But the worst of it all is that, even among our Presbyterians, that Church is not alone. The Presbyterian paper tells us that the young people's society in a New Jersey Presbyterian Church not long since, gave a prededication dance in the new parish house of that Church. Then we are told that a Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia, a few months ago, at its annual congregational meeting, cleared the lecture room of chairs after the business meeting had been hurried through, and officially danced till after midnight. In another Presbyterian Church, one of the largest in New Jersey, when it dedicated its new parish house, announced in its official publication that dancing will be permitted on certain evenings of the week, if properly supervised. There is one other instance in New Jersey (we cannot tell how many more), where the brotherhood of that Church recently placarded the city and the community in this way: "A comedy and farce will be given by the Presbyterian Brotherhood in the High School auditorium. Dancing after the show." Again, in Philadelphia, a Presbyterian Church holds its social and business meetings at the home of one of its members, whose father's barn the young people use as a dance hall until the small hours of the morning. Again, an Italian Presbyterian Church in New Jersey is advised to use its social room as a dance hall in order "to hold the young people." A concecrated deaconess protested, but it availed nothing—they danced. Then the authorities accepted her resignation as a deaconess.

Now, if that is not a pretty mess for Churches claiming Jesus Christ as their Saviour! Let us make a guess: We guess that in every one of these six instances of dancing Churches that their pastors are close of kin in modernism to Dr. Fosdick, of New York City. Alas! surely you may know a tree by the fruit it bears. Dancing in the Church seems to be one of the newer fruits of modernism.

THE RELIGION OF CHRIST IS BASED ON A FACT.

One solid fact is worth a thousand theories. One outstanding thought of God is worth a thousand human speculations. One man who stands like a certain celebrated general, like a stone wall, is worth a thousand men who have no certain dwelling-place, so far as divine thought is concerned. If there was ever a day in the history of Christianity when we need men who fear God and revere His truth, that day is now.

We fear, in many instances, excellent people do not realize the estimate God puts upon His truth. There are men and women who seem to think of the truths God has given to us, in His Book, as matters of little consequence. They may or may not accept them—just as they wish—and they seem satisfied to believe that it is perfectly satisfactory with God, just as though God had given us a lot of philosophical speculations to be accepted or rejected as we may please. But, beloved, that is not true. The truth which God has given us is of the highest value in the matter of saving the lost. God has put great value upon His truth in the work He is doing for the salvation of the world. If that is true, as we believe it is, then when God gave us His truth He did so for wise and holy purposes. His truth is the foundation of man's faith in the matter of everlasting life. It is the Gibralter of his salvation.

We pity the man or the woman who can bring himself to such a state of heart and mind, when he feels free to treat lightly a thing so sacred as to be the foundation for the happiness of men everywhere. Certainly, without the truth of God, we could have no promise either of life everlasting or eternal happiness. If God's Word cannot be depended upon as to these two questions, then we have nothing upon which to depend. There is nothing else that has such a promise for the life that now is and for the life that is to come as has the Bible. Now, if a part of its truth can be laid aside at will, why may we not lay it all aside in the same way? And then, if we lay it all aside, we have nothing on which to build the real life for time or for eternity. If so, what can we gain by laying aside what God has given us as instruction in such matters? Suppose we all agree to lay aside the Bible as too antiquated for our times, then what shall we gain in the way of something to take its place? Not one of the objectors to the truth of the Bible has dared to offer us something to take its place. Under such circumstances, what can we hope to gain by laying aside the Bible? Science cannot give us a hope of salvation and life everlasting. It has not one thing to offer to us except human wisdom, and men know not God by human wisdom. Do you wish to go through life without hope? If not, then you must tie up to the Bible or tie up to nothing. How do you fancy you would like to face death and eternity without God and without hope in the world?

The Bible is full of truth, truth which we need to find the way of life.

You might as well face a storm at sea without chart and compass as to face death and eternity without the truths of the Bible, which were given us for the express purpose of pointing to us the way of life.

There are many who do not hesitate to lay aside this truth, or that, and without any respect as to whether they are vital and fundamental or not.

In our day it is quite common to reject the doctrine of the resurrection, but do such men keep in mind that when they reject the resurrection they are rejecting Christianity as a whole, and for the reason if the resurrection be not true, then Christianity as a whole is doomed—it is false. Some seem to get around it by saying: "Oh! the resurrection is spiritual," and so they hope to creep out of the whole thing with flying colors; but they are mistaken If the resurrection of the body is not taught in the Scriptures, then there is no resurrection at all. Did not Paul meet this very class of objectors by saying, "What advantageth it me if the dead rise not?" It is not the resurrection of the spirit, for, so far as we know, there is no burial for a spirit. Paul said, "If the dead rise not." If Paul was right, as we believe he was, then it is the dead body that is to rise. When a person denies the resurrection of the body, it is clear, as we think, that that person's trouble is unbelief, and unbelief shuts men and women out of heaven, and in hell.

It is the resurrection, or Christianity is a myth! We believe in Christianity, and we believe in the resurrection unto life eternal. Resurrection is a fact, and on it the salvation of the soul rests.

An exchange has a fine word along this line, as follows:

"To be a witness with us of His resurrection" was the reason for the disciples' chosing a successor to Judas Iscariot. At Pentecost, Peter's theme was the resurrection, and he explicitly declared that the risen Christ alone made possible that day with its power. The early disciples, when ordered to speak no more in the name of Jesus, gave as the reason why they should obey God rather than men that God had raised Jesus from the dead. The climax, as well as central theme, of Paul's preaching on Mars Hill was the resurrection of Christ. Paul before Felix declared, "Touching the resurrection of the dead, I am called in question by you this day." Paul with all the passion of his great heart, was speaking of the resurrection when Festus cried: "Paul, thou art beside thyself; much learning hath made thee mad." This same man, on another occasion, wrote, "I have fought with beasts at Ephesus; what advantageth it me if the dead rise not?" Paul went even further than all this. He staked the whole cause of Christ and Christianity upon the one fact, namely: the resurrection of Jesus Christ. It has been said that the Christian religion is the religion of a Person. To be a bit more specific, as far as Paul was concerned, it was the religion of a fact. Not the cross, but the empty timb is the one central object of the Christian religion. Not a dying Christ, but an ever-risen Lord is the center of the world's hope."

BEST WAY FOR A PREACHER TO DO IT.

We have heard of such things, but not many of us know how to do them. We have heard it said that preachers have not much practical sense, but most of us know that is not true. But even a preacher ought to know how to do the most important things in his life and to do them well. A man may know how to do a half-dozen things well, but of them all he will know how to do one better than all the rest, and that is the one to which he might do well to give the most of his time to.

With most of us preachers, the one most important thing that we have to do, and ought to be sure to do it well every time we try, is preaching, for that is our main work in life. If it be done well, it will get for us a blessed reward, and if done poorly it will not get us much of anything, except failure and disappointment.

We find in the Sunday School Times the following poem, which attempts, and quite successfully, too, as we see it, to tell us preachers how to have good congregations. It is worth a trial, and we should like to hear privately from as many ministers among our people, or others, as will undertake to do the way Miss Tobias says is the best way for a preacher to keep his congregations growing and attentive. She says:

The Best Way.

Puzzled and sore perplexed,
The doctors disagreed
On a question old and vexed—
A most insistent need.

To fill the empty pews,
And hold their congregations,
What methods should they use,
What modern innovations?

A humble pastor rose,
Preacher and farmer too;
He said: "I scarce suppose
You'd call my method new.

But I have found that folks
Are very much like sheep;
You never have to coax
Where the grass grows deep.

He thumbed a well-worn Book—
Strange grew the silence there.
At length a learned brother spoke
"Let us unite in prayer!"

ELON LETTER.

The General Board of the Christian Church met in Dayton, October 18-19, following the sessions of the departmental boards on the 15-17th. The General Board consists of all the departmental board members, the general convention officers, the college presidents, the editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, and two members at large, Dr. C. H. Rowland and Dr. E. A. Watkins. Some fifty members constitute it, and when it is in session it is a very impressive body.

This General Board of our Church is one of the finest steps we have ever taken to give unity and coherence to our work. Some of us had our doubts as to its place when the plan was projected, but the sessions held last year and this have convinced us all that here is an agency necessary for a consistently progressive program.

The departmental boards meet and carefully consider the reports of their secretaries. They then formulate their plans and expense budgets for the ensuing year. These boards are manned by experts, but, like experts, they may make the error of overspecialization. They must bring in written reports of all that has been achieved and of all that is planned for the future for the consideration of the General Board, and no action of a departmental board is final until the General Board has approved.

This procedure is beneficial in three vital directions. It insures the keenest possible caution on the part of the departmental boards in arriving at their plans and programs, because they realize if there are any weaknesses in them the General Board will discover them and make amendment accordingly. It also permits unity of action on the part of all the departments as well as prevents duplication of their efforts. In the third place, it puts the stamp of approval of the whole Church on the program of every department. This gives a splendid advantage in the approach to the local constituencies.

The Board of Christian Education, the youngest departmental board, has been especially fortunate in having the General Board as its sympathetic critic and strong ally in its infant days. Nothing has contributed so helpfully to this board as the consciousness that behind all it had undertaken stood the united ranks of a democratic Church; approval for all plans having been secured after full and frank discussion of all aims and projects. And what is true of our board is likewise correspondingly true of all the others.

The General Board of our Church fills a long-felt need in our organizational life.

GOD'S HIGH MOUNTAINS.

*"Jesus * * * withdrew again into the mountain Himself alone."*—John 6:15.

Jesus loved the mountains. He frequently turned to them. Here He separated Himself from the busy human stream of the valleys below. The "father of the faithful" (Abraham) chose the mountain route when he traveled from Ur and idolatry. Moses met God in the mountains and came down with a shining face and the words of the law. This law was necessary to God's redemption plan, although "by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified" (Gal. 2:16). "For as many as are of the works of the law are under a curse" (Gal. 3:10). "That no man is justified by the law before God is evident." On Calvary, law was transformed, for all who believe on Jesus, to love. So from Sinai to Golgotha, it guarded God's chosen as a mighty schoolmaster, condemning disobedient by the thousands throughout many generations until it finally fixed its curse on Jesus Christ, who carried it again into the mountain (Calvary) Himself alone, when in one awful hour He transformed it into love! "Christ redeemed us from the curse of the law, having become a curse for us." Moses, who received the law, came down with a shining face. Jesus suffered its curse for us, and was brought down with blood-clots upon His cold brow in order that we might go free and be saved by faith alone. Praise His name forever!

But I didn't start out to preach a sermon. I meant to say that before and since, especially since Jesus' days on earth, there has been an inexpressible glory about God's high mountains. Often I have read that it was so. I am seeing now for myself, just as the citizens of Sychar did when they followed the Samaritan woman back to the well, that it is true. I have been here (Alleghany Springs) only a week, but that has been long enough for me to become attached to the mountains, which stand guard over the south fork of that crooked, rapid stream, known here as Roanoke River. Little mountain streams race down to join its crystal flow. Between two of these streams stretches out a great green carpet several acres in size and reaching from the river to well up on the mountainside. A straight row of one-story cottages run the length of the lawn. The hotel has been burned, reducing the housing capacity from seven hundred to seventy persons. The spring water is famous for its curative qualities for all ailments of the stomach.

But I didn't start out to praise this beautiful old place, nor the famous water, nor the friendly guests, nor the fine, oh! delicious food. I meant to say there has ever been an inexpressible glory about God's high mountains. I am not strong enough yet to climb to the top of the highest ones, but I have sought out a choice high place commanding a view of the Roanoke River and the beautiful mountains that dove-tail down into its crooked course. Hither I resort daily. Daily I read there from John's gospel. For hours, under the glory of the going-down sun, I read, and meditate and pray. Frequently, from the cottages down below, I hear the laughter of light-hearted merrymakers, the roar of the cascading stream, and the contented tinkling of cowbells, and I read in the Book in my hands, "All things were made by Him."

As I watch the changing light on the pretty green mountains, I exclaim, "Who could doubt the love or the existence of God?" And again I read: "Believest, thou? Thou shall see greater things than these." In my imagination I picture John the Baptist preaching to an assembled crowd in the valley below, a figure in a long, seamless robe approaches that multitude, and a little louder than he has been preaching, I can hear John say, "Behold, the lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world." In these moments, there comes a longing that I might see Him and hear Him speak, and the Book in my hand has the words, "I that speak to thee am He." And I feel that indeed He is near, for in my soul is burning a love for the brethren bigger than my little self; a desire to go down and tell many of Christ's undying love; a prayer that broken-hearted sinners and discouraged Christians may say with me:

"Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were an offering far too small;
Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my soul, my life, my all."

Thus the beauty I see in the view about me turns my thoughts toward God and His beloved Son—it is the inexpressible glory of God's high mountains! JOHN G. TRUITT.

A PLAIN TALK ON SOME VITAL QUESTIONS.

MY DEAR BROTHER EDITOR:

Let me have a few words with our people, through THE SUN columns. What I have to say is for the W. C. T. U. especially, and all law-abiding citizens.

Are we not in duty bound to keep up with the laws of our land? Let us remind ourselves that we have a voice in our law-making as well as in our law-breaking. Are we as deeply interested in the child-welfare problems as we should be?

Some of us have reared our children, and now we think we could do better perhaps, now that so much greater efforts are put forth for education and child culture. Do not look for a second chance to rear and train your children. They have been reared, but we have grandchildren, and these should deepen our interest in childhood. How can we get hold on them till young parents have been educated?

Are we interested or not in the laws of our country to preserve the sacredness of matrimony? I fear some of our ministers, as well as laymen, may meet their Lord with that part of the Scriptures left out. They seem delighted to join together people in holy wedlock "till death do us part," but then do not some of our preachers, after saying "for better or for worse," argue and contend that we should be loosed by law that we may go and be joined to another? Did not Jesus say for the hardness of your hearts Moses did write a bill of divorcement to permit a man to put away his wife?

Let me tell you, brothers and sisters, until our homes are pure and clean, all alcoholic liquors and narcotic drugs abandoned, our children will continue to be weakened in nerve force, and they will have muddled brains. When the love of God is ruled out and the Holy Spirit can have no resting-place, or the right of way in such homes. Even Jesus is not given a welcome, and of course, under such conditions, the life of the people cannot be lifted up.

It is sad, serious, for parents not to think of the poor little helpless ones, coming into the world to fill insane asylums. It seems heart-rending to think that sometimes there are natural-born thieves and liars, and it is the outcome of the abominable stuff which men (and sometimes women) put into their stomachs, which makes them more like beasts than human beings. The iniquity of the fathers are visited on the children unto the third and fourth generations.

Do we not often hear women say, "But men do not think their wives have anything to do with their business or conduct as to what they eat and drink, but do as they please. Right here I wish to say, mothers can and should have to do with what comes into their homes, as well as to govern the conduct of their husbands and children in their homes. God will take care of a trusting heart who tries to teach her boys to be as pure and clean as girls of God's creation. May God help us to get at the tree of evil and cut it out at once.

GEORGIA AND ALABAMA CONFERENCE

The Georgia and Alabama Conference dates back to the days of Nathan Smith, Jacob Callahan and Wytch Elder, who were pioneers of the Christian Church in Georgia. Traveling preachers were in Georgia as early as 1806. Rev. Wytch M. J. Elder entered the ministry about the year 1824; thus we see that the Christian Church in Georgia has rounded out a hundred years, and more. Churches were established in Harris and Stewart Counties and other places. A disaffection occurred in 1838. The Georgia Conference is spoken of as meeting near Millidgeville in the year 1847, and was reorganized in 1853 under the name of the Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference. New Hope Church was organized about the year 1850, in Chambers County, and in 1855 the Conference was held at New Hope. About the year 1898, this Conference had grown to such proportions that it was deemed wise to divide it into two—the Georgia and Alabama Conference and the Alabama Conference. These Conferences, which have just held their twenty-fifth annual session since their division and reorganizations, are now engaged in building Bethlehem College at Wadley, Ala.

This year, the Georgia and Alabama Conference held its sessions with the Church at Vanceville, four miles east of Tifton, Ga. The Conference was called to order by Rev. H. M. Gray, vice-president, who conducted the devotional services.

Ministers and delegates present were enrolled. Conference was duly organized by the election of the following officers: Rev. H. M. Gray, president; Rev. H. W. Elder, vice-president; Rev. R. A. Whitten, secretary; J. H. Abell, assistant secretary; H. B. Floyd, treasurer. The following special committees were appointed: Rev. H. W. Elder and Walker Pearson, on resolutions, and Revs. R. A. Whitten and W. W. Willingham, committee on place of meeting. Adjourned to meet tomorrow at 9 A. M.

Second Day.—Devotional services, led by Rev. A. H. Sheppard. Minutes of previous session read and approved. Report of executive committee read and adopted. The report of the committee on religious literature was read by Rev. R. A. Whitten, chairman. THE CHRISTIAN SUN was represented by P. J. Kernodle, managing editor. The report was adopted. Church and ministerial reports were presented and read. Time for preaching having arrived, Rev. G. D. Hunt preached a forceful sermon. Adjourned for dinner.

The afternoon session began with devotional services conducted by Rev. P. L. Duke. It was decided to hold the next Conference with the Church at Lanett, Ala. By common consent, the report of the committee on education was presented by Rev. H. W. Elder, chairman. After an address by Prof. M. W. Hook, president of Bethlehem College, and discussion by Dr. T. H. Denny, W. Stephenson and others, the report was adopted. Next followed the report on moral reform, read by Rev. C. W. Hanson, which, after discussion, was adopted.

The report on home missions was read, and the discussion led by Rev. H. W. Elder. T. J. Holland and S. D. Lankford presented the report on superannuation, which was adopted. Adjourned.

The evening session met at 7:30 P. M. Devotion services led by Rev. W. W. Willingham. The annual session of the Christian Missionary Association was presided over by Rev. H. W. Elder, president. Several new members were added. The following mission board was elected: Rev. H. W. Elder, Walker Pearson, and Rev. C. W. Hanson. Rev. R. A. Whitten was chosen special agent.

The woman's board reported the following officers: Mrs. J. H. Abell, president; Mrs. W. H. Dermond, vice-president; Mrs. W. A. Hand, secretary; Mrs. J. S. Stephenson, treasurer; Mrs. Ina Gray, superintendent young people's work.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention was organized by the election of Rev. R. A. Whitten, president; Rev. W. W. Willingham, vice-president; Miss Almyer Goodwin, secretary and treasurer. Rev. E. M. Carter was asked to represent "our Orphanage." Adjourned.

Third Day.—Devotional services led by Rev. A. C. Huckaby. Minutes approved. Delegates enrolled. Report on foreign missions presented by Rev. H. M. Gray, chairman. The report was adopted.

Reports on Sunday School and Christian Endeavor taken from the table, and after an interesting discussion and enthusiastic discussion were adopted. Miss Eldredge, field secretary, was represented by P. J. Kernodle, and fine addresses were made by Miss Pattie Coghill and Rev. E. M. Carter. Rev. R. A. Whitten, Rev. C. W. Hanson and G. F. Patridge were appointed a committee on Chautauqua.

The report of the treasurer was read and adopted.

The following candidates for the ministry were licensed by the president of the Conference: A. B. Mann, R. D. Benson, T. G. Gray.

The following were elected delegates to the next sessio nof the Southern Christian Convention: Ministers—H. M. Gray, H. W. Elder, C. W. Hanson; laymen—J. S. Stephenson, Walker Pearson, G. F. Patridge.

After a season of good-fellowship, the Conference adjourned. This Conference, like the Alabama Conference, took some forward steps. The session was inspirational. The Conference was hospitably entertained by the good people of the community. The Conference, by a rising vote, expressed its appreciation.—MANAGING EDITOR.

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

As secretary of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference and of the executive committee of the North Carolina Christian Conference, I am authorized to make the following announcements:

The North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference meets at Bethlehem Church, Alamance County, N. C., on the evening of November 13th. Delegates coming by train should notify Mr. Clyde Iseley, Burlington, N. C., R. F. D. They will be met at Elon College if notice is sent in advance.

The North Carolina Conference meets at Wake Chapel Church, Fuquay Springs, N. C., on the evening of November 20th. Delegates should notify the pastor, Rev. J. Lee Johnson, Fuquay Springs, N. C., and should go to that station by rail, where they will be met if notice is sent in advance.

All reports from Churches and ministers should be sent to the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference. That body will report to the North Carolina Conference.

W. A. HARPER, Secretary.

NOTICE, ARMY CHAPLAINS.

Despite continued effort, there are some sixty of the more than two thousand chaplains who served in the World War who were entitled to receive the chaplain's medal, to whom it has not yet been formally presented on account of inability to secure address. Any chaplain of the Protestant Churches who served under commission during the World War and who has not received the chaplain's medal should apply to Rev. E. O. Watson, secretary, general committee on army and navy chaplains, 937 Woodward Building, Washington, D. C.

When you lose your temper, you lose your peace.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

OUR THANKOFFERING.

Attention is called to the regular thankoffering service which is due to be held some time during the month of November. A suggested program has been arranged by Mrs. C. W. Johnson, chairman of the stewardship committee of the General Mission Board, Dayton, Ohio.

The reading, "Ezra and Me and the Boards," and the pageant, "Abraham's and Mathilda's First Real Thanksgiving," may be had by sending to Mrs. Emma S. Powers, room 25 C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio.

It is highly important that all our woman's and young people's societies observe this occasion, because the offering taken at this service will be applied to the building fund for homes for mission workers on our foreign fields. This is made doubly necessary since the recent great disaster in Japan. This is according to the ruling made by the Woman's Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention.

MRS. W. H. CARROLL,
Chairman.

WOMEN'S ACTIVITIES.

[NOTE.—The following splendid article was read in connection with the cradle roll report, by Mrs. W. H. Baker, at the Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference.—PATTIE COGHILL.]

THE CRADLE ROLL.

It has been said that "she who rocks the cradle rules the world." This may not be literally true, but she certainly determines very largely what the future of the world will be. It lies in her power, moreover, if she can only measure up to her opportunity, to make the largest one contribution toward making it the kind of world it ought to be.

The cradle is the center of the home's attraction, and rightly so. Grandmother is revered for what she has wrought and achieved. Mother is honored for the courage and fidelity with which she is facing present duties and solving present problems. But the infant lying in the cradle unable to lift its own head and with "no language but to cry," absolutely depends on the care of others is reverenced for what it may be, in it lie unlimited possibilities, "it doth not yet appear what it shall be."

To aid the mother in developing and directing those possibilities is the mission of the cradle roll, and what can be more important? Those dormant powers may be awakened without our touch, but whither they may be directed is the great problem. In the first age of the Christian era, and near the same date, were born two babes in the remote parts of the Roman Empire. They differ little in size or appearance, and one is just as helpless and dependent as the other. Their latent powers develop with the passing years—one becomes the cruel tyrant, Tiberius Caesar, a disgrace to the throne of Rome and a curse to his nation; the other becomes "the beloved disciple," John, whose life and spirit has been a benediction to all the succeeding ages.

Christ said, "Suffer the little children, and forbid them not to come unto Me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." We want to make it possible for the child who is Christ's by the divine right to "come unto Him" to bring Christ to the child in the life and spirit of the mother and those who work with her, and to bring it so early that the child will absorb it as part of its own life and never know any other.

To this high and holy mission our cradle roll department is dedicated. To start this work may be difficult in some places, but the difficulties can usually be overcome. Given some babies, and they are usually to be found, and then a woman with the mother heart and the Christ spirit, and the cradle roll can be started. All necessary information can be had for the asking from the various publishing houses. Real mothers are always glad to co-operate with the superintendent when they understand the significance of the cradle roll. The annual rally days become great events in the lives of the children, and the mothers enter with great delight into the joy of the children.

MRS. W. H. BAKER.

THE CONFERENCE AT NEW HOPE.

Although the Conference met earlier in the year than formerly, and despite the very inclement weather of the first day, there was a good attendance and an average delegation at the annual session of the Eastern North Carolina Conference at New Hope Church, in Franklin County, October 23-25. Dr. W. C. Wicker was the presiding officer, and delivered the annual address, chosing as a text 2 Cor. 3:17: "Where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." Dr. Wicker treated the topic "liberty" under four heads—(1) the spirit of religious liberty; (2) the spirit of brotherhood; (3) the spirit of education; (4) the spirit of service for mankind.

Dr. Wicker very pointedly set forth the cardinal principles of the Christian Church as vital principles of religious liberty. The principles are in themselves a guarantee of religious liberty to all who claim them and live by them. They are diametrically opposed to Roman Catholicism, with its claim to "divine rights" to control both Church and State. So eager is the Catholic Church for control that though they constitute only 12 per cent of the population, they fill 60 per cent of the Federal offices. Intolerance is not dead, much as we wish it were.

There is an equality before God—the equality of opportunity, as well as the equality of duties. The truly Christian college holds out the equality of privilege and opportunity. We need the undivided support of all our people for Elon College, which is our Christian college. We should have 500 students there, and by proper effort and co-operation we will have them. The teacher is next to the parent in influence on the child, and we should see to it that our boys and girls have Christian teachers.

If we are to serve mankind most and best, we must espouse the liberal principles of the Christian Church, and so inculcate the principles of a truly spiritual democracy. The world today needs the systematic application of the principles of the Christian Church. The address of Dr. Wicker was much enjoyed and made a profound impression.

One of the salient and wholesome features of the Conference was the Bible-study period at the opening of each session by Rev. J. Lee Johnson. Bro. Johnson is a close student of the Book, and drives home its truths with logical and forceful application.

Dr. J. P. Barrett, editor of THE SUN, and President W. A. Harper, of Elon College, were both on the program for addresses, but were unable to attend.

There are forty-seven Churches in the Conference, and of this number about thirty-five reported by delegate or by letter. About $2,400 was sent up to Conference for all purposes.

Rev. J. E. Franks, chairman, read the report on moral reform and made a very strong address in advocacy of better morals along many lines. Superintendent C. D. Johnston of the Christian Orphanage was present and very effectually represented the orphanage in a splendid address in behalf of the fatherless and motherless ones.

Rev. J. D. Wicker presented the report on home missions, and Rev. J. Fuller Johnson the report on foreign missions, and Bro. K. B. Johnson the report on superannuation.

Revs. J. Fuller Johnson and M. T. Sorrell were ordained as elders, Rev. J. Lee Johnson conducting the ordination services, assisted by Revs. J. D. Wicker, J. W. Patton and the writer.

Rev. J. E. Franks reported one new Church organized during the year—Lebanon, in Lee County. The new organization has thirty-two members and gives promise of becoming an active and strong organization.

Mr. C. H. Stephenson, chairman, presented the report on Sunday Schools and Christian Eddeavor, and Miss Lucy Eldredge made a timely address on the work of the Board of Religious Education.

The Conference voted to request the North Carolina State Conference to divide the North Carolina Sunday School Convention into three Conventions, the boundaries of which are to be coterminus with the boundaries of the three Conferences.

The Conference voted to meet next year with Pleasant Union, in Hornett County. The following officers were elected: president, Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D.; vice-president, Rev. J. E. Franks; secretary, Rev. J. Fuller Johnson; assistant secretary, Miss Pattie Coghill; treasurer, Mr. W. J. Ballentine.

The Conference elected twenty-five delegates to the State Conference, which convenes at Wake Chapel Tuesday, November 20th. It was voted that Conference purchase 200 annuals to be distributed gratis and pro rata to the Churches.

The entertainment by the good people of New Hope and community was royal, abundant and whole-hearted. The fellowship of the Conference was sweet, and all votes of the sessions on all topics for discussion were unanimous. It was a joy and an inspiration to be in such a religious assembly.

J. O. ATKINSON.

THE BOTANY OF THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT.

"Consider the lilies of the field how they grow."

This object lesson from the lips of Jesus has peculiar force when we consider that He not only made the illustration, but He made the lilies. God made man, and He made the lilies—both on the same broad principle. Men are not to consider the lilies simply to admire their beauty, to dream over the delicate strength and grace of stem and leaf; but how they grow! How, without anxiety or care, the flower woke into loveliness; how, without weaving, toiling, effort or friction, the whole slowly came ready-made from the loom of God in its more-than-Solomon-like glory. "So," He says, making the application beyond dispute, "you care-worn, anxious men must grow. You, too, need not be overanxious about your life, food, drink or clothing, for the God who cares for the lilies will much more care for you."

This nature-lesson was a great novelty in its day; but all men now who have even a "little faith" have learned this Christian secret of a composed life. For the temporal life, we have considered the lilies; but how is the spiritual life to grow? How are we to become better men? How are we to grow in grace? By what thought shall we add the cubits to the spiritual stature and reach the fullness of the perfect man? Since there is but one principle of growth for the natural and spiritual, for animal and plant, for body and soul—for all growth is organic—the principle of growing in grace is simply to "consider the lilies how they grow." They grow automatically, spontaneously, without trying, without fretting, without thinking. Applied in any direction—to plant life, to animal life, to the body or to the soul—this law holds good. A boy grows without trying—one or two simple conditions are fulfilled, and the growth goes on. He thinks probably as little about the conditions as about the result; he fulfills the conditions by habit, the result follows by nature. A doctor has no prescription for growth. He can tell me how growth may be stunted or impaired, but the process itself is beyond control—it is one of the few things which nature keeps in her own hands. No physician of souls, in like manner, has any prescription for spiritual growth. He may prescribe more earnestness, more prayer, more self-denial, or more Christian work. These may encourage growth; but the soul grows as the lily grows—without trying, without fretting, without thinking. Writers of manuals of devotion, with complicated rules for getting on in the Christian life, would do well to return to the simplicity of nature; and earnest souls who are attempting sanctification by struggle instead of sanctification by faith, might be spared much humiliation by learning the botany of the Sermon on the Mount.

A boy not only grows without trying, but he cannot grow if he tries. No man, by taking thought, has ever added a cubit to his stature; nor has any man, by mere working at his soul, ever approached nearer to the stature of the Lord Jesus. Christ's life unfolded itself from a divine germ, planted centrally in His nature, which grew as naturally as a flower from a bud. This flower may be imitated; the human form may be copied in wax, yet somehow we never fail to detect the difference. The one is natural, the other is mechanical. The one is growth, the other accretion. The living organism grows, the dead crystal increases. The first grows vitally from within, the last adds new particles from the outside. The whole difference between the Christian and the moralist lies here—the Christian works from the center, the moralist from the circumference.

Salvation demands so much morality that the moralist can never reach up to it. The end of salvation is to be like Christ in mind, character and life. The life is a germ of the Christ life, and must unfold into a Christ. A blade is a small thing, and at first grows very near the earth. It is often soiled and crushed and down-trodden; but it is a living thing. That great dead stone beside it is more imposing, only it will never be anything else than a stone. But this small blade —"it doth not yet appear what it shall be."

Growth in the Scriptures is always described in language of physiology. The regenerate soul is a new creature—a new man in Christ. He is rooted and built up in Christ; he abides in the vine, and so abiding, not toiling or spinning, brings forth fruit. The Christian, in short, like the poet, is born, not made; and the fruits of his character are not manufactured things, but living things—things which have grown from the secret germ, the fruits of the living Spirit.

Growth is mysterious, and upon this quality probably depends the fact that so few ever fathom its character. We allow a miracle to the lily, but none to man. Christ's test of the new birth was that of mystery. "The wind bloweth where it listeth. Thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth, so is every one that is born of the spirit." The test of spirituality is that you cannot tell whence it cometh or wheither it goeth. Take an ordinary man of the world—what he thinks and what he does; his whole standard of duty is taken from the society in which he lives. It is a borrowed standard; he is as good as other people are; he does in the same way of duty what is generally considered proper and becoming among those with whom his lot is thrown. You can account for it on philosophical principles, on the doctrine of influence, on strength of will, and on a favorable environment. He reflects established opinion; he follows its lead; his aims and objects and motives are all from a visible quarter.

On the other hand, there is a certain character and disposition of mind of which it is true to say that "thou canst not tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth." There are those who stand out from among the crowd, which reflects merely the atmosphere of feeling and standard of society around it, with an impress upon them which bespeaks a heavenly birth. Has he caught it from the inoculation of crowds and masses, as the mere religious zealot catches his character? That cannot be, for the type is altogether different from that which the masses of men, under enthusiastic impulses, exhibit.

We have all met these two characters—the one eminently respectable, upright, virtuous, a trifle cold perhaps, and generally, when critically examined, revealing somehow the mark of the tool; the other with God's breath still upon it, an inspiration, not more virtuous, but differently virtuous; not more humble, but different, wearing the meak and quiet spirit of the Man of Galilee. The other character which moves from a far-off center in spite of its transparency and sweetness, always fills you with awe, for you are not prepared for what it will do or say or become next.

We have now seen that spiritual growth is a process maintained and secured by a spontaneous and mysterious inward principle; it is spontaneous in its origin, for it bloweth where it listeth; mysterious in its operation, for we can never tell whence it cometh; obscure in its destination, for we cannot tell whence it goeth. The whole process transcends us, "For it is God which worketh in us, both to will and to do of His good pleasure." We do not plan, we are "created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." We are not lodging a plea for inactivity of the spiritual energies, but for the tranquility of the spiritual mind.

Not that there is no work for him to do who would grow—there is work, and severe work—but if the amount of energy lost in trying to grow were spent in fulfilling the conditions of growth, we should have many more cubits to show for our stature. It is with these conditions that the personal work of the Christian is chiefly concerned. For its growth, the plant needs heat, light, air, and moisture. A man, therefore, must go in search of these, or their spiritual equivalent, and this is his work, for himself. Man manufactures none of these spiritual conditions; God gives them as free as the air—everywhere God creates, man utilizes. Man struggles to grow in place of trying to get back in position, thus making the Church a workshop when God meant it to be a beautiful garden. The problem of the Christian life is this: to preserve the right attitude. To be in right position is simply to abide in Christ.

AVOID RANDOM READING.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

"The greatest schemes that human wit can forge,
Or bold ambition dares to put in practice,
Depend upon our husbanding a moment."

"Time wasted is existence; used, is life."

Every person who expects to accomplish anything worth while in the way of reading should be on constant guard against random and undirected reading. If reading is done only in a haphazard and promiscuous manner it will be nothing short of a miracle if it is attended by any notable results. Desultory efforts will always bring disastrous results. One's reading should be a serious matter, because of several reasons. First, time is so limited and so precious that when we have made use of every available moment that is granted to us we have had but little; second, the demands along other life-lines are so heavy that at the very best we can have but a limited amount of time for our reading; and, third, unless we avail ourselves of the advice and wisdom that others have gathered about books and literature we will waste a large portion of our time in aimless effort along fruitless paths.

Any one who seriously desires to make the best possible use of his time can easily find some wise friend, some well-informed person of experience, who will be glad to assist in the choice of books, and in planning a course of reading that will be pleasant and highly profitable. Then there are always book clubs and reading clubs available that will be glad to offer suggestions and give the benefits of what they have learned about books. Well-educated teachers in our schools, college professors, leading ministers, and others are easily reached, and will be glad to offer help and to assist in a wise choice of books. There are also numerous books with suggested courses of reading, and much information about the best way to find the riches of the literary world, that will be of untold service to those who are in need of such help. It is one of the most important obligations resting upon those who have intimate touch with young people to see that the young have help and suggestion with the books that they read. It is a matter of years to set any one securely in the path of proper reading and to give such an impetus to his tastes as will insure progress along proper lines without unnecessary waste of time. Without any direction, it may be even worse than waste of time; it may be such misdirected effort as will result in a positive distaste for the best in literature and the death of the impulses that should carry one all the way through a long life with a constantly increasing love for the best that the world of letters offers.

The field is so wide and rich that any one can find all the knowledge and pleasure and inspiration that should be found if he is shown how to enter upon the treasures of the ages as stored up in the fiction, the biography, the poetry, the history, the philosophy, and all the various other lines of thought that have claimed man's best effort in all the past. Once properly introduced to the masters of the ages, who await us with all their stores of wit, wisdom and philosophy, we will never willingly cast them aside.

To secure the harmonious development of the mental faculties, it is necessary to feed the mind with material drawn from different sources and from the master-pages that embody the best thought of the best minds of the world—just here is where the greatest danger comes in from random reading. We are likely to follow whims and inclinations, and range and roam with no plan or purpose, and by such indiscriminate travel we arrive at no fixed destination. Secure, then, the best help that is possible in making your plans for reading; choose your books carefully; give to them your best effort, and you will find that you are building secure foundations upon which you can erect temples and towers giving you a range of thought and observation as wide as the earth and limited only by the capacities of the human mind itself. It is worthy of our most serious thought; and but few things will secure larger dividends of pleasure, happiness, prosperity and contentment than a wise choice of the books we read.

FAITHFULNESS TO THE END.

"He that endureth to the end shall be saved." —Matt. 24:13.

The best service one can give is not in the quantity, nor in the character of it, but in unswerving devotion to the end. Take the life of Jesus: from the first until He expired on the cross, He stuck to the business for which He came into the world. As He attempted the work of His Father, He faced many very grave dangers, but He did not flinch; in the face of death He stuck, and on the cross "He endured" and "despised the shame," and while His enemies railed on Him, and amidst His breaths he thanked God that He had accomplished the work that He had come to do. How beautifully this philosophy is rounded out when He said: "It is finished!" How much these words mean to us in this light!

How about your work? Are you sticking to what you should do, or are you following the line of easiest resistance and gratifying your own selfish ambition and pleasure? A good test of our own lives is to ask, "What compels me? Is it me, myself, or is it spiritual good?" Choose self and we are lost. Choose God and be saved. Ask yourself, "Am I growing better each day? Have I more self-control? Am I more patient and sympathetic?" Determine that nothing earthly will cause you to give up in despair.

PRAYER.

Dear Father, reveal to us, day by day, just what Thou wouldst have us to do, and help us to trust in Thee, that we may stick to our task through thick and thin, for better or for worse, never swerving from our duty. Forgive us, dear Lord, all our sins, and bless our souls today. Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE FOLLY OF FOLLYING.

Read Eccl. 2.

The Lord is no "kill-joy." He wants His children to have a good time. He is a God of sunlight, flowers, and the song of birds, and these make glad. His teachings are peace, prosperity, gladness and happiness. "Be of good cheer and rejoice always." But so many have distorted ideas of happiness these days. They run after cheap amusement, follow the circus, engage in superficial chatter. Rag and jazz music seems better than symphony. Things devilish seem better to them than morals and righteousness. Some of the women don weird creations, shave and pencil their eye-brows, paint the sunset glow on their cheeks, daub their lips with red clay, while the rest faint away. In social life, everything is "simply marvelous" or "terribly gorgeous," and everything else is consigned to the "limbo of the stupid." We are hurrying beyond the bounds of prudence, and, like a flock of geese, what one does all the rest must do. "What a good sport Bill was at the party last night!" And all Bill was good for was the bottle of "hooch" on his hip, for in everything else he was the banality of boredom. The only thing that seems to give a good time to our young people is a petting party to the accompaniment of the thing that's on the hip. What does all this amount to? All of it is a "striving after the wind." When the Church bell rings, they go to sleep or leave home. Why not let's get down to solid things that endure? "Wisdom excells folly as far as light excells darkness."

PRAYER.

Dear Lord, Thou hast committed to us the solemn trust of life, and the hour for serving Thee is always present. May we wake up to Thy claims, and to the claims of the things that are good and abiding. Please stop the persistence of our foolish passions, and direct, Thou, the way our feet should go. Draw us to Thy mind, that Thou mayest own us as Thy true children. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

IN THE DUMPS.

1 Kings 19:1-8.

Elijah had the blues. When Jezebel threatened him, he forgot God and everything else, ran for his life, finally stopped and said, "It's no use. I am better off dead. God, kill me." And God said, "Must I show you again that I am God?"

Did you ever have the blues? Ever get down-in-the-mouth? God says, "You, My child, whom I have promised never to leave nor forsake, and now you are about to run." Like David, when we get blue, we lose our heads and take to our heels. When down, let's try to remember that the Lord is with us. Trust Him. Yes, even a friend is waiting to help you. Tell it to Him. Unpack and pray through. You are not praying enough. God made you as an eagle, to fly; why hop around on one leg? Launch out on the wings of the Infinite. Elijah didn't perish; neither will you.

PRAYER.

Our Father, grant unto us a continual reminder of Thy goodness toward us and Thy presence with us in the sixth trouble and in the seventh not to forsake us; yea, never to leave us! Embolden us in times of frailty, temptations and dangers. Drive away all our blues by Thy assuring promises. May we be faithful in the dark times as well as in the light ones. Amen.

THURSDAY.

BEAUTIFUL GARMENTS.

"The garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness."—Isa. 61:3.

Then religion is intended by God to be a very beautiful thing, and pious people are to be the most attractive folk in the street. Everything about them—manner, mood, speech and action—are all to be, as it were, clothed in fairest attire. And this attire is to be the clearest evidence that they have been with Jesus and have learned of Him. But will any one say that the saints we meet today have this arresting distinction? When we hear that any one is a saint, do we immediately think of some one of most especial loveliness?

Why does piety so often go abroad in somber, gloomy garments, as though sainthood can only flourish in seedy attire? Why is it that virtue so often lacks the seal of grace? Why is it that the countenance of the saint is so often devoid of light and lightsomeness? This is not intended to be an indiscriminate indictment of the children of God; it is only intended to point to the vast number of professing Christians whose spiritual garments are not lovely, and who will never witness to the power of their Lord by the alluring beauty of their lives.

I suppose everybody feels the inspiration of really beautiful garments. I have been told that to put off a dowdy dress and to put on a lovely one has almost the effect of resurrection upon the wearer! Even doctors are beginning to bring clothing into their prescriptions. "Wear the brightest attire," said a great specialist to one of my depressed and despairing friends. And she did, and her spirits were helped to rise even with the radiance of her robes.

Well, if this be true of external garments, what would be the influences if we were wearing the loveliest garments in the household of grace? Suppose all our judgments were clothed in gentleness! Suppose truth were garbed in loveliness, and was never rude and blustering! Suppose duty walked the road to Jericho clothed in mercy, what doings there would be on the road! And suppose all our manners were the children of grace, so that all our approaches to our fellows were genial and friendly! Every one can surely feel what vital witnesses would walk our streets if the witnesses were wearing these garments of salvation. One thing is perfectly sure: our Father intends us to wear these garments, and they are waiting for us in our Father's house. "Bring forth the best robe and put it on him!" These robes are waiting for all His redeemed children. He asks us to change "the garments of praise for the spirit of heaviness." He would have beauty as the clear seal of all our goodness. "Strength and beauty are in His sanctuary."—Rev. J. H. Jowett.

PRAYER.

You pray. Pray for a Christian spirit, or that others may know you are Christian. Pray for love, for gentleness, mercy and grace, that you may be a daily witness for Him.

FRIDAY.

WHAT GOD SAYS ABOUT—WISDOM.

"The world by wisdom knew not God."—1 Cor. 1:21.

Yes, and the more worldly wisdom and education a man gets independently of God, the more increasingly he knows not God. And yet such a man will stand up and assert that this very thing, education and wisdom, is bringing him to a position where he understands God better every day—understands Him so well that he can decide what He did and did not say in His book; what ought and ought not to be there.

But still, what God says stands, and the darkest hearts in the world today are those whose very light is darkness—who see so clearly that they do not see God at all—for spiritual things and spiritual beings are spiritually discerned.

The only way to know God is by believing all that Jesus did, beginning with His death for our salvation. For if Jesus did not die and rise again for us, He is a liar and His teachings are not worth shucks; but if He did, and we believe it, then light breaks in on our souls and we know God. And to know Him is life eternal, and if we have eternal life there's plenty of time to gather true wisdom from fellowship with Him.—Copyright, 1920, J. A. R.

SATURDAY.

GIVING GOD A CHANCE.

Moses said: "I will now turn aside and see this great sight why the bush is not burnt."—Ex. 3:3.

This is the first time Moses ever gave God a good chance at him. Moses has been reared an Egyptian prince, full of the exuberant spirit of youth, aspiring to a flashy career. He had understood that God wanted his people freed, and he had seen the afflictions of Israel and attempted to be their deliverer, but he "got in dutch." He thought the people would understand him, but they did not. He finally decided to go to the wilderness and be alone. When he saw something miraculous, he turned to the mystery of it, and in it he discovered God and himself, and he was given his life's mission. First, he had tried to find his way by killing somebody. It is different now. What a difference there is in turning aside to God and waiting for His revelation to us, and that of taking things in our own hands and trying to find Him out our way! Moses had coveted spiritual possibilities all the time, but now he is willing to wait for them and seek for them in God's way. Ever afterwards, God is real to him. He always refers to him as "The good voice that dwelt in the burning bush." Take time to see what God has to say to you. Put your thoughts and your motives under His control, and He will guide you into all truth and be a real God to you. The great menace of mankind this day is that we will not take time to let God have a chance at us.

PRAYER.

Eternal and everlasting God, reveal to each of us who now turn aside, a knowledge of Thy unfailing care. May we walk with Thee and forget our troubles. Inspire us to a saving thought of both our and the world's needs. Turn our vision to the promises that have never failed, and renew our courage every day, to follow Thee. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE SABBATH AND MAN.

"The Sabbath was made for men."—Mark 2:27.

After God made the temple of nature, with its doming skies, its buttressing mountains, its organ music of winds and babbling brooks, its fountains of rivers and seas—he made man king of all, and then He made the Sabbath for man, and defined its use. He was to rest from His labors and turn it to the deep content and holiness of His soul. It was to give the supernatural man opportunity to transcend all earthly life, and cause his lofty nature to rise to glorious victory. What a blessed day this is! Do that today which will bring a part or all of this to Thee, and do nothing that will hinder it.

PRAYER.

Dear Father, cause us to turn to Thee for strength today. Give us visions of higher living and a closer walk with Thee and make us grateful for Thy gracious goodness towards us. Forgive us of all our sins. Wash us and make us clean. Baptize us with the Holy Spirit and enable us to turn our every thought to Thee. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

AT THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

DEAR FRIENDS:

The writer had a very pleasant trip to Alabama Christian Conference. It was our first trip to Alabama to attend the Conference. We had a very pleasant home with Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Mitchell and enjoyed every minute of our stay. After the Conference broke, we visited Wadley, Ala., and had the pleasure of visiting the graded school and our junior college. We were very kindly entertained in the homes of Rev. E. M. Carter and Bro. C. W. Carter. The people were very kind to us, and we made many new acquaintances. It is a great community and a splendid people, and if it was not for the boll-weevil the farmers would soon grow rich raising cotton. The boll-weevil is very destructive and cuts the yields of cotton in many sections very low; but the farmers are beginning to put up a fight to exterminate him by the use of arsenic, and we were informed that a very rick vein of this product had been discovered near Cragford, and would be developed in the near future and would be sold cheap enough so the farmers could use it freely to dust their growing cotton to destroy this pest. I truly hope thatt he day is not far off when the farmers in that section will be able to combat the boll-weevil and get on their feet again.

Mrs. Johnston and part of her singing class rendered a program at Concord Christian Church Saturday, October 20th. This community has a union Sunday School, and has an annual Sunday School celebration and generally have several speakers for the occasion. They all enjoyed the trip very much, and especially the most excellent dinner served on the ground, with fried chicken and every good thing to eat. They made us an offering in money, wheat, corn, potatoes, etc.

The orphanage was highly honored Sunday, October 21st, by a visit from Mr. M. Orban, Jr., of Whittier, Calif. Mr. Orban has been a warm friend to the orphanage for a number of years and has often contributed to help us in this work of love and charity. We were delighted to have him visit us, and hope he will be so well pleased with his visit to this section that he will come again.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE MEETS.

The Alabama Conference met in its last session with the Church at Cragford. There were in attendance delegates from all the Churches except one; a fine representative body of our work in this section. And, too, we had with us Chas. D. Johnson, of the orphanage; Prof. P. J. Kernodle, managing editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN; Revs. H. W. Elder and R. A. Whitten, of the Georgia and Alabama Conference; Miss Pattie Coghill, of the mission office, Elon College, and E. B. Atkinson, of Macon, Ga. It was a delight to have these visitors with us and their counsel in the work.

During the first day's session we heard the reports of the executive committee, the reading of Church and ministerial reports, reports on moral reform, superannuation and foreign mission. These reports were interesting and very helpful. While not so many of the Churches paid their assessments in full, there is a gain in membership of seventy-five or a hundred. A petitionary letter from the new Church at Roanoke was read and, with their delegates, was received into the Conference. We are glad for our members in the town of Roanoke and for our work for this organization. It is one long needed.

In the morning of the second day came the report of the Sunday School Board, and some words of greeting from Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, secretary of religious education. It was decided during the discussion of this report that steps would be taken to hold a Chautauqua at Bethlehem College next year. This, we consider, was a forward step and will mean much to the Sunday School and Church work in this section if this arrangement is made. Next was the report of the Mission Board. For the Church at Bryan's Chapel, one of the North Alabama Churches, there was collected $48.00 to put doors and windows in the building, and for the interest in mission there was secured in cash and subscriptions $438.85. Practically one hundred of this was paid in cash. This was indeed the best of all the services. The offering was made without much effort. Following this, Rev. H. W. Elder preached an inspiring sermon, which was to all a spiritual feast.

In the afternoon there were reports of religious literature, education and Christian Endeavor. Truly the opening of Bethlehem College is a new day and, if the people will continue to support the institution as it appears now they will, ere long we are to have a great, good institution in this section of our work.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

November 11, 1923.

Subject: "Some Missionary Teachings of the Psalms."—Ps. 47:1-9, 67:1-7, 100:1-5.

Golden Text: "Let the peoples praise Thee, O God: Let all the peoples praise Thee."—Ps. 67:3.

Devotional Reading: Ps. 98:1-9.

Reference Material: Ps. 96-99, 117; Rev. 5:8-14.

All Nations Called to Serve Jehovah.

"The poets are ever the 'makers,' the 'see-ers' who lead in advance of human thought, and so it is not strange that some of the greatest missionary messages of the Old Testament should be found in the psalms."—Montgomery.

The psalms are rich in missionary material, and in inspiration for missionary hearts. Under divine inspiration, they were great missionary hymns written for all time and for all people. They convey a personal uplifting message and have a universal appeal. No part of the Bible is turned to more often for devotional reading, private or public. Some one has said: "Whoever were the human authors of the psalms, the real author was the spirit of God." And through these great masterpieces of poetry and song, many lives have been molded. The person who once declared, "Let me write the songs of a nation, and let who will write its laws," had a great vision of the power of song in shaping lives. Songs create desires. Great missionary hymns make missionaries. A thorough acquaintance with the psalms, from which the Master often quoted, will reveal clearly that Jehovah is the God of the whole world, that He is calling to all men to serve Him, and that His kingdom will surely come, and "His will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." The psalms are missionary in their message to us.

To an unprejudiced person, just a careful reading of the three psalms which are given as references for this lesson, to say nothing of countless others which are thoroughly missionary, will bring conclusive proof that to be a child of God means to be missionary—to be eager for all the world to praise God. Read them over, jotting down every word and phrase which includes the nations of the world in His plan. See how little of the psalm would be left if the missionary portion could be omitted. Surely God was very anxious for His people to learn this important lesson regarding His work when over and over again, in inspired writing, the truths are repeated.

God the King of the Earth.

This is the theme of the forty-seventh psalm. He is not the ruler of a petty province, or of favored lands, or of people of great wealth and noble families. He is the "King of the earth," of all the earth. Wherever men live, He is a ruler, who is eager for their welfare, and who longs for their love and obedience. He is a Ruler who knows no distinction of "race, color or previous condition of servitude," but whose whole longing is for people who are righteous. When the earth is ruled by God in the hearts of all men, there will be peace and justice and purity.

All Nations are Exhorted to Praise God.

This message of the sixty-seventh psalm is the desire of every mission board ever organized. It is the burden of every missionary's heart. It is the ideal toward which every missionary Christian (and can there be any other type of Christian?) is looking. The psalmist implores God's mercy and blessing, not on himself alone, but on all men. His pronoun is plural—"us." His plea is for "salvation among all nations." His desire is to see all the people praise Jehovah. Our worship should be filled with praise. The full joy of the Christian life comes from a realization of God's goodness, and such a realization must be expressed in praise, not alone in petition, in thanksgiving, not only in asking for favors. "And all the ends of the earth shall fear Him." The missionary psalms are prophecy, looking forward to the Messianic kingdom. They look forward to the rule of a King who shall reign in righteousness.

All Men are Exhorted to Praise God.—Ps. 100.

A nation is made up of its citizens. Great buildings, immense wealth, large cities cannot alone make a great nation. But great men make even the smallest kingdom great. Even so is it in our Churches. Magnificent buildings, talented choirs, lofty oratory cannot suffice to make a great Church in God's sight. But Christian men and women, filled with praise to God, serving Him "with gladness," and coming before Him with singing, can make any Church win His divine approval. In this thanksgiving psalm, which every boy and girl in our Sunday School should learn before he leaves the junior department, the psalmist sings of a "joyful" religion. He recognizes that all we have comes from God, and that the only real way in which we can thank Him is by serving in His Church, by worshiping with His children, by constantly remembering His faithfulness, which is "unto all generations."

This anniversary of Armistice Day brings remembrance that many nations have much to praise God for today. Five years ago there was great rejoicing. It was a day never to be forgotten by those who experienced its relief and its happiness. We felt that the time when all the earth was to be at peace was coming nearer and nearer. We praised God that Armistice Day that the war was over. The message of the psalmist looks forward to a day happier than any day man has ever known. They anticipate the time when all the earth shall have peace because all the peoples of the earth shall be serving the one true God as King, and worshiping and serving Him. Missionaries are working today to hasten this time. Christians everywhere, by their prayers and their gifts and their lives, are helping to make the joyful day come. On this fifth anniversary of Armistice Day, with its joys fresh in mind, may not many Christian people, studying the great missionary hymns of the Word of God, approach their Father, with thankful hearts, and with willing spirits, ready to consecrate their all to helping to bring about the great day when war shall be no more, because men love each other as they love and worship the one true God.

"Jehovah will keep thee from all evil;
He will keep thy soul.
Jehovah will keep thy going out and thy coming in
From this time forth and for evermore."

Topic: "Courage Needed Today: for What?" —Josh. 1:1-9.

(Armistice Day Meeting.)

Thoughts for the Meeting.

God has leaders in preparation to lead in His work. Moses was gone, but Joshua wa sready to "carry on" when God called him. Verse 1.

Joshua's commission was from God. "Go over Jordan" were His marching orders. His was a great task, calling for courage to face enemies and courage to guide his own people aright. Verse 2.

God keeps His word. The promised land was to be their home when the children of Israel did their part courageously. "Every place that the soul of your foot shall tread upon, to you I have given it." Verse 3.

"I will be with thee." A leader needs this promise today even as Joshua needed it. Our greatest leaders in war and peace and reform have been men and women of profound faith in God and with a willingness to be guided by Him in all things. Verse 4.

Joshua's success came because he was willing to believe that God was with Him. Verse 5.

"Be strong and of good courage." The cowardly man is never strong. Courage is needed today. For what? To conquer sin, to stand firm for God, to be on the unpopular side if that is the right side, to conquer over our own sins, to play our part well. Verse 6.

"Only be strong and very courageous." Again comes the command, with further counsel to observe the law in every particular, "That thou mayest have good success." So many people desire success without being willing to pay the price it demands. Verse 7.

The Word of God in the heart instills courage, as it brings assurance of God's protection and guiding care. Read Psalm 91. Verse 8.

On this anniversary of Armistice Day, remarkable incidents of physical courage in the recent war are readily recalled. Those brave men played their parts well, and now call to us, in Lincoln's words at Gettysburg: "To be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here thus far so nobly advanced * * * that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain." Peace demands a courage as great as that of war, which calls for physical courage, while the times of reconstruction demand a high type of moral bravery. Moral and social and religious problems are here to solve. International and national policies must be determined rightly by morally courageous men and women. Citizens who are not afraid to stand for the just and the right and the true are the citizens needed today. Christians carrying into community and state their Christian ideals will mean a better America and a better world.

Poem for the Meeting.

Courage.

Courage for the big task and for all the hard tasks, too?
Courage for the hours when I scarce know what to do?
Courage for the things that fret and wear my life away,
Just to fight the war with worry every single day?
Courage for decision in all matters, great and small?
Courage to be wise and true in problems, each and all?
Courage? Yes, because through faith I clearly now can see
Grace is all sufficient every day for even me.

Courage? Yes, because through faith I hear His tender voice,
Coming low and sweet: "Fear not, my child, but just rejoice;
Yield thy way to Me in perfect trust, and ever know
I will surely guide thee in the way that thou shouldst go."

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

Place the Christian flag with the American flag in the front of your prayer-meeting room as reminders of the banners under which we, as Christian Americans, live.

Urge every member to take some part in the meeting. It takes courage, often, to testify or pray or lead a meeting, but each such Christian act develops spiritual strength.

TOPICS FOR DISCUSSION: What problems in youth demand courage to solve? Which is easier to develop, physical or moral courage? How can courage be developed? Bible sayings about courage (each member may quote and comment on one verse)—Nos. 13:20; 2 Chron. 32:17; 2 Cor. 5:6; Heb. 13:6; Deut. 31:6; Josh. 10:25; 2 Sam. 10:12; Ezra 10:4; Ps. 31:24; Isa. 41:6; Eph. 6:10.

SUGGESTED HYMNS: "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus," "As a Volunteer," "Loyalty to Christ," "A Charge to Keep I have."

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

NOVEMBER 11, 1923.

TOPIC: "What can we learn from Nehemiah?" —Neh. 4:6, 6:11.

"So we built the wall; and all the wall was joined together unto the height thereof: for the people had a mind to work."

"The greatest joy that comes to man
Is found by working out some plan
That helps the world from day to day
To do each task some better way."

—Benson.

Nehemiah's work was to rebuild the wall around his Jerusalem. He came from far Shushan, with the king's protection and permission and help. He made a plan by which this great wall could be restored, and the people living there safe from the enemies round about. He looked all around. He talked to the leaders. He made a plan, and then he got all the people together, for he knew it could never be built, unless every one had his own place to work, and then did his best. Then finally the wall was finished because "the people had a mind to work." And they were very happy together.

The greatest joy that comes to a Junior Endeavorer in his society comes through the work that is done. He is proud of the meeting which he worked so hard to get ready for, proud because every single person helped the leader. The sick people visited, the flowers brought for the Church, the errands run for the pastor, the scrapbooks made for the hospitals and orphanage, are all a part of Junior Endeavor work, which Juniors enjoy doing together.

The story of Nehemiah is so interesting that you will want to read more than the two verses given, and when you do read or hear the whole story, you will find many lessons to learn from this man who lived so long ago.

(No. 7) THE BAD BREAK.

There's a break everywhere you look—a bad break. It is in nature. The geologist finds it in the earth's crust, and the astronomer in the upper blue. The biologist finds it in animal life.

The chemist constantly guards against the death element in the gases. The orchardist fights it by spraying. The farmer must overcome it to get a crop, and the stock-breeder vigorous young. The weather expert never knows when and where a sudden wild storm may bring destruction and death.

That break is in human life, too. Here it's a moral break. The banker and merchant think of it as they engage clerks, and plan surety bonds against somebody's failure to keep faith. The thoughtful parent and the wise teacher guard against it for the young people. We are all increasingly on our guard in a crowd. Even the mother is conscious of a something serious to be reckoned with in the will of her growing babe.

There's a break lurking everywhere. The break in nature grows out of the break in man. For man is the underlord of creation. He affects it. The two intertwine.

Away back, that break began with God. Man was made free. He was like God in being free to think and act as he chose. There was the chance of a break. He could choose right, or wrong. He chose. He made a bad choice. That was the beginning of the break.

Do you remember the old garden story? The garden was full of fruit trees. Man was to eat freely of all he chose. Then God said, "The real things are the heart things. Let us keep in touch, real heart-touch. It depends on you; your choosing to have it so.

"So, we'll call this tree here the tree of choice. I ask you not to eat of it, simply because I want you to stay in touch with me by choosing to. You may eat of it, of course, if you choose to.

"But, please, I ask you not to. I want your love because you choose to love, to stay in touch, and this tree is your opportunity." There was the chance for the break, in the man's power to choose as he pleased. And there the break came.

Mark keenly that the break began with the man. It is what he did that made the break. There was no break on God's part, except the break in His heart as He saw the man break away. The old friendship was broken. It was broken by the man.

And we've all caught the break habit. It's contagious. It's easy to break. It's hard to break away from the break habit. Yet—yet, there is never an actual break with God except as each man makes it.

It's not a matter of that first man's break, even though he started the down-grade. It's each man's own break or not-break that matters. That, only that, but all of that. Every man stands on his own feet.

The old-fashioned word is sin. A new word sharpens the meaning. The break of sin is not merely a misfortune. It's not a thing to be cured by the surgeon's knife, nor the psychologist's formula. Else things could be fixed up by providing surgeons and psychologists enough.

It isn't merely a personal twist this way or that, more or less accidental, or incidental. No, at the core, sin is in the choosing power. It's a preferring one's own way to God's. The root of that break is in the will.

There never has been any break on God's part toward man. That should be underscored black. His only break is with man's break. For the thing itself, that breaking choice, that was bad. That hurt man.

A hell of suffering was packed in that. For man's sake, that must be fought. The snake in man's bosom must be caught and slain, lest it sting the man's life clean out.

God's feeling toward man has never changed, not by as much as half the batting of your eyelid. But He hates the break bitterly. That's why the Man came to let us know how God feels both about us and about the break.

That's why the extreme thing of dying was done—to break our hearts with the love of it, and rid us of the results of the break, and to put a new power into us.

So the break is mended up by our new choice. And a new tree of choice will grow in our garden. And He and we will meet in heart-touch again under the tree of choice, which will become a tree of life, never-ending fruitful, fragrant life.

What a prince man is that has such power of choice! What a princely power that chooseing power is that can break the plan of God! And—and, can make us friends again with such a God.

What a love it is in that Man's heart, and the Father's, to go to such extremes to mend that break. What a break, a bad break, that was that the Man did such an extreme thing to fix up!

An old Western stage-driver cried out in his delirium: "I'm on the down-grade. And I can't reach the brakes." Things seemed at their worst to him. That bad break really put things at their worst.

AN INTERESTING STUDY IN JOB.

During our residence in Ohio, years ago, we had an old friend, who is yet comparatively a young man. He was absorbed in the thought of his life-work—the Gospel ministry. As such, he delighted in the study of the Bible, and necessarily he was a growing man. We have not seen him in years, but a few days ago we received from his hand a booklet, "A Syllabus of Book of Job." It was from the pen of our old young friend, Rev. A. E. Cortner, A. B., Albany, Ind.

It must have cost the author a great deal of careful study, as the syllabus shows a close acquaintance with practically every detail of the book. As indicating to the reader what he found in his study of the Book of Job, we name the several divisions of the book in this syllabus, as follows:

1. An analogy of the plan of redemption.
2. Why do the righteous suffer?
3. How can a man be justified?
4. How can a man be clean?
5. Is man immortal?
6. Is there peril in resisting God?
7. Is there profit in prayer?
8. Where did Satan come from?
9. What shall I do when God raises?
10. How can man find God?
11. Where is God?
12. Who is the daysman longed for and needed?

Each of these divisions has from seven to twenty-two subdivisions, making this syllabus of real value to any one who wishes to give the Book of Job a real study. You can order copies from the author, addressing him at Albany, Ind. Price of the booklet is not given, but it is not large, as the booklet has only sixteen pages.

How Shivar Mineral Water Relieves Rheumatism

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate, and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism, it is, therefore, necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable conditions due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred, on the average, report no benefit.

Shivar Springs,
Box 16-B, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

TRUST ALL.

Never mind where you work. Never mind whether it be visible or not. Never mind whether your name is associated with it. You may never see the issues of your toils. You are working for eternity. If you cannot see results here in the hot working day, the cool evening hours are drawing near, when you may rest from your labors, and then they may follow you. So do your duty and trust God to give the seed you now sow "a body as it hath pleased him."—Alexander Maclaren.

Beyond the sunset in God's land, our loved ones who have gone are waiting and watching for me. Thank God, this is no delusion.

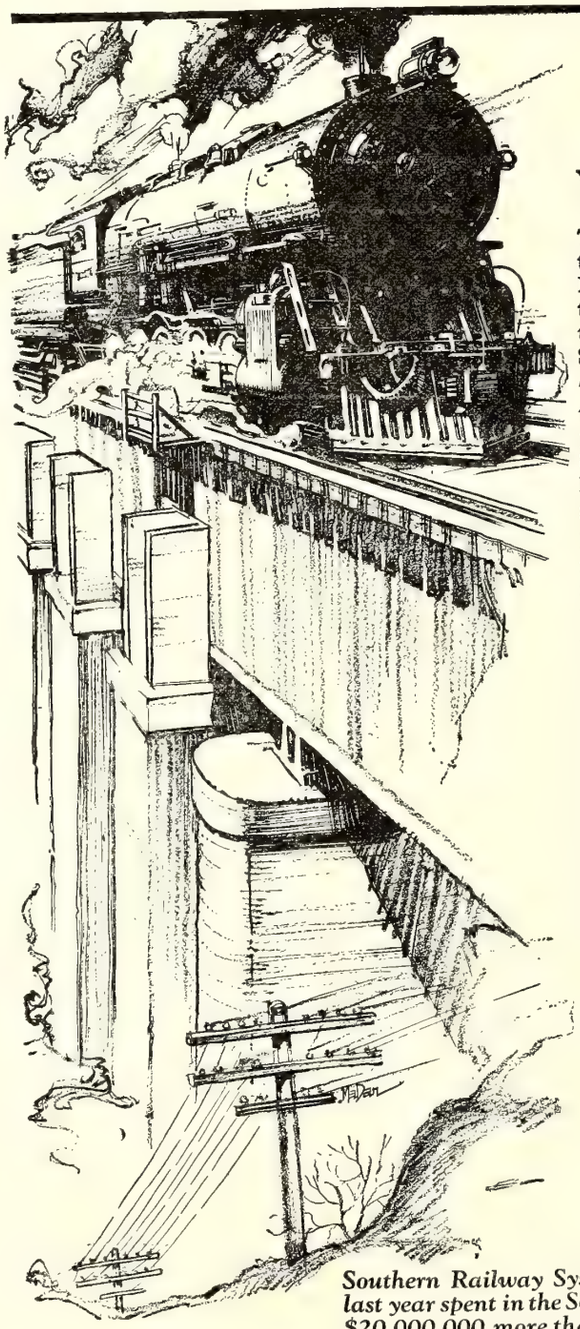
DOES EDUCATION COST TOO MUCH?

The educational world is still considerably stirred over the statements of Dr. Pritchett, president of the Carnegia Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, a few months ago about the cost of the schools and their enormous and growing budgets. The statements, which have evoked the most widespread comment and discussion, are that "the present cost of schools is sorely taxing the ability of the American people to support them," and that under the "enormous load of taxation that societies carry, communities will rise against the burdensome cost of public education."

In commenting upon these statements, the New York Times very wisely says: "'Enormous' is a relative term. The cost is truly enormous compared with what Russia is spending. It is enormous compared with what China is spending. But it can hardly be said to be enormous when put beside our total wealth or national income." The Times then points out that the billion dollars which our public elementary and secondary schools cost annually is only four-tenths of one per cent of the national wealth, one and four-tenths per cent of the national income, and less than seven per cent of the amount of money lying in the "savings accounts" of the banks. "The sum spent on education sounds 'enormous,'" says the Times; "but when reduced to its lowest terms, the cost to each individual, it seems very small. Taking the country over, it is about three cents per person per day."

So long as the American people are paying seventeen dollars for luxuries for every dollar that they spend for education, it seems rather strange that great educational agencies would raise doubts as to our ability to pay the increasing cost of education. The real question is whether or not we regard the education of our children as of primary importance. It is a matter of priority of interests, and not of ability.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM



Keeping pace with the South

The first American locomotive to enter actual service was the "Best Friend" of 1830. Built in a New York foundry, shipped by sea to Charleston, it hauled the first passenger train on what is now the Southern Railway System.

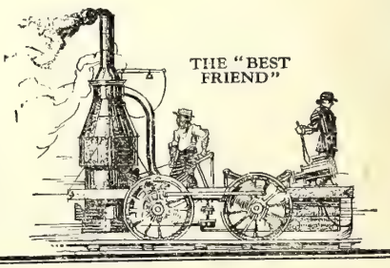
Twenty-two hundred locomotives, some of them fifty times as heavy as this famous pioneer engine, and 70,000 cars, operating on 8,300 miles of Southern Railway System lines, are now doing the work that was begun by the "Best Friend."

From the Ohio and the Potomac to the Gulf, from the Atlantic to the Mississippi, the far-flung rails of the Southern reach across twelve states with 40,000,000 inhabitants.

The Southern serves the South—from the northern gateways at Washington, Cincinnati and Louisville—and the western gateways at St. Louis and Memphis—to the ocean ports of Norfolk, Charleston, Savannah, Brunswick and Jacksonville—and the Gulf ports of Mobile and New Orleans.

Operated by men of the South, who have been bred in its traditions to understand its problems and its needs, the Southern keeps pace with the South. The investment in its properties is now more than $710,000,000, of which $285,000,000 has been expended in the past two decades.

With the continued cooperation of the people of the South, we will be enabled to command the capital for the greater transportation facilities that Southern development will inevitably demand.



Southern Railway System last year spent in the South $20,000,000 more than it received from the South.

The SOUTHERN SERVES THE SOUTH

Gypsy Smith preached a sermon on "The Lost Christ." He found a note under his door the next morning which read as follows: "I am a preacher, the pastor of the largest Church, with the largest congregation and with the greatest influence in the city in which I live. The biggest men in that city are members of my Church, but I am in distress. I have lost my Christ. I promise you and my Church and my God I will never preach again until I have found Him." What a tragedy is here! There are two things to be said for this man: he did right in ceasing to preach when he had "lost his Christ," but no man who has lost his Christ and feels as this man felt will fail to find Him to the joy of his soul.

VEAZEY.

Rhoda Ann Hunt was born March 10, 1856; married to Z. T. Veazey May 21, 1869. To this union has been born twelve children; they also have sixty-two grandchildren and eighteen great-grandchildren. Sister Veazey departed this life September 28, 1923. Funeral services by Rev. G. D. Hunt and the writer. She was faithful and true to her husband and family. She was first a member of the Methodist Church, but for thirty years she has lived a consistent member of the Christian Church at McGuir's Chapel. She leaves to mourn their loss her husband, a large family of children and grandchildren and lots of friends.

Truly the Lord will bless the life and labors of one who has sacrificed and worked so hard and long for those she loved. Surely a good woman has fallen. May the Lord comfort all those that mourn.

C. W. CARTER.

THOUGHTS ABOUT CHRIST.

1. He claimed equality with the Father, and said that He came from the Father, and would return to the Father. "Before Abraham was, I am."

2. He never made a confession of sin, or fault, or short-coming, or weakness. "Which of you convicteth me of sin?"

3. As to His mighty deeds, recall the words of Nicodemus, "No man could do these miracles which thou doest, except God be with him."

4. He never put Himself on the same class with His disciples. His words were: "I ascend to my Father, and to your Father; to my God, and to your God." He did not say "to our Father."

5. He was worshiped and adored by His apostles and disciples. Why did He not stop them? They were guilty of idolatry if He were not truly the Son of God. The martyrs prayed to Him—as Stephen: "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit."

6. Note the assertiveness of Jesus: "Come unto Me," He said. Moreover, He claimed to be the Judge of all mankind.

Christ satisfies heart, conscience, intellect, will. Every burdened soul will find rest in Him. "I came to Jesus as I was." More than that—

I looked to Jesus, and I found
In Him my Star, my Sun,
And in the Light of Life I'll walk
Till traveling days be done.
—W. Phillips.

A giant meteor was recently sighted by officers of the ocean liner Orbita. It was visible for five minutes as it swept across the sky, leaving a luminous, greenish vapor in its wake, which suffused the heavens with brilliant color for more than twenty minutes. Which reminds us of Jude's "wandering stars" and of John's vision of "a great mountain burned with fire," which was cast into the sea, turning a third part of it to blood.

Church Census of Burlington Folk.—

Results of a Church census taken as part of a "go-to-Church" campaign follows: Number of Church members, 2,283; non-Church members, 1,432; number expressing Church preference, 1,885; number attending Church, 2,635; number attending Sunday School, 2,103; number not attending, 1,617; number of children under twelve years, 882. This does not include the census taken some time ago by the Hocutt Memorial Church of West Burlington, the cards number 1,900. They will be included and tabulated.

Columbia Writer Wins Knopp Prize.—

Young J. Warner Bellah, of Columbia, won the Knopp prize, with a book written in nineteen hours. The world admires the ease with which he writes. If Boileau were alive he would tell Mr. Bellah what he wrote to Racine, then about Bellah's age: "You tell me that you write with great ease. I hope to teach you to write with great difficulty."

After he began writing with difficulty, Racine amounted to something. Beware of deadly facility. Nothing worth while was ever done easily. If you find it easy, make it hard by doing it better and doing it over.

Coolidge Sees Failure in French Limit Plans.—

Statements at the White House that President Coolidge would view the placing of restrictions on the proposed expert committee inquiry into Germany capacity to pay reparations as committing the plan to almost certain failure, had a distinctly depressing effect today on the entire outlook.

What effect the indicated desire of Premier Poincare, of France, to limit the scope of inquiry may have on the question of American participation was stated at the White House, when the President's views were disclosed yesterday, to be as yet uncertain. It remains to be disclosed what stipulations France may attach in joining the allies in a formal invitation for unofficial American representation on the committee, and it was indicated that the Washington government probably would agree to American participation, but only after plainly stating its belief that an attempt to settle the reparations question in that way would be fuile. Such restrictions as press accounts of Premier Poincare's recent addresses indicate the French desire to place upon the inquiry were said to be regarded by the President as altering completely the basis upon which the original American proposal was made for a study of the reparations problem. What was contemplated in that, it was said, as an essential condition for any promise of success in the undertaking, was a "complete and conclusive" examination of the whole question.

Mark Highways with Line in Middle.—

The North Carolina State Highway Commission adopted a plan which has proved very successful in many States for some time—that of marking the highways with a line in middle of the road to keep drivers on the right side of the road.

Black paint will be used on concrete roads and white on the bituminous surfaced roads. The object being to divide the road in half and keeping the motorist on his side of the road. The lines can be seen clearly at night, and it is thought that it will be a great aid to the automobilist at night.

The commission has already tried it out on several of the State highways, and are very well pleased with the results.

Marked Decrease in Diphtheria.—

Reports to the North Carolina State Board of Health show a marked decrease in the prevalence of diphtheria for the past two months as compared with the same months for last year, and Dr. W. S. Rankin, State health officer, has expressed confidence that the death rate caused by the malignant enemy of childhood this year will be materially reduced.

In September and October, 1922, there were 1,989 and 1,988 cases of diphtheria, respectively, reported. September this year showed only 817, and October 1,320 cases. The reduction for the two months this year in cases reported as against the same months last year is 1,840, or 46 per cent.

Rebuilding in Japan.—

In speaking of the Japanese earthquake, the Weekly Review, of Shanghai, China, makes the following comment:

"Despite being centers of high rank in importance, Yokohama and Tokyo were excellent examples of what great cities in this day should not be. The streets were poorlly laid out and constructed, with a few exceptions. The earthquake proved the inadequacy of the building construction in a volcanic area. That shock-proof buildings can be built was demonstrated by the survival of the Imperial Hotel, an edifice, to be sure, which was built with enormous waste of money and with almost an entire disregard of architectural harmony, but still one which has defied the worst jolt of history. The tram lines, the telephone system, and most of the other appurtenances of civilization in Tokyo and Yokohama were but semi-modern. From the standpoint of practicality and progress, one can hardly grudge Japan the opportunity to build itself a new capital. From the scar of today will arise the wonder and pride of tomorrow. The genius which converted the Japan of a half-century ago into the world power of today has not been exhausted. Rather it has been developed. Japan will surprise us by the manner in which it avails itself of the opportunity ahead."

With the proper help from the Christian nations of the world, Japan can also build an indestructible foundation for her spiritual welfare as well as one that is proof against the quakes of time.

The President and Law Enforcement.—

The question of prohibition enforcement is primarily one of law enforcement, and the President has taken the position that all law should be enforced. He has gone a step further, and says: "A government which does not enforce its laws is unworthy of the name of government, and cannot expect to hold either the support of its citizens or the respect of the informed opinion of the world." In order to bring about this enforcement, President Coolidge presented the following program to the recently convened conference of Governors, at which two-thirds of the States were represented:

"1. Co-ordination of all Federal, State, county and municipal forces.

"2. To call upon the press to support prohibition law enforcement, stress law observance, and treat the enforcement program commensurate with the gravity of lawlessness.

"3. To call conventions of municipal, county and State enforcement officials at a convenient date, to discuss and adopt a program of the State, the Federal government pledging every possible support to these conventions.

"4. To call upon the prosecuting attorneys in the various districts of the State to confer on this problem, pledging support with every facility to aid in such discussions.

"5. To adopt whatever means are practicable to cause lawless citizens and aliens to respect the majesty and sanctity of the law, and to respect the various agencies enforcing it.

"6. Co-operation by national authorities in all these activities.

"7. Education of the school children as to the evils of liquor."

Mr. Coolidge has taken a step in the right direction. He holds a whip-hand in the situation, and it is hoped that he will drive the issue home.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The pride that destroys the soul is not necessarily connected with great possessions. A poor man may be swollen up with sinful pride as truly as a rich man. It is the spirit that makes the sin.

Five Conferences have held their annual sessions, and up to this time the proceedings have not been sent in for publication. This is a reminder of the Convention's request that the minutes be sent to the editor promptly.

Did you say you gave some one "a hot shot?" Do you know whence "hot shots" come? Some one has said that "a hot shot" is often out of the devil's gun. Then, let us not shoot "hot shots." We can find something better to do.

Appreciation is expressed to all who contributed in any way to the increasing of THE SUN'S list of new subscribers. Those who were contestants for prizes will please send in their reports, so that they may be checked up with the subscription books.

It is a great thing when our Gethsemane hours come, when the cup of bitterness is pressed to our lips, and when we pray that it may pass away—to feel that it is not fate, that it is not necessity, but divine love for good ends working upon us.—E. H. Chapin.

Every subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN SUN is asked to secure one new subscriber. If half of the subscribers can do this it will place THE SUN in about one-third of the families connected with the Southern Christian Convention. Can this not be done? But the goal is a copy in every family.

In my pastoral ministration I went often to see a man who was sick unto death. He ever complained that he could get no peace; that he had prayed continually, "O God, be merciful to me," but peace had not come. One day I said to him, "Suppose you change your prayer, and, instead of praying, 'O God, be merciful to me,' say, 'O God, how merciful Thou hast been to me!'" He followed the suggestion. Peace came and abode with him to the end.—Selected.

Rev. A. H. Hook, of Elon College, N. C., has been called to the pastorate of the Henderson, N. C., Christian Church, and has accepted. Bro. Hook is a son of the late Rev. C. F. Hook and Mrs. Belle H. Hook, of New York State. The father was a minister in the Christian Church, and so is the mother. Mrs. Belle H. Hook is now living in Atlanta, Ga. Bro. Hook is a promising young man, and we wish for him and the Henderson Church great usefulness in the Lord's work.

Here are suggestive words. The Religious Herald says: "The Catholic World for July gives some interesting religious statistics. Fifty-six per cent of Catholics are found in our great cities; only 10 per cent of Methodists. There are eight times as many ministers as priests in this country. The same magazine for August says that there are only 10,000,000 practicing Catholics in France. In a Western city in this country a canvass was made of sixty Catholic lawyers, and it was found one-fourth had fallen away. Of the Irish names beginning with 'O' in Who's Who for this year, 30 per cent have fallen away. The writer quotes Wesley's saying: 'A good Methodist will get rich, but if he gets rich he will not be a good Methodist.' Twelve German Catholics in Milwaukee got rich and they all fell away."

Special Notice to Conference Secretaries.—The Southern Christian Convention, in session at Henderson, N. C., last May, ordered that the Christian Annual be published again this year, as last. It also gave orders that secretaries must have their minutes in the hands of the editor by December 1st, and as much sooner as may be convenient. This is notice to secretaries that the copy will be expected in the editor's hands at Elon College on or before Saturday, December 1st. If not in by that date, they are liable to be left out of the Annual, as the editor must obey the orders of the Convention. If you get behind and your minutes do not get into the Annual, you will have no one to blame but yourselves. Remember, December is not far away.

We have heard of apples of gold in pictures of silver, but we do not very often see them. We found one this morning, and it is so good we are giving it to our readers, especially to our preachers, as it seems to have been prepared for them in particular. Let no preacher pass it by as unworthy of his attention and best respect. Here is the picture: Verily, when a preacher digs into an homilitic cyclopedia for a sermon, he will bring forth things new and old. When he stands before his people with his sermon, his mind will say to the sermon: "I never knew you," and his heart will mourn, "Whence cometh this strange doctrine?" And the people will say: "He speaketh with his lips, but he seemeth to be wandering in far lands where no water is."

The editor of the Christian-Evangelist hits the mark when he says: "They tell us—'they' being movie 'fans'—that the Jewish rabbi and the Catholic priest are never caricatured at the movies. Now, this is as it should be—for every man who is striving to make the world better and happier deserves something above ridicule. But 'they' also tell us that the Protestant minister comes in as the butt of the joke in many scenarios. He is usually an impossible sort of person, with sharp nose, long talon-like fingers, with lips thin like knives, and a general meddler, an ignoramus, a kill-joy and a nuisance. Of course, it is all a caricature, a libel upon the Protestant minister, for he is today a very human man, a very manly man." Now, we should like to know just why the Protestant ministers are thrown in a class to themselves for caricature? Does he deserve it, or is there some other cause for it?

The Eastern North Carolina Christian Conference held its annual session at New Hope, Franklin County, N. C., last week (October 23-25). Dr. Atkinson has been asked by the editor of THE SUN to give us a write-up of the doings of that body. Next week comes the Eastern Virginia Conference at Holland, Va., and then the week following, the Western North Carolina Conference will be in session at Ether, N. C., and the next week the North Carolina and Virginia Conference will be in session at Bethlehem, Alamance County, N. C., and following that the North Carolina State Conference, or the Old North Carolina Conference, which covers the territory of all the other Conferences in the State, will meet at Wake Chapel, in Wake County, N. C.—so these are busy days for our people. The Conferences in Georgia and Alabama were held last week and this. These Conferences cover the territory of the Southern Christian Convention, except the Virginia Valley Conference, which held its session for 1923 last August.

Prof. P. J. Kernodle, THE SUN'S managing editor, has been visiting the various Conferences of the Convention, and we hope he has had a good harvest in the way of new subscriptions and renewals. Brethren, remember THE SUN cannot do much for the cause without subscriptions. Every new subscriber and every renewal but widens the scope of THE SUN'S influence in doing its part for building up the Church. Remember also that every member who is allowed to go without the paper is a loss to both THE SUN and to the cause of Christ. THE SUN gets no help from them who do not take it, neither does the Church get the help from the increased activities of THE SUN'S readers which may be traceable to the influence of the paper. So, when you help to extend the circulation of the paper, you are helping to support the paper and at the same time you are helping to build up the Church by inducing our people to be more active in its work.

Elon College has in the last few days had a visit from Bro. M. Orban, Jr., of Whittier, Calif. He is one of New Elon's benefactors. He it was who gave the "Christian Education Building." His gift and his coming to Elon illustrate that saying of old, that where your treasure is, there will your heart be. After Bro. Orban had given fifty thousand dollars to Elon, then he wished to see Elon, and so he came all the way from his home in California to Dayton on business for the Church, and at the same time he extended his visit from Dayton, Ohio, to Elon College, N. C., that he might see the place and the work which had called from his generous heart so munificent a gift in the Christian education building. His visit to Elon was greatly appreciated by the college people, and we are hoping he may come again when the buildings are all completed and new Elon is at its best and in the beauty which her generous friends have given her. Come, brother; come again! Elon will give you a most hearty welcome, and we hope when that time comes again, your better half may be with you. Bring her, sure. Bro. Orban left Elon on Tuesday evening, October 23rd, going by way of Atlanta, St. Louis, to his California home. He is a very modest and unassuming man, and delights in a quiet way to do good as the opportunity may present itself. May his tribe multiply.

Questions and Answers.

The Automobile.

Question.—Is the automobile a good and helpful inventoin for the day in which we live?

Answer.—Yes and no! The automobile is a good and helpful invention to men and women who will use them well and wisely. The automobile is a hurtful invention in the hands of men and women who have no scruples as to using it in any way and for any purpose they may please. It is a bad invention for the man who uses it to move "moonshine" whiskey so as to get it to drinkers. It is also a bad invention for the men and women who use it for Sunday travel over the country, instead of going to Church. If I owned an automobile, I would have one rule that should always stand on Sunday, and I would want it put up as a sign on the outside of the garage door, and this would be the rule: "Under no circumstances will this automobile be used for pleasure-riding on Sunday. It may go to Church on Sunday, or it may visit the sick, or take relief to the poor on Sundays, but never one foot for pleasure on Sunday." Do you ask: "Why so strict with your automobile on Sunday?" Because I am trying to live a Christian life. My Bible tells me that I must keep the Sabbath holy. In this day of Sabbath desecration, there are so many people who spent Sunday in joy riding, and so desecrating Sunday that I feel sure if they could see me once on the road on Sunday for pleasure it would be told further than I am known, and it would be said: "Well, if he, a minister of the Gospel, can go joy riding on Sunday, I am sure I can, and I will." And then maybe for years that person would never think of a sermon I had preached trying to win sinners to Christ, but about every time any one should say a word against joy riding on Sunday I would be used as a reason for going joy riding on Sunday, saying "If he can go, I can." You can go, but you cannot have me as a stumbling-block.

How About the Garage?

Question.—Do you think it consistent with a true Christian life to run a garage on Sundays? Is it any less harm to do the work in a garage on Sunday than it would be to do the work on the farm on Sunday?—Tom.

Answer.—I do not think it is consistent with a true Christian life to run a garage on Sunday. You might as well keep your store open on Sunday as to keep your garage open on Sunday for business. You may say the traveling public demands an open garage. That may be true, but the Bible demands that we keep the Sabbath day holy. Now, it is a question as to which you will obey—the demands of the public, the traveling public, or the Lord. Choose you which you will obey. As to the second part of your question—as to the more harm to run a farm on Sunday than it is to run a garage—candor compels me to say that one is just as much breaking the law of the Lord as the other. If Sunday travel were limited to what is permissible according to the law of the Lord, there would be no need for an open garage on Sundays. Both are wrong and both ought to be discontinued.

Capital Punishment.

Question.—How can God be a just and loving God and yet command capital punishment? He condemns murder; then how can He approve capital punishment?—James.

Answer.—Some people seem to be thick-headed, in spite of all our schools and colleges can do for them. Let it be once for all understood that I am as reluctant as any man to see or even to know that some man must be electrocuted, but that does not by any means say that electrocution, under certain circumstances, is wrong. It has to be done for the protection of the community. The Lord does not wish any man to be put to death, but as long as men will break God's law and defy the highest and best interest of the kingdom of God, they must be put to death. The Bible makes it as plain as your hand before you. God says in His Bible that the murderer must be put to death, not because God delights in murder—no! a thousand times, no!—but as long as men will defy the good everywhere, some men must be executed for the public good. For instance, where the abolishment of capital punishment has been tried, it has been found, in some measure, that crime has increased, and it has become necessary in several instances to go back to capital punishment. If there be no execution of a murderer, when could we hope to have life safe from murder. Of course, it is not entirely safe from murder now, but it is far more so than it could be if there were no capital punishment. It is plainly commanded in Gen. 9:5 and 6, and the reason for it seems to be because man was made in the image of God, and the man who commits murder destroys that image in the man murdered. When God ordered the destruction of a people, it was because the good of the world demanded it. Men who persistently oppose the high purposes of God may come under this condemnation; and if they do, we have not a word to say in opposition to such destruction. God knows His plans and purposes and His own business better than any man can know them, and if He orders the destruction of a man or a community, or a state or a nation, we have not a word to say, except to bow in submission to the will of God.

The Man Who Lived Millions of Years Ago.

Question.—I see the newspapers have reported the finding of a human skull, in South America, which the scientists declare to have been that of a man who lived some millions of years ago. How can any man say that a skull-bone can give testimony to the effect that he who owned that skull lived millions of years ago?

Answer.—I think he may do so by lying, or at least by talking on a very great uncertainty. One thing is definitely believed, and that is he cannot tell from the skull-bone when, nor how long ago, the man lived. Another thing is also pretty sure, viz: If man lived that long ago and has been subjected to the changes in form which some of these so-called scientists claim, not one of them can know whether the development of a man that far back would have attained to manlikeness anything like sufficient to make sure that a bone some millions of years old is that of man or mastadon, or some other creature. Nothing is known of the shape or the appearance of even a man that far back in the history of the world, to say nothing of other animals. All such assertions are purely guesswork. There is not a book, or a newspaper, or a magazine in existence which was published that far back to give us even a crude description of how the animals looked some millions of years ago. So the most that can be said of the claims of the so-called scientists is that they are simply guessing as to the age of the man whose skull was found in South America. So, if a man was to declare that he had found a skull of a man who lived a hundred million years ago, that would not disturb me at all, and it would not because I know he is only guessing, and his guess, in the absence of data to establish facts to the contrary, is absolutely unreliable. No man has such facts, and no man can have them, and for the reason that there are no such facts. One scientist has already said: "If it is definitely established that a man existed in the tertiary period, it will upset all scientific views regarding the American continents and the antiquity of man. * * * The discovery may prove definitely that man originated in the American continents." Yes, it may, but not at all likely. That is another guess!

The Beast in Revelation.

Question.—Will you tell me what is the meaning of "beast" in Rev. 13, with his seven heads, ten horns and ten crowns? Who is this beast?—Mrs. S. A. H.

Answer.—You have asked a very difficult question, but I will try to give you an answer. John elsewhere speaks of an anti-Christ, and Paul calls the same character, as I think, the "man of sin." The terms are prophetic, and most likely refer to the man of sin as the one who shall rule the world in the last days. This man of sin is the representative of the world powers, which shall come under the one government of the world. The sea from which he comes up is a symbol of the unsteady and unsettled world situation which shall prevail in the last days, and from this troubled and confused world situation one man shall arise as ruler. He shall have seven heads—or seven rulers under him. The ten horns are symbols of world powers as existing under the one man of sin. It must be a man who is spoken of because he is at the head of world powers. The horns are symbols of power, and so the ten crowns will be for the ten heads over these ten powers. This man of sin is partly described. He was in part like a leopard, in part like a bear, and in part he was like the mouth of a lion. I cannot be sure of what all this means, but of one thing, I think, we may be sure, viz: being like these awful animals of the jungle must portray him as a bad character, one whose rule is to be greatly feared by the people. We have had the country ruled by judges, by kings, by emperors, and finally by anarchy, in part. The beginning of the world conditions spoken of in Rev. 13 may be now dawning upon us, as seen in the Soviet government in Russia, where we have almost nothing but confusion. I say this may be the beginning of the conditions when the man of sin shall begin his reign. We may find comfort in one thing at least. The reign of the man of sin will be short—it will continue for forty-two months, and in that time will likely come the great battle of Armageddon, when the forces of truth and righteousness, in their last battle, arrayed against error and sin, shall smite this world power and Christ shall be King. This is a very brief and imperfect presentation of the facts as they seem to be foreshadowed in prophecy, but I trust it may give you at least some conception of what is portrayed in these strong figures, given to the Church by the spirit of God, as indicating the world situation when Christ shall come to make up His jewels in the last days, and then may we look and hope for the reign of Jesus as our King.

THE MONKEY AND THE MIRROR.

Rev. J. M. Rowland, D. D., the inimitable editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate, was seemingly going down the street the other day and he saw a monkey which attracted his attention. From his monkeyship, Dr. Rowland drew several lessons, which he proceeded to prepare for his paper, and he succeeded so well that we are giving them to our paper because there may be now and then one of a monkey disposition to whom Dr. Rowland's message on the monkey may come with force. Now, if any of our readers need these lessons, we beseech them to take the same and not throw them away. Dr. Rowland says:

The other day a monkey sat blinking in the sun in a store window on Main Street. He seemed to be in a good humor with himself and the whole world. He cut a few monkey-shines and seemed to appreciate the impression he made on those who watched him. He even seemed to have a high opinion of himself and the kind of a monkey he was.

But a little thing changed the program very abruptly. A small colored boy handed the monk a little mirror, which he accepted with the readiness of his tribe. He examined it thoroughly, and finally saw himself in the glass, when, lo and behold, and behold and lo, the tranquility of his monkeyship was suddenly changed to rage and fury. He threw down the glass, gave one jungle growl and charged the mirror in madness. For the first time in his life he had seen himself just as he was, and he was not pleased with what he saw.

He has many kith and kin, both near and far, who need a mirror. They have never seen themselves just as they are. They might be as much shocked as the other monkey if they had a mirror that would reveal the real self to them. Many are constantly looking in the mirrors, but never see themselves as they are. They do not see themselves as others see them, nor as God sees them. Burns, the Scottish poet, once aid:

"Ah wad some power the giftie gie us
To see ourselves as ithers see us."

The Social Monkey.

They are constantly looking in the mirror, but seldom see themselves as they are. Painted face, selfish, frivolous, they flit their butterfly flimsy frills before the mirror and are charmed with themselves. The mirror does not show them their poor worldly souls, wasting a precious life on indulgences while life's opportunity flees by and real happiness evades their grasp. Poor girls, who spend all their efforts on paint and pleasure and never see the empty throne of womanhood before them! Poor young men, who live only to be sports and for self-indulgence, when the great call of real and royal manhood sounds unheard by them! Oh, that some one would give them a real mirror that would show them their real picture as the mirror did the monkey on Main Street.

Lend Me Your Mirror.

The monkey is a cartoon, a caricature of man. He is a mimic. He "takes off" man as you watch his antics. There are many such in the Churches. They are cartoons on Christianity, caricatures of what they should be. And yet, like the monkey, they take their role quite seriously. You never saw a monkey that didn't make you laugh, and yet being a monkey was no laughing matter to him. He took his part on the program just as seriously as did the bandmaster or the organ-grinder. But just the same he was a burlesque.

Would it not be fine if many of us would look in the mirror of reality and see our monkey-selves just as we are, just as God sees us. That was one great thing that brought conviction for sin and conversion from sin in the revival. When men came near the cross and looked on their own souls in the glow of that light, they were overcome with a view of their own souls.

No, the lesson from the monkey and the mirror is not sacrilegious nor frivolous. There is a world of truth in it. It is in order to pass the mirror and let us have a look at ourselves.

AN AWFUL CRY IN THE DARKNESS OF HEATHENISM.

Any picture of the heathen world is awful. Taken at its best, the facts overwhelm people who live in the light. We have heard of the many who are passing away day by day, without light and without Christ, and of course without a glad hope of a better life.

We are told that only about five hundred millions of people live in Christendom, and of course many of them are not Christian either in name or in fact. On the other hand, we are told that there are one thousand millions of people living in the dark lands of heathenism, and of these thousand millions, only a few are Christian, less than one in ten, we guess. Taking that as a correct estimate of the world situation, we get a conception of the terrible conditions prevailing in heathenism.

The Sunday School Times, in a recent issue, gives us one of these word-pictures of conditions in heathen lands. It is pitiable, not to say awful. The Times says:

"Perishing people long to be saved. At a recent anniversary of the Ceylon and India Mission the Rev. Poole-Connor told of an experience a friend of his had had when visiting a Christian mission in the west of Africa. 'In the midst of the jungle he came across a native village, and the natives begged him to come and see something. He went. They had put up a native Church, and said: "We have built this Church so that you may send some one to preach to us. Cannot you send us some one?" He went back to the superintendent of the district, and said, "I beg you to send a man to them." "I haven't a man to send," was the reply. "But," said the visitor, "they have built a Church for us to send a man to!" "My dear friend," said the superintendent, "there are twenty such cases as that, all round this district; the natives have put up Churches for preachers to come to, and in several cases the Churches have rotted to the ground before we could send a man to preach."' What shall we over-Churched Christians do about it? Not only the heathen, but our Lord Himself is waiting for our answer."

That is a sad situation for the Church to contemplate. And shall we, the members of the body of Christ, fold our hands and sit down to play while these people in the lands of darkness are building Church-houses and asking, yea even begging, us to send them a preacher to teach them of the life everlasting. We profess to have the Gospel, and with it the love of God, in our hearts, and here are these poor people begging us to send them a preacher of the Gospel. Alas! alas! if the people who are doing all they can to get the Gospel shall be condemned for not having the Gospel, what ought to be our sentence for withholding it from them? Certainly our guilt is much more than theirs—they were trying to get the Gospel, but could not, while we had it and had a plenty of opportunity to send it to them, but we would not, or at least did not. Let us look this situation fully in the face and see where it puts us as professing Christians. Men and women who are truly under the impulse of the spirit of Christ, will find it hard to withhold the Gospel from their fellows who are crying for it, and in this instance not only crying for the Gospel, but showing the depth of their sincerity by building for themselves houses of worship in readiness for the preaching of the Gospel.

To make the case yet worse, if possible, the people of God, in many places, are over-Churched, so far as the house of worship is concerned, for they are building houses of worship where they are not at all needed, and neglecting to send help to these people. You think of a little town of ten thousand population in the United States, having fifteen Churches, while in Japan they have many towns of fifty thousand population and more or less and not a single Church. Why, if we love the Lord, should we not prefer to have fewer Churches in our home town and a larger number in Japan? Why? Will you answer? No doubt, in many cases the many Churches in a small town is a matter of sectarianism; Churches have been multiplied in order that one or two people of a certain denomination living in that town may be cared for and kept in a certain denomination rather than allowed to go along to the Church that is already on the ground and doing a fine Christian work. All such work may prosper for a time, as men call prosperity, but in the closing up of the kingdom the Churches will count for nothing; yea, and in many cases they will count for worse than nothing, inasmuch as they did no real good, but much harm. The time is at hand and the people of God must begin to retrace their steps in this sort of work. We need to plant Churches and build houses of worship where they are truly needed, rather than where we may please our own sectarianism by putting one of our own where they are not needed. May the Lord open our eyes to see these facts as they are.

CAN YOU TELL WHY YOU CANNOT?

We doubt that you can, but if you wish you may try. Can you give a good reason why you cannot forgive your enemy for the wrong he has done you? Suppose he has greatly injured you, or some member of your family—why should you refuse to forgive him? Do you understand that if you refuse to forgive that you cannot be forgiven? That is just the plain teaching of God's Word. What good will it do you, or any one else, to refuse to forgive an enemy for the wrongs he has done? We doubt that there is a man in the country—we mean a sane and reasonable man—who would not truly answer: There is no reason, and yet without a reason there are men and women who go on through life harboring an old grudge against some person, as if by so doing they were undoing the man against whom they are holding this old grudge, when, as a matter of fact, they are undoing themselves by refusing to forgive him who has wronged him. That is just what every man is doing when he refuses to forgive one who has wronged him. Jesus, the greatest teacher the world has ever seen, makes that fact as clear as language can make it when He says: "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your Heavenly Father will also forgive you; but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses."

We are sure that is plain enough, and no honest man or woman will pretend that he or she cannot understand it. We sometimes offer an excuse for not forgiving that fact that the man has done such an awful wrong that we cannot forgive him. That is only a pretext, not a reason at all. If we have the spirit of Jesus, we will forgive any man who has wronged us. Why not? There is absolutely no good in refusing to forgive; no good for you or for the man you refuse to forgive. Here is our neighbr, Frank Smith, he told a lie on John Jones, and from the nature of it there can be no doubt that he told the lie for the one purpose to injure him. Suppose Frank Smith comes and asks John Jones to forgive him. Suppose that John Jones refuses to do so, what good can it do Frank Smith not to forgive him? None whatever. Well, if it can do Frank Smith no good, then, pray tell us, what good it can do John Jones? Absolutely no good whatever, but much harm, for by refusing to forgive him he puts up the bars against the forgiveness of himself by Almighty God, and then he is done for time and eternity, so long at least as he maintains the unforgiving spirit. The following is a good illustration of the forgiving spirit:

"It is said that a man walked sixty miles through storm and snow to ask the pardon from General George Washington of a neighbor who had been sentenced to death. The general said he could not grant the request—the sentence must stand. The man said, 'He is my worst enemy.' Washington answered, greatly moved, 'And you walked sixty miles through storm and snow to ask the pardon of your worst enemy? Your request shall be granted.' This story may be true or not, but it is gloriously true that Jesus Christ died on the cross to save the souls of His worst enemies, condemned to death because of sin."

What a beautiful exemplification of the Christian spirit did this man present? Surely if we can do so much for the man who has been the greatest enemy he has ever had, then surely most of us ought to be ashamed of holding some little trifle against a brother, when there is nothing in it—nothing worth a pin-head. And yet we do, now and then, come up with some man who imagines that he has been injured, and though the injury is the child of imagination, yet it is held and nursed as though it were of the highest importance to maintain the grudge against this man.

There is one fact that all men ought to remember when they determine to hold an old grudge against some one, and that is no man or woman has ever made a particle of progress in the Christian life while he was holding an old grudge against some one. We saw on one occasion a little tree which seemed to be losing its vitality. Upon a careful examination, there was found cutting into the heart of the tree a little borer, a very small insect, and yet it was large enough to destroy the life of the tree. A little ugly old grudge in the heart may seem to be an insignificant thing, but it is killing the spiritual life of the professed Christian, and that is of more importance than all the rest of his life. The loss of a man's soul—that is the most serious thing that can come into any man's life.

You indulge the unforgiving spirit, and according to the words of Jesus, you cannot be forgiven, and there you are, ruined and undone forever! To forgive my enemy is worth more to me than any other consideration that can command my attention now or at any other time. Whatever you do, as a Christian man or woman, do not hold or indulge an old grudge. It is a very ugly thing, and will tend to transform you into its own likeness.

A BLESSED RECORD.

We shall not know in this life the value of a praying man or woman, but that should only the more seriously impress us with the value of prayer, not only for Sunday at Church, but for all the week at home or in company. This would be a wonderful world if all the people who profess Christ could truly say they are living a life of prayer. Prayer does things in the name of the Lord. Prayer even moves movements in human society. It is said of one of the grand old worthies of a few hundred years ago that he stained the white walls of his prayer-room by the breath of his hours in prayer. How we do need praying men and women to control the spiritual tides in human affairs. We have far too little praying in this day.

We have just been reading of one dear soul that had learned to pray, and it may surprise you how much time a man who makes his living by the labor of his hands, with carpenter's tools, can give daily to prayer. Most of us, if we spare five minutes for a little season of formal prayer each day, we think we should be considered pious, but as a matter of fact we have hardly begun to pray when we are content with a few little short minutes given to God in prayer. Let us learn to pray for the spirit and power of prayer, that we may do our part in holy waiting before the Lord.

The Sunday School Times gives the following, and hoping it may get some of our readers to making a similar calculation, so that we may find out how little time we may be devoting to communion with the Lord, and as we find out, may the Holy Spirit move us to doing a better and a more faithful service on our knees in the future. But let us read what the Times says:

1,825 Hours With God.

If one made a careful estimate of the time he has spent in prayer in five years, would it satisfy him that he had had sufficient fellowship with God and had properly prayed through every need? In answer to a certain prayer appeal which a dear old saint of God in Indiana read in the Sunday School Times five years ago, so the director of the Great Commission Prayer League writes, he has scrupulously spent a quiet devotional hour from five to six o'clock every morning before going to his eight or nine hours' service at the (carpenter's) bench. "Think of it," writes this old friend, "1,825 hours without missing, with His conscious presence, and to Him be all the glory and honor. * * * Only in the sacredness of inward silence does the soul truly meet God, and the strength of resolve that afterwards shapes life, and mixes itself with action, is the fruit of that secret solitary time spent thus with God alone." Should not this record shame us who speed away to our work in a feverish hurry every morning, and lead us to spend more time with God?

TWO WAYS TO OVERCOME TEMPTATION.

Many seem to dread the effort to live the Christian life because of the temptation which is sure to pursue them in such an effort. There are two ways at least that the average Christian may resist temptation and come out in Christ more than conqueror.

One of these ways is found in 1 Cor. 10:13, in which we read:

"There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."

That passage gives every Christian the way to escape the tempter's snare and overcome in Christ. Let us cling to it and believe it, for therein we shall gain the mastery over the temptations and wiles of the devil.

There is another way which is good and will often lead aid to the person who is under temptation and is in danger of falling. The Rev. Chas. R. Brown gives us an insight into this second way of resisting the arch-tempter of souls. He says:

"The highest security against temptation lies in the steady development of an affirmative life. The final aim in life is to be something rather than to avoid or to escape something. * * * The best form of defense lies in spiritual attack. If we walk in the grip of some splendid, far-reaching purpose, we shall put down temptation under our feet. We are in the conqueror's path if we walk in the Spirit; we shall then walk secure from attack."

That is a fine idea. You know it has been said that idleness is the devil's workshop. If that is true, as doubtless it is, then one way to hinder and defeat the devil in his efforts is to get so busy that he will have no time to engage your attention. Do not get too busy to pray—in that case you would be helping the devil to pull you down rather than resist him. Keep full of the Word of God and full up to running over of the Spirit, and you will not have much trouble with the devil. He cannot stand a praying Christian.

WORLD COURT WEEK.

November 5th to 10th is to be devoted in this country to what has come to be known as the "World Court Week," or a season devoted to the study of the court of international justice. The aim is to do our best to guard against war and its frequent recurrence among the nations. President Harding, only a short while before his sudden death, August 2nd, had made a strong plea for its acceptance and approval by the United States. The aim of our leaders in using the week of November 5th to 10th is to get our people to study the various features of the court of international justice, so as to give it intelligent support at the ballot box or elsewhere, as opportunity may be given. If you wish to be supplied with literature which will inform your mind, address Commission on International Justice and Good Will of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City, N. Y.

The question is a very important one, and should have the careful attention of every voter in the United States, for before you vote you need to be informed as to what is the aim and purpose of the permanent court of international justice. A postal card addressed as above directed, requesting informing literature, will bring you what you need to know about it.

STABILIZING HUMAN BELIEF.

Yes, we think not only that such a thing can be done, but that it is often very much needed. One great question which has puzzled the air-machine men is how to stabilize the machine and to keep it steady in action. Well, we are of the opinion that a stabilizer for human belief is quite as much needed, if not more so, than in the case of the air machine. Say what you will about it, but when a great world body of Christians attempts to stabilize the faith of the brotherhood, we believe, if it be done in the right spirit, great good will come of it. For one, we are glad that our Baptist brethren at Stockholm gave their influence to a conservative view of Christianity. The following may interest many of our readers:

"We have now about reached the conclusion that, thanks mainly to the Southern Baptists and to the lesser national groups at Stockholm, the alliance has made a pronouncement that will stabilize Baptists and other evangelicals as well, in their reaction toward the German-bred infidelity and rationalism which are now scourging the world. If they have, it is impossible for us to be too grateful for what they have accomplished."—Western Recorder.

CONTRIBUTIONS

ELON LETTER.

The significant things done by the Board of Christian Education were:

Curriculum.

"We have secured the concurrence of the Christian Publishing Association in the preparation of group graded lessons for the primary and junior grades. Our curricula committee has been authorized to outline the full six years' work for these departments, and after testing sample lessons in our colleges and elsewhere to report the outlines to the full board in session a year from now.

"We have especially commended the syndicate series of closely graded lessons to the Christian Publishing Association, and urged that our schools be notified of this recommendation. We feel, however, at this time that the final choice must be left to the manager of the Christian Publishing Association and the local school, it being agreed that any series desired will be secured for our people by the manager."

Summer Schools and Conferences.

"1. Summer schools should afford opportunity for study and training to both men and women, ministers and laymen alike, and not be limited to ministers, as at present.

2. The schools should, wherever possible, run at least ten days, so as to make it possible to do more constructive work.

"3. The program of the schools should include an even distribution of classes and free times; the morning may be used for lectures and classroom work, but the afternoons should be given over to the students to use at their own discretion.

"4. The curricula should be graded; it is suggested that better results may be obtained by concentrating upon a few phases of Church work each year, thus maintaining a balanced curriculum over a series of years.

"5. Wherever the Board of Christian Education puts its money into a summer school, that the curriculum and faculty should be approved by the Board of Christian Education.

"6. The dates of the seven schools be tentatively arranged as follows: May, Palmer; June, Union Christian and Kirton Hall; July, Defiance and Craigville; August, Elon and Bethlehem (or May).

"7. This board co-operate with Home Mission Board.

"8. Hermon Eldredge, Omer S. Thomas, and Mrs. Athella Howsare have been constituted an executive program committee for summer schools and conferences."

Budget.

"We have adopted the following budget for the year, beginning October 1, 1923: General secretary's office, $900; printing pamphlets, $500; Mrs. F. E. Bullock, one-half salary and expenses, $1,250; Hermon Eldredge, one-half salary and expenses, $2,250; W. P. Fletcher, salary and expenses, $3,900; Miss Lucy Eldredge, salary and expenses, $2,500; interdenominational co-operation, $950; stories for Sunday School papers, $350; Franklinton Christian College, $300; general expense, $2,100; scholarship fund, $5,000; colleges, $20,000—total, $40,000."

Scholarships.

It was voted to award scholarships of $100 each to the young people of our Church in training as missionaries, ministers, and all-time professional workers in religious education, provided the Conference from which a student comes has in it Churches making offerings to the Board of Christian Education.

Field Force and Editors.

Editors and field workers in co-operation with the department of publishing were provided as follows:

"W. A. Harper, general secretary; Dr. S. Q. Helfenstein, editor adult division; Rev. W. P. Fletcher, field secretary of the adult division; Hermon Eldredge, field secretary of administration and leadership training, editor young people's division, managing editor Sunday School literature; Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, field secretary young people's division, headquarters' office secretary; Mrs. F. E. Bullock, field secretary and editor of the children's division."

Further Items.

Mr. Hermon Eldredge was elected to represent our Church at the World's Sunday School Convention, Glasgow, Scotland, in June, 1924.

Miss Helen Stearns was elected leader of the group from our denomination to take "the pilgrimage to the shrines of freedom," following the Glasgow convention.

Dr. F. C. Coffin was elected to give a course of lectures at Yale on the "Polity and History of Our Church."

Dr. T. C. Amick was elected treasurer of the Board of Christian Education.

Regional convention directors of Christian education were elected as follows: Southern—Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, Holland, Va.; western—Rev. Jesse Kauffman, Madrid, Iowa; central—Rev. Clarence Defar, Wakarusa, Ind.; metropolitan—Rev. Rosa A. Roemse, Moscow, Pa.; New England—Rev. A. A. Richards, Franklin, N. H.

Four thousand five hundred dollars were voted to the colleges, thirty-three and one-third per cent each to Defiance, Union Christian, and Palmer.

It was voted to be the unanimous sense of the board that Union Christian College fills a distinct need in our educational work, and that it be standardized as a junior college under convention control just as soon as possible.

Quotation marks above indicate that the language used is quoted from the records of the Board of Christian Education.

"THE RESTLESS NOW."

[NOTE.—An address delivered before the late session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, in session at Holland, Va., by the Rev. Ben Joe Earp, pastor of the Christian Church at Newport News, Va., and given to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, by the request of its editor and others, for publication.—EDITOR.]

We are living in a wonderful world. We have heard of the flood of Noah's time; of the period of the patriarchs; of the tower of Babel; of the wanderings of Jacob; of the tribes of Israel; of the wisdom and the wealth of Solomon; of the walled city of Babylon; of the days of Elijah; of the prophets and their work; of the golden and the silver age; of the birth of Christ; of the preaching and work of the apostles; of the rise and fall of Rome; of the Protestant reformation and the renaisance—but in all the history of the world there has never been another age like the present. Ours is a rapid age.

From THE CHRISTIAN SUN of October 25, 1923, I quote the following: "Registrations of motor vehicles in the United States have increased from 3,512,996 in 1916, to 13,002,427 on July 1, 1923. What about flying machines in seven years from now!"

The editor did well to place an exclamation point after the last sentence.

What would Abe Lincoln say of our extravagance, to say nothing of other things?

We are told that in Chicago alone there is a death every fifteen minutes; a birth every eight minutes; a murder every seventy hours; a suicide every eighteen hours.

We have made progress upward and downward in the past. We have advanced in war methods and Church methods. Many of the organizations that go to make up the kingdom of God have been busy; but certainly Satan and his imps have not been asleep. It is easy to note progress in error, crime, shame and ruin. It is also easy to note progress in morals.

Men of science have invented machines to dig ditches and tunnel through gigantic mountains; they have discovered various processes for breaking and working rocks and bars of iron; they have agents for draining marshes, turning the course of rivers, and bowling out the contents of the sea, to say nothing of war-tanks, machine guns, and preparation for the destruction of cities from the air with the flying machine. And while this is true in the scientific world, Satan has not failed to use every opportunity in his effort to defeat Christian morals. He, with his followers, have been on the job, inventing machines to tunnel through mountains and under rivers, instruments for breaking heart-strings, vessels for draining the heart of man of all its generous impulses; sinful attractions for turning the affections away from home, away from truth, and away from God into channels the banks of which are strewn with wrecks, suicides and lost sinners.

Do not misunderstand me. I am not asserting that God's world is growing worse as a world. May God forbid that it ever shall. But I do declare that the forces of God have no time for carelessness and inactivity. The battle has not been won. All enemies have not been placed under the foot of Christ. Every knee has not yet bowed. Every tongue has not as yet confessed. God's kingdom is still on trial in the world and in the hearts of men. We need to sound the battle cry: "Rouse ye! put on the shield of faith, the helmet of salvation, and in thy right hand carry the sword of the Spirit, and in thy left hand the Word of God, which is sharper than any two-edged sword." These weapons, and these alone, will win the victory in the name of Jesus. Religious education will never do it. That might exalt Confucius or the Pope of Rome. The State system of education will never defeat the enemy of truth. The State looks well to the training of the mind. That is fine; but it is not enough. A mind may be trained to work for the cause of sin instead of the cause of salvation. The colleges and universities whose instructors have not been to the foot of the cross and have not drunken deeply of the "fountain filled with blood drawn from Immanuel's veins," they can never hope to banish from the world the destroyer of life and the enemy of the soul. So we are led to the logical conclusion that Christ is the need of the hour.

The past summer, I have been more than once to Buckroe Beach; one Sunday during vacation I went to Ocean View. I found a multitude of people. Many of them young and middle-aged. As a mass together, they were nervous, restless, looking to see what could be seen, seeking pleasure, and trying to satisfy themselves with that which is not bread. The scene itself suggested this subject, and when asked to appear on the program I could not refuse. I thought, as I looked at the impatient multitude at Ocean View, of the words of Isaiah (55:1-3): "Ho! every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? harken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Incline your ear and come unto me; hear, and your soul shall live: and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David."

How Shall We Solve the Problem?

(a) Let the work begin at home. Let the parents, by word, prayer and deed, do all in their power to start the boys and girls right. Let the children be restrained. Let them be taught obedience. Endeavor to make home the most attractive place on earth. A few innocent games, musical instruments, pictures and books are much cheaper than a court scrape, a ruined character, a blighted life, and a lost soul.

(b) Let the Church adapt her program to the age in which she lives. This is the greatest age of the world. Greater Church activity is needed now than ever before. Let the Church quit trying to save self, and go after others. Each Church should become a community center, and save the community, not itself. Any Church living for self alone will die. But some one says the boys and girls won't come to Church. That is simply because your program does not fit the "restless now." Your program does not appeal to them. You have not interested them. Jesus did not win all men alike when He was here in the world. Make your Church program so attractive that the youth will be eager to come to it. But you say, how are we to do that? Study the needs of the youth, their likes and dislikes, let the Church convince the community that it is interested in the community, morally, socially, physically. Exalt Jesus and hold Him up as the ideal for the community and the world. And declare that there can be no salvation except through Him.

Not only should there be social meetings of the Church, and in the Church for the enjoyment of the community, but the Church, as the incorporated body of Jesus Christ, should become interested in the home life of those within its radius of influence.

God created the physical side of man also. So the Church ought to provide for the development of that side. So if the community has no playground the Church ought to provide it; and once it is provided, then don't let the devil supervise the game. Only true followers of Christ should hold that office. Few men break the moral laws while busy at work; it is during play or recreation that the devil gets the best of people.

(c) Learn the spirit of prayer. The psalmist said: "Wait on the Lord, be of good courage and He shall strengthen thy heart—wait I say on the Lord." I believe greatly in prayer. Without it the world will never attain to a high standard of morals. Every man who has ever been influential in moving this earth God-ward has been a man of prayer. Whenever God wants to drive back the powers of darkness and give the devil "cold feet," He selects men of prayer, like Moses, David, Joseph, Daniel, Joshua, Elijah, Farrell, Luther, Knox, Spurgeon, Moody, O'Kelley, and many who are faithful and prayerful in His Church today.

On Prayer.

"Lord, teach us how to pray aright,
With reverence and with fear;
Though dust and ashes in Thy sight,
We may, we must, draw near.

"We perish if we cease from prayer;
O grant us power to pray.
And when we meet Thee we prepare,
Lord, meet us by the way.

"Give deep humility, the sense of godly sorrow give;
A strong desiring confidence
To hear Thy voice and live.

"Faith is the only sacrifice
That can for sin atone;
To cast our hopes, to fix our eyes
On Christ, on Christ alone.

"Patience to watch, and wait, and weep,
Though mercy long delay;
Courage our fainting souls to keep,
And trust Thee though Thou slay.

"Give these, and then Thy will be done;
Thus strengthened with all might,
We by Thy spirit, through Thy Son,
Shall pray and pray aright."

LITERATURE IN SCHOOL AND COLLEGE.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

Our schools and colleges are beginning their work for another year. Thousands of our children are gathering their books, and wending their way to the school-room. Trunks have been packed, and tickets bought, and away to college thousands more have gone. Vacation is over for another year, and the sound of the school bell is heard in the land.

We are pouring our taxes and our wealth into the erection of larger and better buildings, and into the increase of the faculties of graded school, high school, college and university. Never before in any age has more attention and more money been poured without complaint into the matter of the training and education of the youth of our land. Our own State has roused herself to a new day, and every roadside shows the increased attention shown to better buildings and greater effort for our children.

In the matter of the teaching of the English language and its literature, the past fifty years have witnessed an entire revolution. In North Carolina alone we now have from five hundred to one thousand teachers and professors who are supposed to be devoting themselves to the teaching of the English language and its literature. Many of our graded schools and high schools have faculties devoted to the teaching of English now that are larger and better prepared for the work than were the college professors of a generation ago.

The time has come when the public can rightfully make demands upon our schools and colleges in this matter. There can be no general development of the literature of a people until we have reached a time of certain leisure and prosperity, and this time has been reached. There is now no legitimate excuse why there should not be a great increase in the literary life of our people. It is the one great need of the hour from our schools and colleges. Appreciation of literature and production of literature go hand in hand. Readers and writers are born of the same impulses. If we can secure standards of taste and appreciation, we will soon secure work to meet both.

In justice to ourselves, we need to bring pressure to bear upon our teachers for certain results. These results are justly due us; they can come only when our teachers lend themselves to bringing them to pass. It is incumbent upon our teachers to lead their students into the highways and byways of literature, and to encourage them to think and to write. The duty rests upon them of setting standards of taste, standards of attainment, and leading their students to reach these standards. The time has passed for turning from our schools so-called graduates with no literary possibilities save a cursory reading of a careless newspaper.

We can no longer be satisfied with a teaching of the simple things pertaining to grammatical construction, technical rule, and rhetorical formula. Teachers who have both knowledge and enthusiasm ought to be able to fix in their students' minds estimates of the worth of the things already done in the literature of the English-speaking people; they ought to have such zeal and sense of values as to be able to turn from their class-rooms a generation of young people who will reverence a great book, and set as one of life's noblest aims the production of noble thought. They ought to determine to make of our people a reading and a thinking people. We are making no invidious criticism when we assert that in many cases the teacher has failed to rise to his possibility. One who assumes to teach thereby takes upon himself certain responsibilities that he cannot escape, and from which he ought to ask no excuse. From many quarters, there is a rising note of demand along these lines. If we are not a book-reading, or a book-buying people, the first remedy is to fix the place of responsibility. Right here in school and college much of it rests.

This school year ought to be a great year for literary development. Every teacher worthy the name ought to set higher aims before him. We need more reading clubs; more advice and selection of books; more suggestion from higher authorities; more living up to the responsibilities of "teacher of English," and "professor of the English language and literature." The time and money that we are putting into the enterprise of education give us the right to make certain positive demands, and to expect that these demands shall be met. Any merely material civilization will defeat its own aims by its short-sighted policy. Let us move out upon broader lines and aims than we have ever heretofore had.

"THEY SAY."

"They say;" yes, but who was it that said it? That phrase has blasted more characters and wrecked more homes than any other in the language.

Call a halt on the lecherous peddler who comes at you with his wares—"They say!" Put it straight—"Who says?" That hits the spot. You cannot afford to miss.

The person who circulates a scandal is a social vampire. He sucks life-blood. No combination of words in the language has caused more trouble, pain and sorrow. It is anonymous. It has no personality. It cannot suffer any reaction. It is wholly irresponsible. The phrase ought to be put under the ban. It is this way: You speak of some one of a mutual acquaintance. There is a shrug of shoulder, a lifting of the eyebrows. There is a lowering of the voice, with the preface, "They say." Even when the gossip fails to give his authority he has put an evil idea into your mind respecting yourself of the suggestion. The impression stays. The suspicion lurks. A great wrong is done. "They say." The ears that are eager for that always find a mouth to pass it on to other ears. The assassination of character has begun.

What "they say" may sometimes be a true message. But is it a necessary message? Will it make the old world better or worse by the telling of it?

It is very plain that much suffering and sorrow might be prevented by cutting these ugly words clear out of your vocabulary. If a man or a woman won't cut them out, you steer clear. And be quick!—J. Marvin Nichols, in Herald and Presbyter.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

THESE TWO MONTHS.

During November and December every possible effort should be put forth on the part of pastors, captains, four-minute speakers, women leaders, and all, to secure as large payments as possible on our Men and Millions pledges. During the depression in financial circles for two years following the war, many of us could not meet our obligations. Conditions have changed. God has abundantly blessed. People are meeting their other obligations and are spending vast sums for any and every sort of thing they wish. If in such a time we fail of our obligations to Church and to God, one wonders what the consequences will be. Out of sheer gratitude, if on no other account, we should make now a determined and desperate effort to meet our obligations to Men and Millions.

That we ourselves or others have discredited the movement or have let it drop out of sight, in no manner releases us from the obligations we assumed nor detracts from the merit of the movement. The Christian Church has certainly never undertaken a holier movement than this, nor one calculated to help the Church more. Let every one who pledged bear in mind that every dime or dollar paid to the movement goes to help every interest and enterprise of the Christian Church. If we love our Church and have a regard and a concern for what it stands for and is trying to do in the world, surely we will do our utmost to pay these pledges. In the movement, God seems to have wrought with us far more wisely than we had planned or dreamed. For instance, one cannot see how The Christian Sun today would be published and sent out to our people but for this movement. It seems that we would have had to suspend its publication or to have taken a turn that we now know not of but for the support that this movement has given it.

Some of us had dreamed that possibly the day would come when all our aged and enfeebled ministers and the widows of ministers would have an annuity as an expression of our gratitude and appreciation of them. Sooner, however, than we had hoped, God has brought this to pass, and now for two years all our superannuated ministers and the widows of ministers have received an annuity which helps them to a degree to more comfortable living and shows them that we have not forgotten or that we are indifferent to their needs. One need not enumerate, however. Our orphanage, our colleges, missions, home and foreign, and all that our Church supports and undertakes to do, have been materially aided and spiritually benefited through this movement in a way and manner that gives courage and hope of larger things to come.

During these two months, then, when paying bills and meeting other obligations are uppermost in our minds, we should not forget the most moral and the most binding and the most solemn obligation of all, namely: our obligation to our dear Church and to Him who planted it and whose joy will be made full in its realization of His purpose and plans through it.

OUR "OBLIGATION TO GOD."

Many have excused themselves from meeting pledges made to Men and Millions and other Church enterprises on the grounds of financial depression. Conditions are better now; the Lord has abundantly blessed with crops and prosperity. I believe that Dr. W. W. Staley, whom we all love, has put this matter of meeting our obligations about as plainly and pointedly as it can be put. In one of his printed utterances recently, he used these words: "It will not pay to disown these obligations nor to separate them from the real spiritual life. A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations—'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42); but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

If those who have made pledges to Men and Millions can see the matter as Dr. Staley has presented it, many who have neglected to pay heretofore will make an effort now. We all need to do this, both for our own sake as well as for the kingdom's sake. If we will not do our best to meet our obligations to Church and to God it is to be feared we will not do much to meet obligations to fellowman.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE A FEEDER.

Thus Elon seeks to bless humanity, and thus Bethlehem plans to feed Elon and be a double blessing to our people.

If all our people could see the need for Bethlehem as I see it, and if all could realize what it means to the Christian Church in the South as I realize it, the five thousand dollars would be an easy job.

Look out, dear brother pastor, for a little piece of mail from your dear beloved brother in the South. We need five thousand dollars—we must have five thousand dollars for Bethlehem.

THE POCKET-PIECE THAT PURCHASED PEACE.

By W. H. Morse, M. D.

The coin so wonderfully used of God, as described in this article, was struck by the Scripture Gift Mission and over 130,000 of others like it were circulated amongst the demobilization camps at the close of the World War. This story is illustrative of the good they may have done which will never be known this side of eternity.

The object of this mission, which issues these coins, is the free distribution of the Scriptures. It is supported largely by voluntary contributions. In no part of the country are the Scriptures more appreciated than in the Southern mountains. A plan is usually followed whereby children, if they read a Gospel, may secure a Testament, and it is thrilling to see their eagerness to become actual owners of the Word of God. All gifts to further this work are applied to the circulation of the Word of God.

Remittances should be sent to R. B. Haines, Jr., secretary, Scripture Gift Mission, 119 South Fourth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Just as sure as you keep carrying that token in your coin purse you will be giving it to some one for a quarter!"

That was my sister's opinion.

"Oh, no," I replied; "I guess not."

"Likely as not you will drop it into the Bible School collection," she continued, and then added, "If I were you I wouldn't carry it with me."

It was one of the little white-metal tokens from the Scripture Gift Mission of Philadelphia, just about the size of a twenty-five-cent piece.

On one side was: "The wages of sin is death" (Rom. 6:23); on the reverse side was: "The free gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus."

There was nothing superstitious about carrying it, but somehow it seemed good to have it in my pocket, and I had carried it fully a year; then one day it was missing. I did not have the least idea as to what had become of it, or when I had parted with it. It might have been several days before I had noticed that it was gone. My pocket had not been picked, for it had been in the coin purse, and that was intact. But it was gone; and sister remarked, in doubtful consolation, "That's all there is about it!" I obtained another, and I have it yet.

One Sunday afternoon, several months after the first token had disappeared, among those who came into the mission Bible School, at Hartford, Conn., in the men's class was a stranger, an Italian. I presume that the teacher would not have paid any very particular attention to him if it had not been for one thing, and that was that the man kept his eyes on me, the superintendent, instead of paying attention to the lesson and its teacher. After the Bible School session, it is our custom to have a prayer service and testimony meeting for about half an hour, and on this Sunday there was nothing particular to distinguish it from any other Sunday if it had not been for the incident that took place.

There had been several interesting testimonies, when the stranger stood up. Pointing his finger at me, he said:

"And you? Why do you not give your experience?"

I do not recall my answer, and he went on—

"Come now! You tell how you one time thought you would cheat a poor Italian fruit-seller!"

"Explain that," I said.

"Yes," he replied; "I put it up to you straight. You were in Waterbury, Conn., one day. You stopped to her stand and bought the bananas. They come to twenty-six cents. Did you pay it? No, you did not. What did you pay? You paid just one cent, and you slipped around the corner and got away. You remember! No? Pretending it was a quarter, with the penny you handed her a white-metal piece."

"It is possible!" I exclaimed; "my pocket-piece! Like this?" And I showed the one that I had. "I did not know that I had paid it out," I continued, "but I have no doubt but what you are right, for in some way it was missing. I will go on purpose to Waterbury and make it right."

"You let me say more," the man said. "You see what it says on that piece. All right. The woman she showed it to me. I read it. 'Wages.' 'Death.' I could not get to understand. I fixed itself in my mind, and I could not get away from it. Say! I gave her twenty-five cents for it. I asked the grocer what it meant about Romans, for I came from Rome. He said it was in the American Testament, and he read it to me. I must read some more about that. So I went by the book store, and buy me one American Testament. I never had one before. I read it, read all of it. I went in the mission. And oh! you guess I came happy! Yes, sure. I go all the time. I am one of them now yet."

"How did you come to identify me?" I asked.

"I do not know," he said, "but I came in here, and the woman had told me how you looked. When I heard you talk, I did not know that maybe you did not intend to cheat her, and gave it out to convert her. Yes?"

I replied that I only wish it had done so.

"Listen!" he said, with a laugh. "It did. I showed her the Testament. I read it to her; to others. It bought peace for her; for others. Yes, it did!"

"Oh, no; sure!" he replied. "I lend it. See? I let folks read it. I let the dear Lord do the rest. Sure it buys peace!"

It was a strange expression, but true in a very large sense; for during the war thousands of those coins were distributed at the evangelistic services held in the demobilization camps, and in very deed they helped to purchase peace.

FILLING THE EMPTY CHURCH.

(In Two Parts—Part I.)

The "empty" Church is the Church which does not have the attendance which its location, membership and message justify. The worldliness of its own members may be a contributing factor. Weather or climate, social conditions or industrial affairs, may singly or unitedly form a combination of conditions which are conducive to weak Church attendance. Whatever may be the cause, the Church is face to face with a cold, hard, difficult situation. The Church which is confronted with this problem, should sit down together and look the proposition squarely in the face. Diagnose it. Determine the situation, and then adopt a constructive program, with a set of plans to meet the peculiar and particular circumstances confronting it. Begin to school your loyal members who attend the Church upon the real good that there is in attending the services of the Church.

The matter of Church attendance has never received the attention its importance justifies. Church attendance is vital to the life of the Church, local and universal. The character and influence of a Church are determined by the number and character of the persons who attend its services. The Church that expects to be a factor in the life of the community must see to it that its members are faithful in the matter of attendance.

The evangelistic effectiveness of the Church rests upon the number of unsaved men, women and children that are reached by the appeal of the Gospel; but they must be attracted to the sanctuary before they can hear and believe and accept.

The financial success of the Church—indeed, of every movement for the spreading of the Gospel and the uplifting of humanity in any direction—is possible only where men and women are trained in stewardship, and their consciences kept tender on the subject of giving by the continuous appeals of good preaching.

Nonattendants at Church are usually nonsupporters of worthy works; but the men and women who attend Church regularly are the supporters of the mssionary causes of the congregation, local and world-wide. The real religion of the Church comes to the individual through persistent attendance upon the sanctuary. Neglect of the Church by its members would destroy it from off the face of the earth in a remarkably short time. In the light of these incontrovertible facts, it behooves the leaders of the Church to give car to every legitimate method that may be suggested for attracting people to the worship of Almighty God in the sanctuary.

It is currently reported that, taking all America the year round, Church attendance does not average more than 40 per cent of the membership of the Churches. In many Churches the figures are very much lower than this. Where are the other 60 per cent, and why should they not attend as well as the 40 per cent that are loyal to the services? Do not these 60 per cent need to have their lives quickened by the message of the Church? Would they not think it a grievous public calamity if all the Churches were closed, and the public worship of God and the preaching of the Gospel be discontinued? These are questions, the solution of which lies at the very root of the "go-to-Church" movement. Back a few years, the "go-to-Church" movement began in real earnest, starting in the fall, and spreading like wildfire from town to town, city to city, until it was not unusual for a Governor or Mayor to issue a proclamation urging people to "go to Church." For a few Sundays, large audiences were brought out, and later on the campaigns took on a more permanent character, developing into thoroughgoing movements covering a period of weeks. The Church began to advertise. Illuminated signs were installed, calling people to the services, and the thousands thus attracted gave the Church and religion a larger place in their lives.

In a "Church-attendance campaign" we should seek to secure the pledge of every member for faithful attendance during the campaign; bring in as many friends and neighbors, who are not members, as may be enlisted in the campaign, and increase the attendance of the Sunday School. Eliminate the evil of separation between the Sunday School and the Church service, holding the young people and boys and girls for the sermon. The bringing of the whole Church into the Sunday School for study, and the keeping of the whole Sunday School for the preaching service. Caring for the very little people in the kindergarten, and the juniors in a separate service, where facilities and leaders are provided. The securing the pledges from the Christian Endeavor societies to be present at all the "regular Sunday and midweek services" of the congregation, unless prevented by some vital, scriptural reason, acceptable to Christ, the Head of the Church. The teaching of every member of the Church to observe and recognize Church attendance as a sacred obligation. Such an effect will probably not be secured in the first attempt at a "go-to-Church" campaign, but patient and persistent effort along this line will ultimately transform the Church and make it be actually what it now is only in theory. Loose methods of the past are responsibls for the conditions prevailing in the local Church, and, while building up the new order of things, it is necessary to make the best use of the facilities already installed and in operation.

The primary requisites of faith, hope, love, consecration, and the spirituality of the membership are the foundation-stones upon which every progressive program of the Church should be builded. The recognition of Christ as the supreme Ruler over all is a paramount necessity. To be a minister to the people, rather than to be ministered unto, should be the primary thought guiding the activity of the local Church in undertaking such a "Church-attendance campaign" as will result in worth-while increased spirituality and activity in the Church life.

FIFTY YEARS AGO AND TODAY.

"In the same little workroom in Berlin where Bismarck, a little more than fifty years ago, brought to birth his dream of a German empire, Chancellor Stressmann today sits facing the bleak prospect of its dissolution. Haggard and ill, the correspondents picture him struggling doggedly to avert the break-up of the German republic, which is what now remains of Bismarck's building. The disruptive forces which he must control and reconcile, if his country is to be saved from disintegration, are Monarchism in Bavaria and in the north, Communism in Saxony, Thuringia, and other industrial centers, and republican Separatism in the Rhineland and the Ruhr basin. As John Clayton reports the situation in a Berlin dispatch to the Chicago Tribune: 'Democracy's crisis has broken in Germany. Chancellor Stresemann is fighting for the German people against the Reds who would drag them into the pit of Communism, and against the Monarchists who would bring back an autocrat who would rule them for the benefit of the great industrialists.' If he loses his fight, pessimistic observers tell us, the resulting chaos will sweep away the allies' last chance of recovering reparations from Germany, will make problematical the payment of debts among the allies, will open the door of Europe to Red Russia, and may precipitate another world war." —Literary Digest.

THE MAGDALEN.

By Howard W. Pope.

Our Lord once sat in a banquet hall;
A curious crowd stood round the wall
To hear the music—what guests might say,
For that was custom of ancient day.
They saw our Lord with a pure, strong face,
And kindly speech and a winsome grace;
When from the crowd, a girl of the street,
Burst into tears and fell at His feet.

She kissed His feet (not a word was said),
Then wiped them with the hair of her head;
From costly box of rare perfume sweet
She poured it lavishly on His feet.
And then she heard Christ to Simon say,
"You asked me here as a guest today;
You gave no kiss, as was your just meet,
But this poor girl kissed even my feet.

"My head thou gavest no ointment sweet,
This contrite girl anointed my feet.
Her sins, though many, are forgiven,
And she enjoys the peace of heaven."
To her He said, when Simon did cease:
"Thy faith hath saved thee—now go in peace!"
Two striking sinners met Christ that day—
One gave up sin, one went his own way.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

THE WAGES OF SIN.

(Read Ps. 15.)

It is said of the young lad who was far away from home and dead broke: "He began to be in want" (Luke 15:14). Sinning is a most expensive business. This youth had had plenty of money, but now he was broke. He might have spent some of this money for an education to establish himself in business, or he might have spent some of it for the Church, or charity; but he chose rather the primrose path of pleasure, of selfish gratifications, of sporting and having a good time, and at last he found himself financially broke. He was once prominent, well dressed, popular and a leader among his fellows. He was now bankrupt, character gone, and his life full of shame and misery. This is the end of all evil ways. It is reaping what is sown. It is the law of cause and effect. The psalmist said: "I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." We have today a day and a week ahead of us to live. "Better is a dinner of herbs where love is than a stalled ox and hatred therewith." "The path of the upright is made a highway" and "a wise son maketh a glad father."

Prayer.—Our dear Lord, teach us to follow Thee and serve Thee as Thou desirest; to count the cost of sin and eschew it; to give to Thy cause and not count the cost; to fight for Thee and not heed the wounds and the suffering; to work unstintedly for Thee and not grow weary; to labor and not ask for reward, save that of knowing that we do Thy will and that we aid in Thy good. Through Jesus Christ our Lord, we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

TRUST GOD MORE.

"The Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men."—Dan. 4:17.

"Woe unto them that trust in chariots because they are many, and in horses because they are strong; but they look not unto the holy One of Israel."—Isa. 31:1.

Before we begin the duties of the day, let us look for God and find Him, and worship and serve Him unfailingly. The astronomer said: "I have swept the heavens with my telescope and found no God." He had as well said, "I have taken apart the piano and examined it with my microscope and found no music." God is a spirit manifested in everything around about us, and He is to be discovered by the soul.

During the Revolutionary War, Franklin called Congress to prayer. From that moment, no one could explain the turn of the war. During the Civil War, Lincoln spent an all night in prayer, and no one could explain the victory next morning. During the great World War, many times a few put thousands to flight, and just as often no one could explain the victories. Once a man was directing the repair of some machinery. Something said to him: "Get away." He did so, and instantly a seven-hundred-pound block fell in his tracks. God lets us know, in one way or another, that He is and that His will shall be done on earth. He has a vast purpose for us, and He will not fail. All nature is fighting for it; experience is fighting for it; justice and righteousness are fighting for it—why shouldn't we join the army of the Lord and give of our best to fight for it?

Prayer.—Dear Lord, we are very guilty when we consider how little we have done for Thee and how poor in our trust in Thee. Root out of our hearts all pride and self-reliance and fashion both us and our efforts after Thy holy likeness, that we may do Thy will, and the world may have the victory in all righteousness. Forgive us, dear Lord, our failures, and enable us to go forward unfalteringly. In Christ's name. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

LOYALTY.

*"My son, fear thou the Lord * * ; and company (meddle) not with those that are given to change."—Prov. 24:21.

"Better is it that thou shouldst not vow, than that thou shouldst vow and not pay."—Eccl. 5:5.

Loyalty is the first of virtues. How many have it through the "thicks" and "thins" of life? Jesus thought it so important in Christian character that he dwelt upon in the parable of the faithful steward and the talents. Isaiah said it is like "the girdle of a man's life." Lamentations exhorts us to be as faithful as the Lord is to us, whose "faithfulness is new every morning." It is easy to have petty loyalties, such as fast friends, pleasurable habits, realistic ideals, personal appearances, allegiance to gains, etc., in which we may omit to count the cost. Under the influence of an inspiring moment it is easy to avow ourselves only to find out later that we cannot meet the obligation. We have certain fundamentals to be loyal to, viz.: God, family, friends, self. Let us measure our standard by God's, and by right living today, and be as our Lord Jesus Christ, "unmoveable" in our faithfulness to all.

Prayer.—Dear Father, give us the Christ spirit of loyalty to Thee. Purify and keep thou pure our hearts, that we may know the unchangeableness of a Christian heart. So enable us to live the transformed life that we may abandon ourselves unto Thee, and trusting in Thy holy spirit, we may always be living examples of Thy power to save. Amen.

THURSDAY.

EVERY-DAY FRIENDSHIP.

"See that ye love one another fervently."—1 Peter 1:22.

The Christians of the first century had one theme, one spirit, one work, viz.: their theme was Jesus, their spirit was love, and their work was helpfulness. They were without divisions and united in affections, and it was said of them, "see how they loved one another." When modern Christianity shall be pruned of its worldliness, when life will be all simplicity, when love shall be the ruling element, when division-makers and wrongdoers shall be in disgrace, when purity is more coveted than society, when knowledge of heavenly things is more desired than the earthly, when Christ is the only Leader—then we all will be friends. These must be a reality in our everyday life. Let us do our part by one another and by all we meet.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we come to Thee today and lay our lives on the altar for Thy service. Give us such a conviction of Thy power in our love for one another that light may be brought out of darkness, joy out of despair and victory out of defeat. Bring all Thy children together in a way that the world may say of us, "Behold, how they loved one another!" This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE PLEA OF THE KINGDOM.

"He that feareth Him (the Lord) and worketh righteousness is acceptable to Him."—Acts 10:35.

Why are we members of the Church? There are many reasons why we should be; but, as a matter of fact, why are we? Is it to escape hell, to attain heaven, to make self better, or is it to bring the reign of God in the world? Which of these motives do you prefer? The reign of God is the reign of righteousness. "The kingdom of God is righteousness." Then, in surrendering our lives to Christianity, we are not submitting to something mysterious and altogether of faith, but to the work of a right living and setting everything right. The whole purpose of the kingdom is that all wrong shall be righted and that right can prevail in everything; and the paramount plea of the Church is that we yield ourselves to this. Paul puts it: "Whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things" (Phil. 4:8); and likewise he expresses it again: "Abhor that which is evil and cleave to that which is good" (Rom. 12:9). When this condition obtains completely, then it may be said that the kingdom has come. It is up to each of us to do our part.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, give us a growing understanding of Thy kingdom. Impress us more and more with its plea and demands; its benefits to us and to the world; and give us, we pray Thee, the desire to be persistent in committing and surrendering ourselves to Thy service. May we experience the sweetness that comes by doing the things we ought to do, as well as in the things which we love to do; and we pray that this may be our chief pleasure. Amen.

SATURDAY.

WHEN THINGS GO DEAD WRONG.

"The righteous shall live by faith."—Rom. 1:17. "Have Faith in God."—Mark 11:22.

Often things seem to go dead wrong. Sickness, out-of-sortedness, blues, business-sick, etc.—and our labors seem to amount to nothing. Like clouds in the skies, these cloud our lives; and as cloudy days are dreary, so are we made blue. But so often the clouds in the skies are only wind clouds. They soon drift away; and just as often, too, ours are clouds without waters and are soon blown over. When the problems face us, it does not do to say, "Forget it" and be cheerful—that does not face the issue. We cannot always turn our faces to the wall and be resigned to what we cannot help. It may seem devout and savor of doing our best to do so, but to the un-Christian individual it means nothing. What should we do? What do we do when we get sick? Send for the doctor and submit to a great many inconveniences to get well. If a bone is broken, we suffer the ordeal of twisting and "setting" it and wait a long time for its healing. We are in the world to make sick things well and set wrong things right. When Abraham Lincoln prayed, he got up from his knees and said there remains nothing to do but peg away. The man with faith enough to get upon his knees will hearten and be brave to dare and do. Jesus prayed in the garden and then said, "Let's go." Nothing is wrong with the universe. The sun rises and sets on time every day. The God of the universe is the God of humanity, and of us, and He will not fail. The greatest strength of any man is to be sure of Him.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, with the strength of these thoughts, may we walk without stumbling, and if we stumble, may it be to fall upon our knees to pray for forgiveness. Trusting in Thy mercy, which is as wide as the ocean; in Thy understanding, which is as deep as the sea, and in Thy love, which is as plenteous as the air we breathe, dear Lord, we commit ourselves to Thee. Amen.

SUNDAY.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

Our Lord's teachings regarding the Sabbath do not apply so much to the restriction of our bodies as they do the freedom of our spirits in fulfilling of the highest obligation to ourselves. The Sabbath law is not a chain to bind us slavishly to undesirable observances, but a door into spiritual palaces, where we find greatest delights, where our natures spring up into goodness and uplift the soul. Somebody has said that all earth and heaven is made for man. It is counted off to him in the gifts of days, divided up into cycles of seven. Six of them are robed in russet garments of service, and the seventh is adorned in a queenly attire, and with hand uplifted, a shining finger points upward to God—a symbol of all eternity. Whatsoever our activities may be, it is truly a day of rest when it is made a day of worship. Let us turn wholly to Him today.

Prayer.—Dear Father, renew Thy spirit within us today and draw our hearts unto Thyself. May we not serve Thee as slaves, but with joy and gladness, finding that a whole surrender to Thee is the best of all and our chiefest delight. Forgive us of all our sins and make us Thine forever. Amen.

ELON NOTES.

Announcement was made today through the president's office of the college that Messrs. B. N. and J. B. Duke, two distinguished sons of North Carolina, had decided to erect the Artelia Roney Duke science building here, which will be a part of the rebuilding program, in memory of their mother. This building is estimated to cost $50,000, which amount the Duke brothers have contributed for this purpose.

Mrs. Duke, in whose memory her sons have decided to erect this science building, was born in Alamance County on June 28, 1829. She was a member of the distinguished Roney family of this county, who have from its earliest days been prominent in Alamance. Her maiden name was Artelia Roney. Mrs. Duke passed to her reward August 20, 1858, and lies buried in her native county soil at the Roney burying ground at Haw River.

The Artelia Roney Duke science building is the fifth of the buildings in the rebuilding program for Elon College necessitated by the fire of January 18th. This building is to be 120 feet long, 64 feet wide, three stories high, and basement. The first floor is to be given over entirely to physics, lecture-room and laboratories; the second floor is assigned to biology and geology, and the third is for the chemical department. The building is so constructed that 120 pupils in each department can be on duty at the same time. The architect, Herbert B. Hunter, in making the plans for the building, was assisted by Professors Brannock, Hook, and Powell, and made a careful study of recently constructed science buildings. It is believed that the new science building here will readily take rank among the most efficient college science buildings in the country.

For a generation the Duke brothers have been signal friends of Elon College. When the administration building was burned on January 18th, a telegram was sent to them, giving them the sad intelligence of this fact, and immediately they wired $5,000 each in rebuilding program, and now they have decided to enable the college to complete its rebuilding program at this time by contributing the science building. The people of Alamance County rejoice with the college that these brothers have decided to make this contribution in memory of their mother, who was well known and loved in this county.

Christian Orphanage

ARRANGING FOR THANKSGIVING.

DEAR FRIENDS:

It is time for us to begin to lay our plans for the Thanksgiving offering in our Churches. It would be a splendid idea if some one in each Church would make a ten-minute talk each Sunday at Sunday School and Church in behalf of the Christian Orphanage. If we could get some friend who has sympathy for the little children to come to our rescue and do this most noble service, I feel that our offerings would greatly increase over last year. Impress the idea of giving the value of one day's income for this noble cause. There is not a member of the Christian Church who could not give as much as one day's income to help us care for our 105 children.

My friends, let us do our best this year and make your offerings liberal and worthy of your Church and people. Make it large enough that you will feel proud of your offering when it is published in the orphanage report. The children must be fed, clothed and cared for. It takes quite a lot of money to do it. It is an opportunity to help the helpless. Make use of your opportunity.

The following has been sent in: Pine Forest Missionary Society, N. C., Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Shaw, beans, peas, potatoes, peanuts; Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Shaw, beans, potatoes, peas; Mr. E. L. Aldridge, 1 bushel wheat; Mrs. E. L. Aldridge, 1 bushel wheat, 2 pounds butter; Mr. W. L. Miles, bag of apples; Mrs. W. B. Miles, 5 pounds sugar; W. B. Miles, 1 bushel wheat; I. W. LIQUOR SMUGGLED INTO NEW YORK WOULD NOT HAVE A KEPT BAR TOWEL DAMP IN OLD DAYS.

Preparatory to speaking in Clinton and Franklin Counties on Sunday, September 16th, an Anti-Saloon League field day services when a score of league speakers will deliver addresses in the region bordering the Canadian line, Orville S. Poland, counsel for the league, has made a comparative study of figures proving that liquor smuggled into New York State under prohibition would not keep a pre-prohibition bar towel wet. In a statement, which will be the basis of his address at Bloomingdale on Sunday, he says:

"Since the repeal of the Mullan-Gage law, the people of northern New York are practically compelled to stand at one side and watch the rum-runner ply his business without let or hindrance. A handful of Federal officers, even if they are all efficient and honest, can scarcely guard every road or cope with the organization perfected by the rum-runner. A stream of liquor is flowing from the Province of Quebec into the State of New York not only for consumption in this State, but for consumption in neighboring States. Northern New York is the funnel through which that stream of Canadian ale and whiskey must pour, and the northern New Yorkers are the luckless bystanders who must witness this wholesale disregard for the law of the land.

"There is one comforting feature—the United States statistical abstract for 1916, table 295, indicated that the average per capita consumption of liquor in the United States was twenty gallons a year. The amount of liquor sold in New York State over a period of years would indicate that this was a fair proportion. In other words, prior to prohibition, 10,000,000 inhabitants of New York annually consumed about 200,000,000 gallons of liquor. We can disregard the amount of liquor that is now smuggled over the Canadian border for inhabitants of other States and figure what it would mean to smuggle in 200,000,000 gallons of liquor for the normal pre-prohibition thirst of the inhabitants of the State of New York. Take good, generous-sized touring cars—Cadillacs if you like—and if all the tonneau is devoted to the storage of liquor without allowing for any passengers, for any attempt to conceal the contents or for the bulk of containers, thirty gallons per car would be a good, generous load. In order to transport New York State's normal pre-prohibition supply of liquor, 6,333,333 Cadillacs and Packards would be required—six times as many cars as there are in the entire State of New York. Each car in the State would have to make not only one, but many trips to Canada to furnish this supply. If they were all on the road at once with bumpers touching bumpers, they would stretch in a line nearly 13,000 miles; they would line every foot of State road and every foot of country road in the State; they would reach from the Atlantic to the Pacific four abreast!

"The man who intimates that the amount of liquor being run into the United States today anywhere near approximates, even to a fractional degree, the amount consumed before prohibition is a deliberate liar. The purpose of the exaggeration of the amount of rum-running done is to break down the morale of the American people, who by their expressed wish at the polls and through their representatives in the Legislatures enacted prohibition as a policy of the nation."

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

November 18, 1923.

Subject: "Our Lord Jesus a missionary."—Matt. 9:35-38; Mark 1:29-39; Luke 8:1-3, 10:1; John 3:16, 17.

Golden Text: "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have eternal life."—John 3:16.

Devotional Reading: Ps. 40:1-10.

The Missionary Zeal of the Master.

Jesus Christ is foremost among missionaries. The Old Testament looks forward to His coming. He lived a life of missionary endeavor, preaching, teaching, healing and helping. He commanded that His followers should be missionary, and trained workers to go forth to train others, that the chain should not be broken, but the work furthered. He was "the heir of all the ages, in the foremost files of time." Even all history dates from His life.

Jesus Christ lived a world life in a very small area on this earth. A few hundred square miles were His parish, but His whole thought and desire and love was for the whole world. He began with His own nation, but He never forgot His mission was to all mankind. The pages of all four gospels are filled with His missionary deeds. Service for others was the keynote of His life. To be "more like the Master" is indeed to be more and more missionary. The term "missionary" is growing wider and wider in its application. No longer does it mean only to go far, far away to live and to work, to face cannibals and teach "heathen." "Missionary" in the Master-way means to love the whole wide world with such a devotion that one is eager to serve where he may be, and to extend that service wherever opportunity presents. It means to live a Christian life, that is a life of loving faith and obedience and service to a kind Heavenly Father, with the sympathy and love for all of His children which must accompany worship of the Father.

Jesus, the Missionary Traveler.

Not long trips were His. Just about the cities and villages he went in His home-mission work. He went into the synagogues to teach on the Sabbath. Jesus ever used the things familiar to His hearers, and through the near at hand, led them to see the great eternal truths. He used the synagogue of the people, the place where they were used to coming together, to preach the Gospel of the kingdom. Jesus was the first great medical missionary, as He healed all manner of sickness. And after His work was done in one place, He was eager to be off to some other place to teach the Gospel He had been sent to bring. All Christians cannot travel afar, but each can preach the Gospel, in some act of service, where he lives, or perchance in the next town or village, if the love of the Master is truly in the heart.

Jesus, the Teacher of Missionaries.

As Jesus traveled, He was concerned about the lack of workers to do the needed work. He compared the people ready to hear, anxious to know the truth, to a harvest, already to be gathered, but no laborers to care for the grain. Soon it would be too late. His first method was to exhort the people to "Pray the Lord of the harvest, that He send forth laborers into His harvest." The need for laborers has always been great. It is today. Is your Church praying that workers may be secured to do the tasks for which it is responsible? Is your Sunday School class earnestly praying that its members may be ready for the tasks which God has for them to do? Is your Christian Endeavor Society seeking life recruits for the work of the Master? Prayer, the all-powerful instrument in accomplishing things, is the Master's first way of securing workers and missionaries.

"And he saith, let us go." While Jesus was preaching to the people, He was constantly training the little group whom He had chosen to be with Him. He knew that much of the work must be left for them to do. Upon their faithfulness, much depended. Everywhere they were with Him to help, and, even more, to learn from His words constantly. And He chose "certain women," women who had been blessed themselves and were ready to help others, and all had a share in His work. And then seventy others were sent two by two into every city and place. It is a wise worker who is continually training some one to carry on his work. Association helps this training. What a blessed experience the disciples had in association with the Master! Your daily communion with Him is your best preparation for Christian service. And He wants to teach you!

The Missionary Spirit of the Christ.

"Moved with compassion." Pity for the ignorant, and sympathy for the suffering has sent out many a missionary. The Lord Jesus Christ was moved when He saw the people's needs. He is still moved by the countless thousands who have never even heard of His coming, of His life, of His death upon the cross for them. Think of the changes that would be in every community if the story of Jesus had never come to American shores! With that story have come Churches and schools and hospitals and every institution which ministers to human welfare. With it have come good homes, clean cities and prosperous countrysides. A social worker in New York once said: "There are only two things needed to reconstruct the world." "What are they?" asked a friend. "Compulsory sanitation and universal education," was her answer. "Has it ever occurred to you," replied her friend, "that Germany had both in abundance?" A nation of people who are not "moved with compassion" like the Master, and by love for Him, is unsafe, no matter what other progress it has made. The compassion of Christ, which is the missionary spirit, brings peace out of war and chaos. It restores friendship and crushes enmity. It makes life sweeter and better and more joyful. It brings a happiness which far exceeds sinful pleasure. Should not all men know of this Christ, who is standing, with hands outstretched, saying "Come unto Me!" Shall we not follow the Christ, in His spirit, to tell them of Him?

"For God so Loved the World."

The "little Bible," this verse in John's gospel has been called. It is a verse loved and often quoted. It brings the whole message of salvation. It tells of the love of God, and reveals His purpose in sending His Son into the world. Dr. McCormick, in the Westminster Teacher, suggests that this verse may be written thus, to express the message which it brings:

God so loved the world that He gave His Only begotten
Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not Perish, but have Eternal Life.

It is the Gospel which has brought to each one of us salvation and pardon. As this love of God is recognized, and His offer of salvation accepted, a responsibility to tell others comes. David Livingstone, that noble missionary, made the resolve: "I will place no value on anything I have or may possess except in relation to the kingdom of Christ. If anything will advance the interests of that kingdom, it shall be given away or kept, only as by the giving or keeping of it I shall most promote the glory of Him to whom I owe all my hopes in time and eternity." This was the life he lived, following the missionary of missionaries —Jesus Christ. May His matchless life come today even with a greater message of unselfish love and untiring service for others.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

November 18, 1923.

Topic: "How Obtain a Great Missionary Advance?"—Acts 13:1-12.

Thoughts for the Meeting.

The Scripture lesson for this meeting gives a number of answers to the great question of the topic—

How Obtain a Great Missionary Advance?

1. Through Prophets and Teachers.

More and more, through all the departments of the Church, we are coming to see the absolute necessity of teaching missions. For a long time the Church was as though asleep regarding the great command of Christ to go forth and teach all people His Gospel. Many were the arguments, when the first awakening came, why we should let our missionary work, like charity, "begin at home," and most of it ended there. But now, year after year, a greater missionary advance is evident, because people know more about the conditions and needs, and through lesson and story and sermon, lands far away, as well as nearer home, are pictured so graphically that the loving heart of every Christian must be stirred to do everything possible to further this advance. So preachers and teachers have done much, and are going to have to do more. Through the powerful agency of teaching, boys and girls are coming to most naturally think of their Heavenly Father as the Father of all, and to be interested in boys and girls of other lands. Missionary spirit and ideals must be developed early by such teaching, in order to further the missionary cause, as well as to enrich the youthful life, for poverty-stricken indeed is the non-missionary Christian, if it is possible for a Christian to be without any missionary conscience. To be Christian means to be missionary.

2. Through Devout Christians.

When the members of the early Church "ministered to the Lord and fasted," the Holy Spirit came upon them. It has been truly said that the greatest advance is made upon the knees. Surely this must be true in the winning of the world to Jesus Christ. Some can go, most can give, but all can pray, and through prayer serve a vast world. Only through Christians devoutly missionary, filled with love, can the greatest missionary advance be made.

3. Through Choosing Workers.

"Separate me," was the command of the Holy Spirit. Two men were chosen for a particular task. They must be prepared for the task. They must feel that they were to go out, to be separate from their home and home surroundings, and go forth for God, and with God. Every Sunday School should be a supply house to be furnishing missionaries. Every Christian Endeavor Society should be seeking to impress upon some heart the great need for workers. Faithful stewardship of life must be taught. No greater privilege can come to a Church than to send out and support one of its own young people for home or foreign missionary work.

4. Through Supporting Workers.

Barnabas and Saul were called, but the whole Church had a part. All were interested. All fasted and prayed. All shared in the preparation for their future. All sent prayers after them. Missionaries often testify to the great strengthening influence which prayer is, and the encouragement which comes from knowing the folks back home are praying for them. God calls men into His service. Some are to stay at home and do the very needful tasks, others are to go afar. But every one has a share, and without the supporters back on the home field the missionary advance can never be made.

5. Through Accepting Opportunities.

"We do not so much need a new advance as grace to go through the doors that stand open. There is nothing to hinder our advancing, except our own unpreparedness and indifference."—Daily Companion.

Many countries are calling for more workers. Church buildings are needed. Countless souls are longing for the Gospel. The world is awakened, and many avenues for missionary service are open. Will we advance to meet the opportunities?

6. Through Proclaiming the Word of God.

Nothing else will make a great advance possible. Everywhere that Saul and Barnabas went, the Word was preached. When God's book, which is missionary from cover to cover, is studied and its truths proclaimed, the Church cannot help but be missionary, and many darkened lives will be uplifted.

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

Let the missionary committee plan the program, or the young people's missionary society of your Church. Have one member prepared to tell the effects upon our missionary work of the Japan disaster, showing that we have a challenge there to advance in our work; a challenge great, because of the immediate need for help.

A Japanese picture on a poster will be an effective way to advertise the meeting.

From the Christian Missionary prepare a number of slips, telling interesting facts about our own missionary work, and give one to each member to read and discuss in the meeting.

The mission study books for this year are on Japan, for the foreign mission course. Discuss the possibility of forming a mission study class, and if possible make plans for this.

SUGGESTED HYMNS: Missionary hymns in your hymnal.

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

NOVEMBER 18, 1923.

TOPIC: "Children in Mexico and South America."—Mark 16:20.

"And they went forth, and preached every where, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word by the signs that followed."

"Some of us live on the hill,
And some of us would if we could;
But whether we dwell
On hill or in dell,
We are all in one neighborhood."

Do you remember the story of a rich young man who came to Jesus one day and asked Him, "Who is my neighbor?" And then Jesus told him a story which we have heard many, many times about the good Samaritan, who cared for the man attacked by the robbers, and told the young man to tell who was the neighbor—the priest, or the Levite, or the Samaritan. If you will read the story again, in the tenth chapter of St. Luke's gospel, you will see that they decided that the one who showed mercy was the neighbor. Neighbors are not just the folks that live next-door, but folks anywhere, if we can love them and show mercy. Mexico and South America are our "neighbor countries," so the boys and girls of this lesson must surely be our neighbors. Every month, Junior Endeavorers are gaining new friends and neighbors, as the boys and girls of different lands are becoming better known to them. They are learning that these far-away lands have gifts for us all the time, and that there are many things which we can give to them. Shall we be good neighbors, since "We are all in one neighborhood?"

PROGRAM FOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETIES FOR 1923-1924.

Dr. Francis E. Clark, founder and world's president of the Christian Endeavor movement, proposed as a program for Christian Endeavor Societies, for two years following the Des Moines convention last summer, a very significant campaign. It is to be called the "Friends-of-Christ Campaign." To the great host of Endeavorers present at Des Moines to hear Dr. Clark's keynote speech, the great "Father Endeavorer" presented this question: "Does not this campaign express by its very name the pith, the inmost purpose, of Christian Endeavor? Friends of Christ, friends for Christ, friends in Christ—this is the summum bonum, the highest good for which we can strive." The motto of the campaign is found in John 15:14: "Ye are my friends if you do whatsoever I command you." The program is threefold in its definite goals—in the Church, in the society, in the world.

In the Church, in which Christian Endeavor was founded, and to which the society has ever been most loyal, the goals for work are outlined as follows:

1. Loyalty to the Church.—Through increased attendance at Church services, and help to the pastor as he may suggest.

2. Graded Christian Endeavor.—Through organization of junior, intermediate and other grades of Christian Endeavor, and an alumni council.

3. Co-operation with Church Organizations.—Through service in the Sunday School and other organizations and co-operation in a unified Church program.

4. Wider Church Fellowship.—Through the support of denominational enterprises and co-operation in interdenominational Christian Endeavor activities.

The program for work in the society of the "Friends of Christ" suggests also four avenues for work:

1. Recruiting for Christ.—Through maintaining helpful and attractive Christian Endeavor prayer-meetings, and seeking to bring every member to Christ.

2. Faithfulness to Christian Endeavor Ideals.—Through maintaining high standards of active membership, and the promotion of daily prayer and daily Bible reading.

3. Leadership Training.—Through study classes, and the presentation of opportunities for life service.

4. Training Through Service.—Through giving definite work to every member and providing a worthwhile social program.

In the world, this new Christian Endeavor program or campaign stresses:

1. World Evangelism.—Through winning young people of the community for Christ, and prayer, gifts and work for home and foreign missions.

2. Community Service.—Through a worthwhile recreation program and ministration to neglected groups.

3. Christian Citizenship.—Through education and agitation for law and order, and promotion of Christian principles in home, business and industry.

4. International, Interdenominational, Inter-Racial Friendship.—Through work for a friendly association of nations, and the practice of good will among races and denominations.

Such a program entered into heartily by the great host of Christian Endeavorers of the land cannot but better conditions and further the work of the kingdom. Provision has been made by which a society may be an "honor society," upon being certified by their pastors to have maintained a satisfactory program of Christian Endeavor activity over a period of six months or more, and a certificate of honor will be granted by the United Society of Christian Endeavor. Gold medals will be awarded for special records. Every society reporting the Christian Endeavor World in every Christian Endeavor home may nominate one member each year to receive free the United Society gold medal of honor. For exceptional Christian Endeavor service, gold medals may be awarded by State unions.

The Christian Endeavor World and the Dixie Endeavorer will carry plans for carrying out the "Friends of Christ Campaign," and the Christian Endeavor societies that are really striving to serve "for Christ and the Church" will welcome this Christian friendly program. In our own Southern Christian Convention there are many Churches whose young people need Christian Endeavor Societies as a medium of expression of their Christian love and service. There are many societies which may be recorded as "honor societies" because they have met not only the requirements of the society, but of their Lord.

To be friends of Christ, friends for Christ, friends in Christ, in a program of personal devotion, of evangelism, of world fellowship, is a high honor. Through such a program as this one of Dr. Clark's, much good must be accomplished.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE FUND.

Since last report, I have received for the Bethlehem College fund the following amounts: Mary Fay Hill, $5; Joe Day Hill, $5; Miss Alma Goodwin, $20; H. T. Burgess, $5; Rev. C. W. Hanson, $5; Mrs. Fannie Patrick, $5; Mrs. S. E. Pearson, $10; Mrs. J. M. Richards, $2; Mrs. M. J. Stephenson, $2; C. H. Stephenson, $5; E. C. Stevens, $1; Mrs. Sue Jones, $5.

All these good people are anxious for our cause to succeed. Will you help us, friends? If you will, just answer with a five-dollar bill. Come on now, brothers and sisters, and let us do something for our dear old Church that will make the future generations rejoice. I know every local Church has its problems, and every pastor has his burdens, but we all have one common interest, and that is to give to our children a Christian education under the influence of our own dear Church.

Rumatism and Indigestion

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its affects in their practice, believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect, and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

If you suffer from Rheumatism, Indigestion, or from any curable disease, accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to—
Shivar Springs,
Box 16-D, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons (two five-gallon demijohns) of Shivar Spring Water. I agree to give the water a fair trial in accordance with instructions which you will send, and if I report no benefit you are to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

JONAH AND THE BIG FISH.

Not so much is being said in contradiction of the Bible account of the runaway prophet Jonah having been swallowed by the big fish since the finding of several deep-sea specimens off the coast of Florida, at Miami, fish large enough to have gulped down half a dozen men at once.

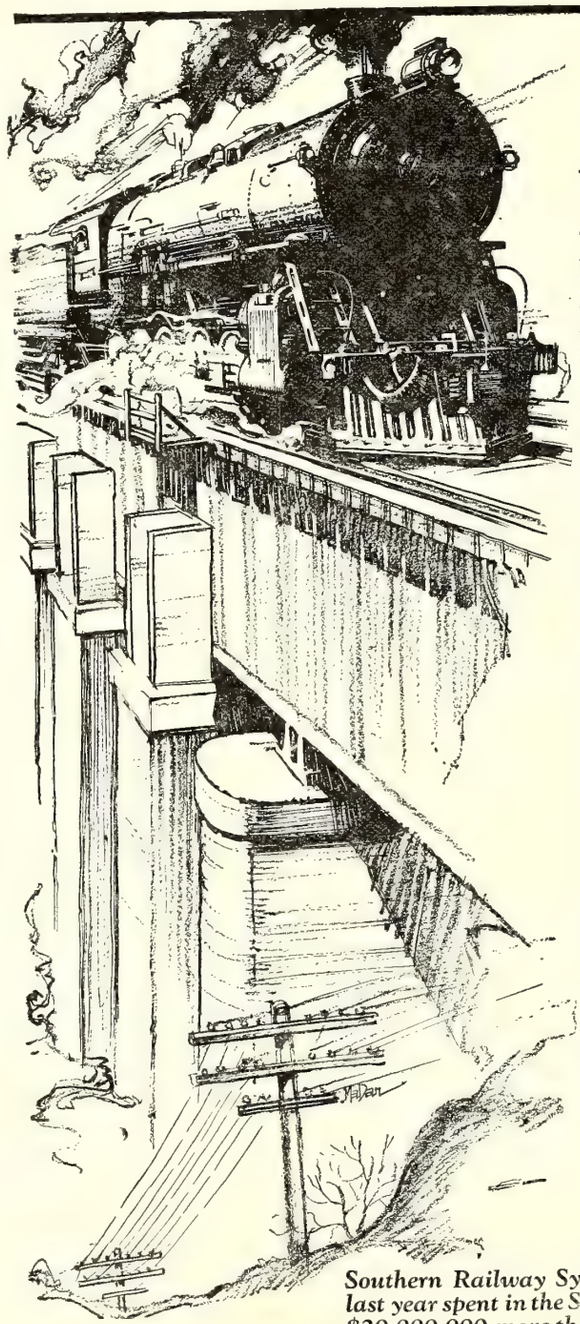
The latest monster caught off the Florida coast is described by the printed clipping that we herewith reproduce. It is surely a wonderful specimen of the inhabitants of the great ocean.

There is many a preacher still inside the big fish, because he would not do as God wanted him to do, that if he would make up his mind to obey God, he would soon be at the landing-place.

After describing operations of the hatcheries in different parts of the country, officials of the Washington bureau called attention to the "mystery fish" that was captured a short time ago by Capt. Charles H. Thompson, near Miami, Fla. This mighty monster of the deep, when it was cut open, was found to contain in its stomach an octopus weighing four hundred pounds, a black fish weighing fifteen hundred pounds, and five hundred pounds of coral. This fish could not only have swallowed Jonah, but also many like him without feeling the least pang of indigestion. The greatest interest is being manifested at the fisheries bureau concerning this fish that measured forty-five feet in length and weighed fifteen tons, or nearly thirty thousand pounds, with a circumference of nearly twenty-three feet and nine inches; a tongue forty inches long, several thousand teeth and a tail measuring ten feet from tip to tip.

J. S. Wambeth, of Washington, the celebrated taxidermist, recommended by the Smithsonian Institution, was selected to mount this gigantic fish that required five days to kill, although numberless harpoons were thrust into its side and hundreds of large-calibre rifle bullets were fired into its body, only seeming to increase the fury, and causing it to dash for the open sea, dragging a small boat with it. It soon smashed the boat into a thousand pieces. When the pursuers began to close in around this fish with one mighty sweep of its mighty tail it crushed, as if they were paper, the rudder and propeller of a large vessel that had joined in pursuit of the fish. This fish probably belongs to a class that lives at a depth of fifteen hundred feet or more. In preparing this monster for mounting, nineteen barrels of formaldehyde were used. With no eyelids, there were indications that this fish lived at the darkness of a great depth. No records exist of any larger fish ever having been captured, and scientists claim that even with its immense size, this fellow clearly shows that he was but an infant. —Immanuel Herald.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM



Keeping pace with the South

The first American locomotive to enter actual service was the "Best Friend" of 1830. Built in a New York foundry, shipped by sea to Charleston, it hauled the first passenger train on what is now the Southern Railway System.

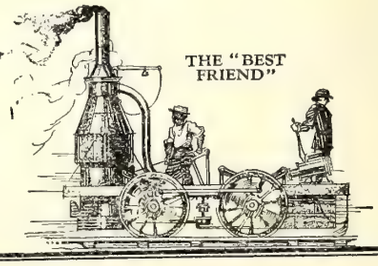
Twenty-two hundred locomotives, some of them fifty times as heavy as this famous pioneer engine, and 70,000 cars, operating on 8,300 miles of Southern Railway System lines, are now doing the work that was begun by the "Best Friend."

From the Ohio and the Potomac to the Gulf, from the Atlantic to the Mississippi, the far-flung rails of the Southern reach across twelve states with 40,000,000 inhabitants.

The Southern serves the South—from the northern gateways at Washington, Cincinnati and Louisville—and the western gateways at St. Louis and Memphis—to the ocean ports of Norfolk, Charleston, Savannah, Brunswick and Jacksonville—and the Gulf ports of Mobile and New Orleans.

Operated by men of the South, who have been bred in its traditions to understand its problems and its needs, the Southern keeps pace with the South. The investment in its properties is now more than $710,000,000, of which $285,000,000 has been expended in the past two decades.

With the continued cooperation of the people of the South, we will be enabled to command the capital for the greater transportation facilities that Southern development will inevitably demand.



Southern Railway System last year spent in the South $20,000,000 more than it received from the South.

The SOUTHERN SERVES THE SOUTH

FAITH OF OUR FATHERS.
By Rev. S. A. Steel, D. D.

Faith of our fathers, proved of old,
By martyrs and by saints believed;
The glorious truth we still will hold,
Which from apostles was received.
Faith of our fathers, holy faith,
We cling to thee in life and death.

Faith of our fathers, though assailed
By all the foes of God and man;
The truth hath over all prevailed
Since time its radiant course began.
Faith to thee in life and death—
We cling to thee in life and death.

Faith of our fathers, we will prove
That thou art true from day to day,
By kindly deeds and words of love
Which shall thy saving grace display.
Faith of our fathers, sacred faith,
We cling to thee in life and death.

God of our fathers, keep us true
And steadfast to our latest breath,
That we like Paul may say at last,
We kept this holy faith till death.
Faith of our fathers, hallowed faith,
We cling to thee in life and death.

DIED.

Three burials in the cemetery at Mt. Auburn, Warren County, N. C., in one day. First, the one-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Fleming Hilliard, little Jennings Fleming Hilliard, who was buried on his birthday

Second, Mrs. Narcissus Jones, widow of Robert E. Jones, age eighty, mother of two daughters, Luna B. and Minnie G.; one brother living, R. B. Williams, and one sister, Mrs. S. Y. Spain; also three granddaughters.

Third, Mrs. John V. Hilliard, age about forty-five. Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Hilliard were devout followers of the world's Redeemer. It may be said of the darling little boy, as of all children: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Dr. Fuller, pastor of the Baptist Church at Warrenton, N. C.; Dr. Self, pastor of the M. E. Church, Norlina, and Prof. Herbert Shortz, of Monroe, N. C., all took part in the solemn services. The departed left a host of friends. Three pyramids of flowers were seen to mingle their fragrance and beauty with the autumnal glories of the majestic trees about Mt. Auburn Cemetery the last day of October, 1923. D. A. LONG.

SPEAKING OF BATH TUBS.

Adam Thompson, of Cincinnati, was the first man in the United States to use a bath tub. This was on December 20, 1842.

The installation of the bath tub in Mr. Thompson's home, and the actual use of it for bathing in winter, caused widespread publicity, and the newspapers devoted their columns to violent discussions of it. Certain patriots stated that this type of bathing was a degenerate luxury, designed to corrupt the democratic simplicity of the republic. The medical fraternity denounced it as "dangerous to health and bound to result in phthisis, rheumatic fevers, inflammation of the lungs and the whole category of zymotic diseases." Legislation reflected the common feeling.

The Philadelphia Common Council, late in 1843, considered an ordinance prohibiting bathing between November 1st and March 15th, and it failed of passage by only two votes. During the same year the Legislature of Virginia laid a tax of $30 a year on all bath tubs. Boston, early in 1845, made bathing unlawful except upon medical advice, but the ordinance was never enforced, and in 1862 it was repealed.—Selected.

Judging by the number who have been in to congratulate us on our editorial anent the actions of some of our Superior Court judges, we are convinced that the judge who thinks he is making himself solid with the voters by catering to the liquor element is going to have a rude awakening when they ask for the votes of Person County.—Roxboro Courier.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Mission Losses in the Near East.—

Losses by American mission boards are now being counted up in the Near East. The Turks destroyed property belonging to the Congregational Church of this country valued at $2,880,000, and it is not probable that there will be any payment for indemnity for this loss.

Jewish Congress Held.—

What is known as the American Jewish Congress was held in New York City recently. Hundreds of delegates from many parts of the United States attended. Besides the many delegates, the assembly was increased by interested visitors. The purpose of the Congress is to help make conditions better for Jewish people throughout the world. One of the chief speakers was Israel Zangwill, the noted British author.

Testing the Spiritualists.—

Spiritualists make great claims as to their communing with the spirit world. Recently the Scientific American, the leading scientific paper of this country, offered a prize of $5,000 to any spiritualistic medium whose success would stand scientific tests. A number of mediums have tried to win the prize, but all have failed and their tricks have been exposed. But, notwithstanding this fact, no doubt they will go on with their claims and continue to deceive many people. It is remarkable how many people will accept the unfounded claims of such deceivers of the people. One of the things which it would seem would condemn them in the eyes of sensible people is that almost all of their performances are conducted either in the dark or in a very dim light. Any claim that cannot stand the light may well be considered as false.

No Hard Times in This Country Now.—

Hard times can no longer be claimed for this country. Naturally, after the war there had to come a period of readjustment, and this brought stringent times to many, but the business of the country has readjusted itself. There probably never was a time when as few people were out of work or when the unsupplied demand for labor was as great. The Manufacturers' Record, of Baltimore, reports that on October 1st the farmers of the country had in sight an increased value over last year on sixteen of their crops of $1,600,000,000. It is estimated that the increase in all of their crops will be well over $2,000,000,000. This is merely the increase over last year, and last year the returns from the farms were very good. Another evidence of the improved financial condition of the country is shown in the number of automobiles that have been sold. If the rate of manufacture and sale is the same for the last three months of the year that it was for the first nine months, the sales of new automobiles will reach 4,000,000. If we put the low average price upon them of $1,000, the people of this country will, by the end of the year, have spent $4,000,000,000 in the purchase of new automobiles. The ease with which in a few days more than $9,000,000 was raised for Japanese relief is another evidence of the prosperity of this country, as it was of the liberality of the people. There are many people who are giving liberally of their means to support the work the Lord has given His Church to do. It is interesting to think how gloriously this work could all be done if all of the people gave to God a tithe of their income. At this rate, if the farmers had given a tenth last year, their increased gifts this year would be $400,000,000. And farmers, as a class, do not by any means have as large incomes as many other people. The paying of the tithe by all of God's people would solve the financial problems of the Church at least for many years to come.

Unfair Dealings.—

The Presbyterian of the South says: "Brazen effrontery is not an admirable trait. Recently we called attention to the fact that the Knights of Columbus, the men's organization of the Roman Catholic Church, claimed that they had a special message from President Coolidge sent to their international convention held in Montreal, Canada, just after he became President. We also called attention to the fact that President Coolidge denied positively that he had sent such a message. Since writing that paragraph, we have learned of another similar claim. The official organ of the Knights of Columbus is a magazine called Columbia. In its August number it published an article headed 'Learning the Art of Living.' It was credited to 'Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States,' and it was claimed that it was written especially for that magazine. The New York Times reports that the managing director of the magazine was asked about the article, and that he made this statement: 'This is an original article written by Mr. Coolidge for Columbia. He sent the article along with his picture." The Times says that the President has made a flat denial that he has written anything for Columbia. It seems that the magazine has taken a part of a speech delivered last April by Mr. Coolidge, then Vice-President, before the New York State Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association at Albany. It is hard to understand how any one could make such a public misstatement as these two about the message and the article. The only explanation of it, so far as we can see, is that the Knights of Columbus want to appear as having the support of the President. They make these statements, expecting the people of their Church and many others to believe them. No doubt, they concluded that, if the statements were denied, many who saw and believed the statements would not see the denial. It seems strange indeed that any organization, claiming to be connected with a Church, should stoop to such methods in the effort to persuade people that it is held in high esteem by those who are high in authority and power in our country."

Big Coal Field Found in Ireland.—

An incredulous smile may be the first greeting that the mere suggestion of the "development of Ireland's natural resources" will receive from a skeptical Irish public, we are told, which has long since ceased to take this common cant of their political spellbinders as legal tender. But now these doubtful ones are confronted with the report of an official commission on the subject of the Tyrone coal-field, which lies in Ulster and promises a very rich yield. The Dublin Weekly Irish Times remarks quaintly that while "this to be sure is but another commission," still it is generally known that "work and not talk" has been going forward in northern Tyrone for many months, and that the coal-fields there are now well past both the theoretical and the experimental stage. We read then:

"The engineer reported that at Coalisland two shafts over a thousand feet deep had been sunk, and that these had passed through no fewer than ten seams of coal, averaging three feet in thickness. The colliery now established is intended to work on a small scale only, and is expected to produce approximately two thousand tons a week for a period of about forty years. Four hundred men will be employed at first, but this number will be increased to a thousand in a little while. The extent of the proposed operation of this colliery gives no true indication of the size of the coal-field. The consulting engineer, whose evidence was taken by the commission, explained that there probably were two hundred million tons, and possibly much more 'in sight,' and lying between the existing colliery and Lough Neagh."

What it would mean to Ireland if this coal could be raised can be estimated, says this weekly, when we remember that the country's annual consumption is about 4,000,000 tons. For the present, the need of cheap electrical power in such northern towns as Cookstown, Portadown, Lurgan, and in Belfast itself, it is said, has caused the mine owners to consider the establishment of a turbo-generating plant at the pithead, and the sale of the resulting electrical energy instead of the coal. Yet it is questioned whether coal, however plentiful, can be carried from northern Tyrone to Belfast at a rate that will enable it to compete with British sea-borne coal.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Thanksgiving Day will come this year on the 29th.

Wanted—New subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN; also many renewals.

Joseph learned how to be a great king by learning how to be a great servant.

The fiber of a man is shown in the way he bears adversity. Most any kind of a tree can stand up against a summer's zephyr, but it takes an oak to calmly face the hurricane.

The Religious Herald says it will not publish complimentary resolutions, passed by Churches upon departing pastors, except as the same shall be paid for. Well, what do you think of that? If THE CHRISTIAN SUN were to do such a thing, we should expect to hear from the forces that be. No doubt the Herald is right, but—well, can you tell why?

What are you doing for our Church paper? It is time you were making some special efforts to give it a hearty support. Newspapers cannot live without money to pay its bills. Something ought to be done, and done speedily, to make sure the continued publication of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. You will do well to begin now. A better support is the one great need of our Church paper.

Do you see the difference between the following statements as to facts? The Religious Herald says: "A citizen of the kingdom proclaims his citizenship in his profession of repentance and faith, rather than in his baptism." Then the World and Way, another Baptist paper, asks the Herald this question: "Are penitence and faith an outward act?" To this question, the Herald makes answer: "No, but a profession of repentance and faith is an outward act." We believe Dr. Pitt is right.

To pastors, superintendents and Church-workers in particular: THE CHRISTIAN SUN is published every Thursday, at Richmond, Va., at the following rates: One year, $2.00; six months, $1.00. Or, to new subscribers, if five join in forming a club and remit $7.50 at one time, THE SUN will be sent each one year (separate addresses); for a club of ten and a remittance of $15.00, an extra copy will be sent as a premium to the one getting up the club. Only new subscribers can avail themselves of these prices for November and December.

The First Christian Church at Greensboro has extended a call to Rev. Chas. H. Rowland, D. D., Franklin, Va., to become its pastor, and he has accepted the call and now expects to enter upon his duties some time in January. Dr. Rowland will be greatly missed in the Franklin Church and community, where he has accomplished a great work in the last twenty-two years or more. The First Church has made a wise selection for its pastor. They have a great work to do, and if we may judge by the work Dr. Rowland has done in and for the Franklin Church, we may expect he will likewise do a great work there. At Franklin, during his pastorate, he has not only built a handsome new house of worship, but he has largely increased the membership, and at the same time has won his way into the hearts of the people of the community. His labors there will be long remembered. The Franklin Church will soon be in need of a pastor, but it will take a strong man to follow successfully Dr. Rowland, and we trust they may be blessed in securing such a man—a man upon whose labors the blessings of God May be abundantly poured out.

The Holland Christian Church and its pastor, the Rev. Jas. H. Lightbourne, entertained the late session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference in a lavish manner. The homes were opened to the Conference people in a most generous way, and the feeding was also lavish. The Holland Church is capable of doing anything it may undertake, and when it is done it is well done. They have a splendid house of worship—it would be a credit to any of our cities. They also have a splendid parsonage for their pastor, and their work generally under Pastor Lightbourne's labors seems to be going well. The Holland Christian Church is the spiritual home of a very clever people. There was one beloved brother who had expressed a great desire to live to see the Conference in session at that place and in that Church, but he was not there, having been called home some months ago. We refer to Bro. W. Q. Peel. When the Conference met at Holy Neck three years ago, he pleaded for the body to meet at Holland the next year, giving as his reason a desire to have the Conference meet there once more while he was living. His desire was not realized, but he is doubtless in a better conference than we can have on earth. God bless his memory and his life-work. The spirit of the recent Conference was admirable. There were no jars or unpleasant incidents in the meeting. The various enterprises receive careful attention, and efforts were made to enlarge our boundaries and to strengthen our stakes.

Dr. Livingston Johnson, the editor of the Biblical Recorder, makes the startling statement that the Recorder is losing $4,000 a year. Our North Carolina Baptists must be both a liberal and a rich paper, if they can stand that sort of shortage. We do not call in question the statement of Dr. Johnson in this matter, but it does make us feel that something must be done to support our papers—Church papers. We see that the Methodist Church in Virginia, in its late conference, held in Richmond, increased its Advocate support to $7,000 a year. THE CHRISTIAN SUN is costing the Southern Christian Convention about $3,000 a year more than it makes. The Religious Herald declares that a few such deficits as the Biblical Recorder is having annually would put the Religious Herald out of business and send its editor to the almshouse. We greatly fear that some of these papers will be put out of business and their editors sent to do something else. What is the matter that our Church papers generally are in such financial perils? Certainly we cannot do without them, and it begins to look as if we cannot do with them and keep out of debt. What can we do, brethren? The thing which it seems to us should be done is to do a good and an honest part in getting a much larger circulation than we have ever had. The Churches could support their own Church papers if we could get a general circulation among the people. Something must be done. What shall it be? A greatly increased circulation is the great need at present.

Referring to the matter of support given the Baptist and Methodist papers of Virginia, the Religious Herald says: "The numerical strength of Virginia Methodists is probably somewhat greater (counting the Virginia Methodists in the Baltimore and Holston Conferences) than that of Virginia Baptists. The Methodists have a more closely ordered system than we have. In other days, and we assume that the same arrangement continues, one of the items in the reports of Methodist pastors was an answer to the question: How many Advocates are taken in your charge?

"The Richmond Christian Advocate is the property of the Virginia Conference. It is well edited and well managed. Nevertheless, at the recent session of the conference in Richmond it reported a deficit on operations for the year of $3,085.95, and the conference, in its budget, included an appropriation of $7,000 for the Advocate during the present conference year.

"Now, let Virginia Baptists remember that not a dollar of money comes out of the treasury of the denomination into the treasury of the Religious Herald. A few hundred dollars are spent for advertising space, but the 'departments' are printed without charge, and if the Herald fails to earn its own way, the owner must provide for the deficit. In view of this, haven't we a right to ask for the co-operation and steady support of pastors and people?"

That is interesting for our own people as well as the Methodist and Baptist people in Virginia. It presents a question in clear light as to the needs of our own paper. Let us think these things through, and then do our part in supporting our own paper. The Southern Christian Convention cannot do its work without a paper. We must maintain THE CHRISTIAN SUN at all costs—but how? That is the question we need to think through, and then see that our thinking bears fruit. We have no time to waste. Let us be up and doing, while it is yet day, for by and by night will come, and then it will be too late to work.

From the Biblical Recorder we clip the following, which will be read with no little interest in this country. Even England needs help. What shall we do about it? Who can tell us just what a Christian country, if we had one, should do about the need of England? "Mr. Frank Gould, first vice-president of the Manufacturers' Record, has been spending some time in England studying conditions in that country. He says, in an interesting letter to the Record, that there is too much pessimism in England for England's good. There are several things that lead to this state of mind among the English. Some of them are given as follows: (1) They are not satisfied with America's debt settlement. They are willing to pay, but think this country should give them better terms as to time. They are paying now, when the people are hard pressed to get the barest necessities of life. The papers criticize the terms to which Mr. Baldwin agreed as to the payment of debt to America. (2) The 'unemployment dole' is giving great dissatisfaction. This is costing the government $1,820,000 a year, and the policy, in the opinion of many, is wrong, as it is producing an army of idlers. There are now 1,300,000 out of work, and it is predicted that this number will reach 2,000,000 by Christmas. (3) The French occupation of the Ruhr makes it impossible for England to establish trade relations with Germany. All these and other unfavorable conditions have caused a deep pessimism to settle down upon England. England has borne the financial burden of Europe since the beginning of the war, and this has brought the finances of the country into an acute condition. But, be it said to the credit of England, it has borne all these things without whining and complaining. There may be internal dissatisfaction and unrest, but as a nation England has been remarkably free from the spirit of complaint. We trust that relief will come from some quarter before long, and that the spirit of optimism may again prevail in England, for the little island is the backbone of Europe."

We (the United States) have recently had a visit from one of the great world leaders. We refer of course to Mr. Lloyd George. He is easily one of the three great men of modern times, we mean rather, now living. Woodrow Wilson, Lloyd George and Mr. Poincare, the Premier of France. Of course, there are other great men, but these men have stood in hard places and wielded a mighty influence in the world. You may not agree with us, but where have we found a man who could shape the destinies of the world more surely than did Mr. Wilson? He spoke, and the crowned heads nodded to him. Where shall we find a man the like of Mr. George? He stood in the midst of enemies, both in his own country and in other countries, and defied them to destroy his country. He stood, and victory came. And where shall we find a man who has stood in a hard place with more courage than did Mr. Poincare during the war as President of France, and since the war as her Premier? There may be greater men now living, but we believe they will be hard to find. The Christian-Evangelist, in speaking of Mr. Lloyd George, says: "We are interested in Mr. Lloyd George from many standpoints. One is that, measured by all standards taken together, he is one of the greatest men of the world today, one of the greatest men of all history. We delight to write this down, especially since the backbone and heart of his greatness are his faith and his following of Jesus Christ, the matchless Man of Galilee. We are interested in him and believe his life to be preeminently worth studying because he rose from the humblest walks of life to the sublimest heights of leadership. Those who have read his history will know how loyal he has been to the best things through it all. The greatest gift any one can make to the world is just himself brought up to the utmost of his possibilities under the circumstances. Such a man leaves behind him more than 'footprints on the sand of time.' He is a lasting lure to the young men and women who want to rise, point by point, in the worthiest achievements on their quest of life's pearl of great price."

The reading of sermons—good sermons—is a good thing. We do not mean the reading of the sermon in the pulpit—that may be at least an unfortunate thing. We refer to the habit of reading sermons in the home and about the fireside. That is a good thing. Some would say, "Oh! it is tedious." That is because you have not kept it up long enough to get in the habit. Do that, and then you will find a delight in the habit. The Western Christian Advocate says, in discussing this matter: "The reading of sermons by the minister should be a daily performance. The laymen have not as yet come to this habit. With the former it is a necessity; with the latter it is a luxury. Perhaps this is true. It should not be considered so, for the reading of good sermons should be looked upon as means of grace. Volumes of sermons should be part of the family library. Too many people look upon printed sermons as very dry reading. It is thought they take too much time and require too much mental application. Again we say, perhaps this is true. However, if you are to be a man of intelligence you should not forget that much reading maketh an informed man. Easy reading is a mental relaxation, but it does not contribute to the development of the mental faculties. The books that require an effort, prove to be an intellectual stimulus. Those that do not require such are a sedative. Beware of the easy book!" These are most timely suggestions and well worthy of attention in every home among our people. It may seem like a dull work to you at first, but keep at it till you cultivate a taste for the good sermon, and then we believe you will come to enjoy it; and when you really enjoy it, then you will get real good from it. After supper, when the nights are long, as now they are, get the family together. Let one be chosen as reader for the night. Then open with a song and prayer—prayer that all the household may be prepared in heart and mind to hear the good sermon. When you have kept up the nightly habit long enough to enjoy it—and it will not, ordinarily, take long to do that—then you will soon see an improvement, both intellectually and spiritually, in most of the members of the family. Try it for six months, and then, we believe, you will not give it up. Many papers publish sermons, and then there are a plenty of books filled with good sermons which you can buy at no great cost, and it will be as good money as you have spent, most likely. Try it, and may you have great success!

Virginia is a great old State, but now and then she runs into a snag—not willingly, but by force of circumstances—and then she must suffer the consequences. We have in the past known of a case in the courts of the Old Dominion when a criminal was convicted and sentenced to prison, and when he went away to wear the stripes he was lionized by a crowd of hundreds who assembled at the station and cheered him as if he had been a victor returning from a great victory in battle. We always regarded it as a shame upon the grand old State. That was years ago, but now we have a case which goes a step further and permits a man who has been sentenced to the penitentiary for five years to continue serving his county as an officer—clerk of the court. We will let the Richmond Evening Dispatch tell of the affair, as follows:

"'Business as Usual' in Cumberland.

"The superintendent of the Virginia penitentiary is facing a problem which should give him no little trouble. If, and when, Robert O. Garrett starts serving his term, how can the authorities arrange matters so that the prisoner will be able to continue his duties as clerk of Cumberland Circuit Court? That is a strange question, but things equally strange are happening in Cumberland County today. It is no commonplace for a convicted murderer to continue in public office, yet Robert O. Garrett, who was convicted of second-degree murder for the killing of Rev. E. S. Pierce, is 'attending to his duties as usual.' It is no commonplace for a man charged with first-degree murder to serve as judge of elections, yet Larkin Garrett, who was indicted jointly with his brother, and who will be tried December 11th, will act in that capacity in the November elections. This Cumberland affair has attracted to Virginia a great deal of unpleasant notoriety, but the public should have been spared this crowning affront. The usual motion to set aside the verdict returned against Garrett will be heard November 22d. Meanwhile, the man goes free under $35,000 bond. For him to continue in office, pending the outcome of the hearing, is an insult to every decent citizen of Cumberland County and the State of Virginia."

Commenting on these words from the Dispatch, the Religious Herald says: "The whole Commonwealth is indebted to the Evening Dispatch for this timely and courageous editorial. While offenders are on trial by the courts, all trained newspaper men are very careful not to print anything which might obstruct or otherwise interfere with the orderly processes of justice. This Cumberland case, however, with all its incidents and implications, is unique in the history of court proceedings in this State. There never was quite such a situation in Virginia, so seasoned and able lawyers tell us. There is much to be said about it, when the trials are ended; much that needs to be said in the interests of organized society and the reign of justice in the old Commonwealth. In the meantime, we thank our neighbor, on our own behalf and on behalf of tens of thousands of other amazed and indignant citizens, for his timely article."

GOLDEN WEDDING.

On Saturday, October 27th, at 3 o'clock P. M., a number of friends and relatives gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Thompson, Sr., to celebrate their golden wedding day.

The guests were met at the hall door by Mrs. Ed. Anderson, who conducted them to the living-room. There every one engaged in talking, recalling fond memories of the bride's wedding day.

After a period of chatting gaily, we were ushered into the parlor. The smallest grandchildren led the procession, followed by the other grandchildren, children, relatives, friends and, lastly, Mr. and Mrs. Thompson. Here, Mrs. J. E. McCauley presided at the piano. After a song, Rev. Mr. McCauley read the ninety-first psalm. He said a few words of appreciation of such lives as Mr. and Mrs. Thompson. Several spoke of how much help they had been to the county, community and Church. After another song, we were led in prayer by Mr. McCauley.

From here we were ushered into the beautifully decorated dining-room. From the center of the ceiling was suspended a golden wedding bell. Autumn leaves and yellow chrysanthemums added to the beauty of the room. In the center of the table was a basket of exquisite chrysanthemums, around which were placed fifty candles. The soft glow of the candles lent to the beauty and meaning of the golden hour. At one end of the table was a miniature bride and groom. The repast was served in picnic fashion, and such lots there were! All kinds of sandwiches, pickles, olives, cake, cream, lemonade and fruits.

Now came the cutting of the cake. Mr. McCauley got the ring, Mr. Parker the money, and Master William Anderson the thimble.

The time too soon came for us to part. As each one passed from the dining-room, he was registered in the guest-book.

The presents received were many and valuable. This was indeed a golden day to be remembered by us all. We hope that this man and wife may have many more happy years together.

Those present were Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Thompson, Sr., fiftieth anniversary.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

ON OLD CAMPING GROUNDS AND SOME THINGS WE SAW.

Leaving Elon College on Monday morning, October 29, 1923, bound for the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, I found myself in the city of Norfolk, Va., near 7 o'clock in the evening of the same day. As we left the train in Portsmouth, a hand was laid upon us, and looking to see who it was, we found our old friend, Bro. A. B. Jarvis, who had found in some way that we were expected on this train. Mrs. Barrett, the "better half," was in his home—that explains the invitation. He very kindly said I was to go with him home. I yielded to his kindness, and soon found the way to the home of Brother and Sister James A. Eley, 110 East Thirtieth Street, Norfolk. Mrs. Jarvis is a daughter of Brother and Sister Eley. When Bro. Jarvis asked for the consent of the parents to the marriage of himself and their younger daughter, Miss Hettie, as she was then called (now several years ago), consent was given on one condition, viz: that she should not be taken from the parental home. Bro. Jarvis is a man of his word, and so it is that one home serves for both families. After a good supper, well served, we had a very delightful evening. And the delight was increased by the coming to the home of several friends, several of whom were old-time members of the Memorial Christian Temple, as was Brother and Sister Eley and their daughter, in the days when we served there as pastor. Among them was Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Carr, now of Lewisburg, W. Va. Mrs. Carr was the organist at the temple in those days, and she was very gifted in that position. Looking around, we recalled the fact that Mrs. Minnie Dixon and Mrs. Hettie B. Jarvis (sisters) were, in the days of their girlhood, two of our best singers in the temple. Besides, there were several other members of the old temple in those days who came in to spend a short while with the family. It seemed a fitting occasion to have a sort of an old temple evening together. We asked Mrs. Carr to take the piano, and Mrs. Dixon and Mrs. Jarvis to sing for us one of the most popular hymns that we used to sing in the temple in those days. After a little persuasion, they consented, and they sang very sweetly, as in those days, the hymn:

"I Want to Go There."

"They tell of a city far up in the sky,
I want to go there, I do;
'Tis built in the land of the sweet by and by,
I want to go there, don't you?
There Jesus has gone to prepare us all homes,
I want to go there, I do;
Where sickness, nor sorrow, nor death ever comes,
I want to go there, don't you?

"Its gates are all pearl, its streets are all gold,
I want to go there, I do;
The Lamb is the light of that city, we're told,
I want to go there, don't you?
Death robs us all here, there none ever die—
I want to go there, I do;
There loved ones will never again say good-by,
I want to go there, don't you?

"When the old ship of Zion shall make her last trip,
I want to be there, I do;
With heads all uncovered to greet the old ship,
I want to be there, don't you?
When all the ship's company meet on the strand,
I want to be there, I do;
With songs on their lips and harps in their hands,
I want to be there, don't you?

"When Jesus is crowned the King of all kings,
I want to be there, I do;
With shouting and clapping till all heaven rings,
I want to go there, I want to go there, don't you?
Hallelujah! we'll shout again and again—
I want to be there, I do;
And close with the chorus, amen and amen—
I want to be there, don't you?

(Chorus for verses 1 and 2.)

"I want to go there, I want to go there, I want to go there, I do;
I want to go there, I want to go there, I want to go there, don't you?

(Chorus for verses 3 and 4.)

"I want to be there, I mean to be there, I expect to be there, I do;
I want to be there, I mean to be there, I expect to be there, don't you?"

The effect was fine. The old organist and some of the old singers were once more together and giving out the old strains to as sweet music as we are likely to hear in a life-time. My eyes filled with tears as they sang, for mentally we were transported, after an absence of twenty years, to the old Memorial Temple, and there the scenes of other days were before our eyes. I was again in the pulpit of the old temple, and the congregation of those days was once again before me. Oh, how many faces—so many so familiar! Once more I looked in upon them, and once again dear old Professor Wilkins was in the choir as leader (though he has now been gone for many years), and once more Mrs. Carr was at the pipe organ, and Minnie and Hettie, as we then called them, were standing in the choir, giving out the sweet strains of the old-time favorite, "I Want to Go There, Don't You?" And out in the congregation there were dear Deacon A. M. Eley and wife, Bro. Jackson Jones and his brother, Ellyson, and Tom Walker and others, running over with the joy of the Lord. The scene may be better imagined than described, for it was indeed a drama of the old days, when the old temple was at its best and the joy of the Lord indeed appeared as the strength of His people. For a short time I lived over some of the best days of my ministry in that congregation. How real the scene was! It was a reproduction after years of separation of the sweet scenes that were once so real to me.

The New Temple.

After a night of refreshing sleep, we were early out to visit the new Christian Temple of Norfolk, not yet finished, but making encouraging progress. Dr. Smith, the pastor, took us through and showed us the promise of what is to be under the blessings of God, one of our best houses of worship in the whole denomination when the building is completed.

It is useless to attempt to describe it—you will have to wait and see it when completed to appreciate it all. It will perhaps be the most elaborate Church building in the city of Norfolk of any denomination. It will have the most wonderful organ in the city. All in all, it is to mark a new day for the Christians in that city, and perhaps in the South, and I might go a step further and say there is nothing its equal among our people in the North, East or West. We sincerely wish that the spiritual attainments in that congregation may be in proportion to their physical attainments. Later, when the building is completed, we hope to give a more detailed account of the structure.

Tuesday morning, in company with the pastor, and occupying a seat with him and Dr. W. H. Denison, we started for Holland, where, that day at 10 o'clock, the one hundred and third annual session of the Eastern Vriginia Conference was to open. We arrived a bit late and found the Conference already at work, with Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., of Portsmouth, Va., presiding. There was a good attendance and a lively interest in its proceedings was maintained throughout. Dr. R. C. Helfinstein, of Dover, Del., conducted the devotional service, using as a subject "The Need and the Benefit of Intercession," after which the enrollment of delegates and ministers was made. Just before the adjournment of the first morning session, Dr. Chas. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va., conducted the Communion service. In the afternoon the devotional service was conducted by Rev. T. E. White, of Windsor, Va. Then special committees were announced. The treasurer's report was read, followed by ministerial reports, after which Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West, of Suffolk, Va., read the report on home missions, and made a fine and stirring address on that subject.

At night, Rev. J. L. Foster, Waverly, Va., conducted the devotional service, and Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., gave a masterly address on "The Romance of Missions. He was followed by Rev. Jno. G. Truitt, the new pastor of the Berkley, Va., Christian Church, on "Enlisting Men for Missions." This was an address of great power. Bro. Truitt is a new man in the Conference, but his first address among us won for him a fine standing as a speaker. He captivated his audience from the beginning, and he held them to the end. It was really a great address and will long be remembered.

Wednesday morning, Dr. Helfinstein conducted the devotional service, and greatly interested the hearers. Rev. W. L. Wells, Portsmouth, Va., read the report on foreign missions, Rev. W. W. Staley gave the report on ministerial education. Rev. C. H. Rowland delivered an address on "The Joy of the Ministry." It was an impressive address. Rev. W. B. Fuller, Ivor, Va., read the report on moral reform, and Rev. Ben Joe Earp, Newport News, Va., gave an address on "The Restless Now," which was much enjoyed.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, the new pastor of the Suffolk Church, gave the Conference sermon on "The Mission of the Church." It was strong and full of soul-stirring thoughts. It was indeed a strong sermon, and was much enjoyed by the congregation present.

The afternoon service was opened with devotional service, led by Rev. J. M. Roberts, of Windsor, Va. His remarks were clear cut and to the point.

Rev. S. H. Lightbourne gave the report on Christian education, and Dr. W. A. Harper gave an address, "A Program of Christian Education," which was up to his usual standard of excellence. He was followed by an address by Rev. H. Shelton Smith on "The Leadership of Childhood." It was a strong effort.

The third day opened, with Dr. Helfinstein leading in the morning devotions. He discussed "The Secret Meaning of Spiritual Strength" and greatly interested the people.

Rev. B. F. Black gave the report on religious literature, and the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN gave an address on "The Religious Newspaper, a Handmaid of the Church." To Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., of Richmond, Va., had been assigned a sermon on "Recruiting the Ministry," but on account of the lateness of the hour he was excused from that service, but requested to furnish the same for publication in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and he agreed, and in a short time we hope it may be read by far a larger number of our people. Several routine matters were disposed of, and the Conference adjourned, to meet at the usual time (Tuesday morning before the first Sunday in November, 1924) with the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va.

All in all, it was a fine session of the Conference and the Holland Church and their friends entertained the body in a lavish way, and very much pleased the Conference as a body. There was one prominent member of the Holland Church who had very much desired to attend this session of the Conference, but he was not there. When the Conference met at Holy Neck, three years ago, he was very anxious to have it come to the Holland Church the next year (1921), but it failed to do so, and then at the Conference at Johnson's Grove last year the body voted to go to Holland this year, but before its meeting day came this dear brother was called home, and so he could not meet his brethren in the Conference, as he had so much desired to do. We refer to Bro. W. Quinton Peel, who was called home during the early part of the present year. He had been for many years an earnest member of the Holland Church. Though he was gone, his old home was opened to entertainment by Mrs. Peel, who gave the hospitality which he had so much hoped to join in extending to their friends. He is gone, but he is not forgotten, and will not be for many a long day. Peace to his ashes.

The Conference for 1923 is a matter of history, but its work has one thought which is extended to all of the people and the Churches of that body, and it is Work while it is day, for soon the night cometh, in which no man can work. God bless our brotherhood in its service for God and humanity in truth. NOTES ON THE BOOKS OF THE BIBLE.

Ruth, the Story of Love and Loyalty.

(No. 8.)

The Book of Ruth is named in honor of the heroine whose beautiful life is portrayed in its narrative. Some one has traced the name of Ruth back to the Hebrew form of the Greek Rodon, the Latin Rosa, and finally in the English rose we get the beautiful thought of the sweet and fragrant character by which she is so well known in history. Tracing her name back after this manner, some one has not inaptly called her "the Rose of Moab." Of this we may be assured that the book is named in honor of this beautiful daughter of Moab—a daughter out of whose lovely life shined the coming rays of light that later illuminated the life of the Christ of history.

The book portrays so many phases of character as to make it one of the most interesting stories of ancient times. One of the strangest features of the book is the fact that though Ruth is a heathen woman, from the dark land of Moab, yet under the power of the life of God in the human soul, she becomes one of the most illustrious women of the people of God, and wherever the story of the Christ is known, the story of Ruth is also well known. The way Ruth is brought into the family of the Bethlehemite is no less strange than is the remainder of her beautiful life. Like most young women, she was wooed and won by a noble young man, and she became the wife of Mahlon, a son of Elimelech and Naomi. This event just preceded the times of hardship in the family into which she had married, and here one of the most beautiful traits of her character began to show its light. She had come out of darkness of heathenism, but she at once began to let her light shine. Sickness and death followed close on to her marriage. Her father-in-law and both of his sons sickened and died. Of course, her husband was one of these sons. It was then that Naomi came to the time of her greatest trial. Bereft of husband and two sons, and with their wives depending on her for a home and support, she felt herself to be in a hard place, but the widows of her two sons came to her help nobly, and Naomi found in them great comfort. But the time was not long in coming when it seemed wise for the two girls to return to Moab. After consideration, Orpah decided to return to her home in her native land, but when Ruth came to bid her mother-in-law good-by she found her love for Naomi too great to part with her, and so she declined to be separated. Naomi understanding something of what would probably be her lot in life, she urged Ruth to go back to her own people, but the beautiful girl could not get the consent of her mind to do so, and in answer to her mother-in-law's entreaty to go back she was prompted to give such expression to the depth of her love as has not yet been forgotten, and it will not be forgotten till Jesus comes. Her language was not only strong, but most unselfish in its thought. She said, in replying to Naomi's request:

"Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God. Where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried: the Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me."

Forever memorable words—words that cannot die while there is a loyal heart among men.

There are two wonderful lessons for us of today in the life and conduct of Ruth, as follows:

1. When need be, she did not hesitate to do any honorable work which came in her way. She even gleaned in the fields to provide for her mother-in-law. Ought not all of God's people thus to use every opportunity to help to meet the needs of our loved ones, and others too? If one so beautiful in life and service could do such lowly work for a mother-in-law, who may be willing to excuse himself or herself from doing any honorable work to meet the needs of those dependent upon us or for the Church of Christ? How beautiful and honorable is true service!

2. Ruth seems to be a lovely type of the Church, and if so, may not her dead husband be a type of the dying Christ, dying for the sins of the world, and then may we go a step further and find in her second husband a type of the risen Christ? If so, we have a pretty picture of a human family portraying the divine, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named? Whether this be true or not, we find in Ruth many of the striking characteristics of the true Church of Christ. One of these characteristics is her disposition to cling to one she loves. Another is her disposition to be true under the most trying circumstances. And still another is her disposition to gather up the fragments of the field, that none may be lost. Oh, if the Church could only awake to her opportunity to gather up all that may come within her reach, for then we should have a glorious and a golden harvest in the salvation of the lost. In the midst of suffering and poverty, of trial and disappointment, how Ruth stands as a beacon light in a darkened night, and stands for the true and the right, and so glorifies life as she lived it, and this is another fine thought for us to imitate. Oh, Ruth! beautiful, faithful Ruth! She must at least be a representative of the family of God.

Wordsworth, the poet, in writing of Ruth, paid to her the following fine tribute:

"She was a phantom of delight
When first she gleamed upon my sight.
A lovely apparition, sent
To be a moment's ornament.
* * * * *
I saw her, upon nearer view,
As spirit, yet a woman, too;
Her household motions light and free,
And steps of virgin liberty;
A countenance in which did meet,
Sweet records, promises as sweet;
A creature not too bright or good
For human nature's food."

A VERY SMALL BUSINESS.

We need to be very careful in pronouncing judgment against our fellows. It is possible for us to be mistaken, and the other man may be in the right; and in that event, we shall find ourselves in a bad plight. We sometimes set in judgment on the motives of our fellows, and then of all times we are most likely to be wrong.

The other day a man was discussing the character of a fellow-laborer, and he declared that his fellow-worker was a poor stick in service. Now, it is just possible that that man had misunderstood the motives of his co-worker, and in that case, the Lord Himself will pass judgment on both of the brethren. It would be wiser if we might always wait to let the Lord pass judgment upon motives and character.

A few weeks ago we read where the editor of one religious journal declared that whereas years ago the journal which he was criticising was a fine paper of wide and growing influence; now it was on the decline, and, from what he said, you would have thought that it could not survive but a short time. A few days later, we saw where the editor of the journal this brother was criticising made a statement, having no reference to what his critic had said, declared that subscriptions were coming in at the rate of from 300 to 1,000 a day. That, it seems to us, would indicate a wonderful state of prosperity. If the man who made the criticism were to get as many subscribers in a month as this man was getting a day, he would have thought his paper was suddenly the marvel of modern religious journalism. Now, why should one man criticise another in this way? We have tried to look into the matter, and we can see but one reason for this unfair criticism, and that was the critic did not like the views of the man who edited the paper he was criticising, although that man was probably more nearly correct in his views than was the man who did the criticising. That is a small business, and the man who can do it ought to quit.

Here are some beautiful words from a young minister, which he used in recognition of the fact that the Lord permitted him to go to a sickbed to keep him out of a place of danger, theologically speaking. Now he has met another serious disappointment, looking at it from his own short-sighted viewpoint, and, in the face of this disappointment, he says: "It seems to me the Lord is leading. I shall try to know His gracious will and obey. He leads to the best port always. Sickness four years ago kept me from the awful hazard of going to ———, a school of the most liberal tendencies. Sickness may keep my feet again in the path of my mother's prayers, viz: that of sound, conservative doctrine. My mother is the greatest seminary I have ever been to. She loves Jesus without any guessing, and she never once implied anything else in all her teaching. She makes me love the old, old paths, which never grew old to her and are always new to me."—X. Y. Z. That is the way we like to hear young ministers talk. If a man is loyal to his God and his mother, we will risk a good deal on his character. The man who does not like his mother's teaching is more than likely to listen to strangers and go their own way. God bless the men and women who love their mothers and their mother's God, the God of heaven and earth.

CONTRIBUTIONS

FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH, NORFOLK.

Although my CHRISTIAN SUN pen has been idle, my heart has been with you and my hands have been busy. Within the last thirty days many changes have come into my plans, and instead of being in Edinburgh, Scotland, in school, I am in Norfolk rendering the service to which I have been looking and which is the joy of my life.

The people of this Church are doing everything possible to make our combined efforts count for the kingdom of Christ. I am greatly impressed with their praise of my predecessors and their prompt response to whatever of my plans I have been able so far to present to them. The present educational program of the Church, begun by Rev. Edwin B. Flory, and being carried onward now by Bro. J. O. Wiggs and a large and enthusiastic corps of assistants, is by no means perfect, but is quite up to date in method and content, and we are expecting it to grow increasingly effective. It is being more and more conformed to the correlated program of the Christian Church. There is a special workers' council meeting on Friday night before every third Sunday, and a Sunday School council meeting after prayer-meeting on Wednesday night before the fourth Sunday. The financial board meets monthly, as well as, also, the official board of the Church.

The Woman's Missionary Society is going to add to its present plans the raising and sponsoring of a fund to give practical teaching and help in the instruction of our boys and girls in the stewardship of life. It is their wish that our young people shall know from the very outset that their Church is vitally interested in all their problems and plans; it desires to assist them in their work as well as their play, and to instruct them early that they are stewards of a life more precious than the whole earth upon which it is lived.

Evangelism is to be stressed throughout the year, each evening service being evangelistic. Already one new member has been added to the Church on profession of faith in Christ. A plan has also been passed upon by the financial board which, if accepted by the official board, will insure the printing of bulletins for each Church service. This will make us the only Church in this section of Norfolk using this method of getting our plans persistently and effectively before our people.

In all our plans and work, we are endeavoring to put Christ foremost, because we realize that it is easy for us to get so busy about our program's execution as to forget the great goal in view. The audiences have been large, and especially the night services, at which times our house is full.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

Norfolk, Va.

A GREAT CONFERENCE WITH A GREAT PURPOSE.

BY REV. R. F. BROWN.

The Citizenship Conference, held at Washington, D. C., October 13, 14, 15, 1923, was probably the greatest religious and moral gathering ever assembled in America. It was a call to all the religious and moral forces of the nation to emphasize the importance of good citizenship and patriotism as involved in observance of all law, but with special reference to the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States and enforcement acts. In view of the perfect accord with which the liquor interests and lawbreakers of the country are going forward, and knowing how thoroughly these lawless people are committed to a well-defined program in an effort to nullify the law, it was thought by such international characters as Fred B. Smith and Colonel Raymond Robins and others that an equal degree of efficiency and enthusiasm should be aroused among the friends of good government and lovers of law and decency in order that lawlessness and nullification might be successfully combated.

Solidify Religious and Moral Sentiment.

The enthusiasm of the good people of this nation was very marked during the long years of winning the struggle for the adoption of the constitutional amendment which outlawed the manufacture and sale of liquors. Since the adoption of the eighteenth amendment, other questions of national and international interests have arisen, the consideration of these questions, combined with the natural relaxation from strain, have somewhat lessened the pressure for the enforcement of the amendment. The prime purpose of the Citizenship Conference, therefore, was to strengthen the morale of the religious and moral forces of the nation upon the issue at stake, to solidify religious and moral sentiment into vital action behind a working, vigorous program, to emphasize the necessity for the same conscientious zeal for the enforcement as was manifest for the enactment of the law.

Representation at the Conference.

There were representatives at this conference from forty-six States, four Territories and the Dominion of Canada. These men and women represented local Churches, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., W. C. T. U., Anti-Saloon League, Federal Council of Churches, ministerial unions, county organizations, and many other moral and religious organizations of the country. The writer represented the Council of Churches of Miami County, Ohio.

The Eighteenth Amendment.

The eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States is a statutory law. It is as much a part of the Constitution as is the first amendment. The eighteenth amendment prohibits the manufacture, sale or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into or the exportation thereof from, the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, for beverage purposes. The resolution proposing the amendment was presented in the Senate by Senator Morris Sheppard, of Texas, and in the House of Representatives by Congressman Edwin Y. Webb, of North Carolina. The resolution was adopted in the Senate August 1, 1917, and in the House December 17, 1917. It was then submitted to the Legislatures of the several States. By January 16, 1919, thirty-six of the forty-eight States had ratified the amendment, and it was then proclaimed by the Secretary of State and thus became an integral part of the Constitution one year later. The House adopted the amendment by a vote of 282 to 128, and the Senate by a vote of 65 to 20.

A little later, ten other States ratified the amendment, making a total of forty-six States to ratify. The total vote in the lower houses of the Legislatures of the States ratifying the eighteenth amendment was 3,782 votes for to 1,035 against ratification, or 78.5 per cent affirmative. The total vote in the Senates of the respective Legislatures was 1,310 for to 237 against ratification, or 84.6 per cent affirmative. The question is asked, "Was it not passed against the will of the people?" Let's see. I have just said that forty-six States ratified the amendment. The two States that did not ratify were Rhode Island and Connecticut. The forty-six States favoring the amendment represent 98.2 per cent of the people. The two States that did not ratify represent only 1.8 per cent of the people. Who can say, then, that the eighteenth amendment does not express the will of the people?

The Personal Liberty Plea.

In the eighteenth amendment, there is no illegal infringement on the personal liberty of an individual in preventing the manufacture, sale, and possession of beverage intoxicants. The Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly declared that the right to manufacture and sell liquor is not a privilege or immunity which may not be abridged, and that the possession of liquor may be prohibited without violating any constitutional right. The Supreme Court also declared the power of Congress to enforce the eighteenth amendment could be exerted against the disposal for beverage purposes of liquor manufactured before the eighteenth amendment became effective, just as it may be against subsequent manufacture for such purpose, and that the act denying compensation to the owners thereof was constitutional. The Supreme Court further declared that the right to hold intoxicating liquors for personal use is not one of those fundamental privileges of a citizen of the United States which no State may abridge. A man's personal liberty does not consist in taking into his body such poison as may militate against his health and the happiness of others.

The Enforcement of Eighteenth Amendment and Volstead Act.

This is the question of all questions. It was dealt with by Hon. Roy E. Haynes, Federal prohibition commissioner. In this address he gave the latest facts concerning the enforcement problems and the co-operation necessary for full success. He made a strong appeal to the people of America to carry on, and called for the complete co-operation of the people of the United States for the rejuvination of the movement which led to the adoption of the eighteenth amendment. He told the delegates that the Coolidge administration, like that of the Harding administration, was 100 per cent behind the prohibition laws, and that Coolidge personally was for a "bone-dry Amenica." He denied the propaganda that there is more liquor today than before the prohibition laws were enacted, stating that such statements come only from the wets themselves. He showed by actual statistics that the contrary is the case. The booze men say that prohibition does not prohibit. But viewed from any sane and logical viewpoint, prohibition has proven a most remarkable and unprecedented success. Anybody with any judgment at all ought to have known that to write a statutory provision into the Constitution would not bring in the millennium. But notwithstanding the fact that thousands of men all over this country make it their business to sell liquor and make their living by this illegitimate act, the prohibition law has been effective. Prohibition violation is not on the increase. Yet there are thousands of unprincipled men in this country who have never ceased to violate every law ever written into the Constitution if that law proposes to control and regulate their business. This country is honeycombed with such men who wink at the law.

There is not half as much liquor sold and drunk today as the reports indicate. They say this that they may arouse a sentiment in favor of nullification or modification. They plead for such modification in order that violation may be easier and less punishable. Such logic cannot be matched. But who among us thinks that the good, law-abiding citizens of this nation of ours will throw up their hands in surrender to these law-breaking criminals who serve notice that they are determined to sell liquor, and that the only way to preserve the sanctity of the law is to modify it to fit their needs? These men (traitors) who plead for the nullification or modification of the law, do so in order that the stigma and shame of law violation may be removed from them, for it seems that they are determined to engage in the bootlegging business, regardless of the law. But, thank God, there are enough law-abiding citizens of this country who believe in the sanctity of the law to arouse enough public sentiment of the right sort to impel the enforcement of the law and properlgy preserve its sanctity.

Where Is the Stigma?

Is it an indication that the law is powerless or without effect when it is violated by the bootleggers and thugs? It is not a stigma on the law, nor is it a stigma on the people who brought about the sentiment for such a law. It cannot be said that because the Church gave rise to the sentiment for prohibition that the violation of the law is a stigma on the Church. It would be as near the truth to say that the sin of Adam and Eve placed a stigma on God, which is absolutely unthinkable. The world has always been ready to lay its shortcomings at the door of the Church. And what is more, it has always been slow to give the Church credit for its accomplishments. Is it a stigma on the law, or Church, or the people who brought about the law, that the number of drinkers of alcoholic beverages has been reduced from 20,000,000 to 2,500,000 in three years? Is it a stigma on the people of this country who brought about the eighteenth amendment that only 15 per cent of the former drinkers are drinking now, and these are drinking only 5 per cent of the quantity of whiskey that was consumed three years ago? Is it a stigma on the law or the Church that the entire drink bill of the nation has decreased $2,000,000,000 a year? Is it a stigma on the law that the money formerly spent for liquor has gone into savings banks, insurance, and the necessary commodities of life? Is it a stigma on the law that the reformatories and correctional institutions of this country have shown a most startling and gratifying decrease in the number of prisoners? No—a thousand times no! These things stand out as an eternal monument to the law and a credit to the Church and the good people who are responsible for the eighteenth amendment and Volstead act. Those who want to nullify or modify the law are unfair enough to refuse to review these facts. They soon forget their history. They are unwilling to compare conditions today with the conditions that obtained before the prohibition law became effective.

People Not Discouraged.

Commissioner Haynes said: "The people are not discouraged. The enforcement has been very successful. The enemies say that whiskey and beer are flooding this country. This is not true. This is enemy propaganda. I do not believe that our friends have any adequate conception of the amazing onslaught which is now in progress and under contemplation by the enemy. In some localities, and principally in the seaboard, there is strong opposition sentiment and almost complete demobilization of citizenship forces until officers, courts, etc., have but little sense of public support."

To Dry Up the Earth.

It was Miss Anna Gordon, president of the National and International W. C. T. U., who said: "We hope to make prohibition cover the earth. The present need is for a daily dozen of spiritual exercise by the friends of prohibition and law enforcement." She added her voice for the reincarnation and the rejuvenation of the fight against liquor and took occasion to pay her respects to Governor Smith, of New York, for signing the State repeal act.

A Wonderful Picture.

At the Central High School auditorium Saturday evening we saw a picture that illustrated the tragic experiences of three homes in the West. This picture showed how a careless, shiftless, drinking father neglected his family, drank whiskey, and allowed his little son to sell papers and support a mother and five little sisters. The mother died and the doctor declared that she was "another victim of poverty and strong drink." The family was divided, and the children given to different people. Little Jimmie was placed in the home of Farmer Snow, and grew up to manhood. The second part of the picture revealed the sorrows of another home caused by strong drink. The husband came in drunk, killed his wife and was placed in prison, leaving another orphan—a little girl. She was placed in a home near Farmer Snow. This little girl grew to womanhood and she and little Jimmie were married. For some years they were happy; but finally the slumbering inherited habit was awakened and Jimmie became a victim of strong drink. He lost his job as engineer on a great railroad. He moved his wife and little son to another town and began life over again. But, alas! the sin of the father and grandfather found expression in the son. Under the influence of liquor, he shot down a young woman in cold blood. He was tried for murder and sentenced to prison for life. This shows how the sins of the father are visited on the children to the third and fourth generation.

Integrity of Law.

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, rabbi "Free Synagogue," New York City, spoke on "Integrity of Law Essential to the Morality of the Nation." This was a masterpiece. Rabbi Wise is one of the big men of the nation. He said that the necessity of the eighteenth amendment was too evident to admit of argument, and it was not his purpose to argue this point; but to meet some of the objections to the law as it exists. He said that those who want the law nullified contend that it was a war measure. "This is another argument in favor of the law. For when the nation needed strong men it gave attention to the elimination of those forces that keep men from being strong, chief among which is liquor." He said also: "The enemies want the law repealed; but they have not the courage to repeal it or the decency to enforce it. It is for us to say to the lawless and to the world that the metropolitan suburbs of Europe (referring to some of our large cities where the law is winked at) are not America. The majority of the law-breakers in these cities are foreigners and have no sense of the sanctity of the law. We are now experiencing the reflex action of a great transition. The disorder that we now experience is only incident in great transitions. But let it be remembered that we are not going to be misled by disorder. A government cannot exist half lawful and half lawless, and to raise the question of the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment is to bread lawlessness and anarchy. It is unrepealable. And the question is not whether, but how shall it be enforced? Law does not evoke, but it discloses." Rabbi Wise declared that the amendment was in the Constitution to stay, and urged a national movement to make it more effective. He took a rap at Solicitor General Beck because of a recent speech in which the solicitor pleaded for the enforcement of the law, but at the same time by inuendo protested against prohibition as an interference with personal habits. The personal liberty pleaders should remember that personal liberty ends where personal injury begins.

Perils of Lawlessness.

Mrs. Raymond Robins, of Chicago, spoke of the perils of lawlessness. She pictured the conditions as they once existed in Chicago and said that there was a time when there were five saloons on every corner. The present crimes in the lawless districts in Chicago are due largely to the twenty-three nationalities now living there. She showed how the other great reforms of other days were fought by syndicated agencies and moneyed interests. These forces were active against the child labor law, the enght-hour law, the nineteenth amendment, and we need not be surprised that they are busy against the eighteenth amendment. In conclusion, she said: "We must share our high ideals and religious and moral concepts with those with whom we build our nation."

The Courts and Law Enforcement.

Justice Florence Allen, Supreme Court of Ohio, talked on the courts and law enforcement. She said that law is the expression of the moral feeling of the community. The feeling that saloons must go found expression in law, and every law must be enforced whether good or bad, so long as it remains law. This must be done if we are to maintain our national solidarity and moral integrity. Her contention was that the law is not enforced because men do not want it enforced; because of inefficient machinery to demand enforcement; and because of indiscriminate criminal justice. People will not do right until the public sentiment is so strong that they know that people demand that they do right. She said that the lack of respect for the law is one of the moral dangers of today, threatening all law and order. Public opinion can bring results in law enforcement.

Department of Justice Should Enforce Law.

Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, urged the transfer of the prohibition enforcement from the Treasury Department to the Department of Justice. He declared that the eighteenth amendment had the most deliberate discussion of any of the amendments and reflected the "deliberate and agonizing prayers of the women." He emphasized the face that it was passed before the women had the vote, and with a great majority, and asked the question, "How could it be repealed now, since the good women of the nation have the ballot?" He paid his respects to Representative Hill, of Maryland, who has fruit juices fermenting in his Baltimore home and who has so informed prohibition officers, and asked for a ruling. He said Mr. Hill was defying the law and should be dealt with accordingly.

State Government and Law Enforcement.

Governor Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, spoke on the "State Government and Law Enforcement." It was his opinion that "No sincere, intelligent, and nation-wide effort has been made to enforce the law; because Federal agents have collected bribes and because politics is at the root of the evil. The thing that protected the liquor criminal from the law is politics. Politics first, law enforcement a poor second, has been the order. Bad liquor with beer to help has supplied the sinews of war for bad politics, and politics has returned the favor. What is needed is an organization in which the responsibility is definitely centered. Each community should have a diligence committee, and this committee should keep in close touch with the prohibition officers. Law and order will prevail when the people are awakened to the gravity of the question.

WHY NOT?

Will not other pastors and official boards follow this fine example?

One of our loyal and wide-awake pastors, writing under date of November 7th, says:

"My dear Brother,—Our official board met last night, and we are planning a campaign for Men and Millions. We are feeling more hopeful than at any time for many months. The people say they are going to pay, and I hope you will hear from our captain more often than you have heard. Very truly yours." J. O. ATKINSON.

ELM AVENUE, PORTSMOUTH, VA.

Last Sunday we entered upon our second year with the Elm Avenue Christian Church, organized about three years ago. There were one hundred and fifty names reported to Conference last year, but there were only about one hundred and thirty-five reported to me on taking charge of the work here. Quite a number of these I have not been able to find, and of the number found we have dropped between fifty and sixty from the roll. That sounds like we are making progress backward. But there is another side to it. Many of these, it would seem, came in upon the enthusiastic circumstancial wave in connection with the beginning of the work here, and when the tide began to go out they were left stranded on the shore or were some where else. The Church does not seem to be any weaker for their going.

We received about thirty members during the past year, and their coming, we feel, has given strength to the work. We reported 116 members to Conference this time. We have some of these slated to go. But the faithful ones seem to be more hopeful.

Last Sunday we received two members on profession of faith, and baptized two by sprinkling.

We had a good prayer meeting last night. Soon after the pastor and his wife got home, the company who were at prayer meeting, and more, filed into the parsonage and left what we call an old-fashioned pounding, such as we have not received in quite a while.

The pastor endeavored to express our heartfelt appreciation for this generous token of their thoughtfulness for the pastor and wife.

Owing to circumstances which I need not state, I announced, some time before Conference, our intention of giving up the work at the close of the year, and the only explanation I have to make now is that we are here beginning the work of another year and trusting that it is of the Lord that we have decided to remain and that we may be at our best for Him.

The Church has voted an increase in pastor's salary for next year. We make our every-member canvass next Sunday.

Very sincerely,

1508 Elm Ave. W. D. HARWARD.

CHILDREN AND THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

I think it's only the town and village Churches where the children do not remain for Church services after Sunday School. The parents are generally there, any way. I have never yet been to a country Church where the children did not remain. It might be well for the city and town Churches for once to do as the country people do —go with their children and see that they do stay; teach them at home that the one is not complete without the other. The children will want to stay, once you get them interested. I remember the time when I was living in a home where there were two children—a little boy of four or five years, and a sweet little girl, three perhaps. I always went to Church and to Sunday School, and took the boy. The mother could not go, and this little girl would cry and want to go, but mother said she was too small, and would cry and would not let me stay for Church. But I took her, and only that first Sunday did I come back before Church service. They loved to stay, and I told them little stories and made them understand that the preacher would tell us about Jesus, and would afterwards take them for walks. They soon would not be again left without a cry.

There are ways to get children interested if you try to find them. Children are wise little humans, but you must commence this teaching and training when they are young. You let them come away from the first and they don't know that there is any reason for them to stay. The habit is formed, and often they never care enough to want to remain unless some effort is made to make them understand what the Church service is.

When I was a child I did not know there was such a thing as leaving the Church till every one else was going. My parents were there, or if they could not be, I knew I had to remain. I am thankful for this teaching. It has been the custom in cities to send the children and tell them to come home after Sunday School, the father and mother often not going, and children were not wanted at the Church service, too, as they might become restless or make some little noise. What of it if they did? One could soon teach them better. Better have a short service and keep them than not have them at all. Country mothers have to take their children when they are babies if they go to Church. The child grows up in that way. When he is old enough he goes into the class, and when young into the Church. Most all Sunday School children in the country are brought to Jesus in tender years; it's only a step from one to the other.

We reap as we sow, and this is only the harvest. I believe that the parents could remedy this evil by being more faithful themselves. I don't know what is to be done with those who have formed this habit, but perhaps they will become as trained to leave the Church service after they grow older. S. A. H.

A GREAT REPORT ON CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

BY REV. JAMES H. LIGHTBOURNE, Chairman.

[The report of the Committee on Christian Education of the Eastern Virginia Conference was so good that it is printed here as inspiration to similar committees in other Conferences.]

Your Committee on Christian Education has endeavored to work with and to carry out the plans of the Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention and the Department of Christian Education of the General Convention. By a happy coincidence, the chairman of your committee is the executive secretary of the Convention of Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies of the Conference, and consequently there has been a delightful and effective spirit of co-operation between these two bodies.

Your committee early communicated with Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, field secretary of the Southern Convention Board, and Dr. W. A. Harper, secretary of the General Convention Department. The former, a member, as it happens, of this committee, advised us the board would call on us from time to time, and that the board would always be at our service. The latter suggested, first, the correlation of the young people's division of the Sunday School—that is, ages twelve to twenty-four—with the Christian Endeavor; and second, the holding of a series of one or two-day institutes with groups of Churches of the Conference.

We wish to report that the board of the Southern Convention, from time to time, did call upon us, and that whenever we found occasion to call upon it, the response was prompt and agreeable.

The first suggestion of Dr. Harper's presented grave difficulties. In the first place, few of our schools are closely or departmentally graded, and consequently few have a superintendent of the young people's division. In the second place, we have only a very small number of Christian Endeavor Societies, and there exists a woeful lack of contact with the few existing effective organizations. To meet these difficulties, special emphasis has been given graded organization in our Sunday Schools. The revised Convention constitution calls for a complete staff of departmental secretaries.

The Sunday School Convention of the previous July had sounded a note of constructive effort in behalf of Christian Endeavor. A secretaryship of Christian Endeavor was established, and Mrs. C. C. Rawls, of Suffolk, was appointed to the office. At the 1923 Convention, Christian Endeavor was given a representative place on the program, including two one-hour conferences, a period for a pageant, and in the revised constitution an equal rank with the Sunday School in the name of the Convention. Mr. W. H. Baker, of Newport News, a State Endeavor official, is the newly elected secretary, and since the July Convention three new societies have been organized, one an intermediate.

The second suggestion was apt, for the Convention, with the Southern Convention Board, was planning such a campaign of institutes. They were held during the period March 17th to April 2nd, with the following faculty: Miss Lucy Eldredge, Mr. Hermon Eldredge, and Rev. E. B. Flory. It was planned to have Christian Endeavor represented in these institutes in the person of Mr. Frank Wilson, field secretary for North Carolina and Virginia, but a week before the institutes he was forced to cancel the engagement.

Twenty-four institute sessions were held with thirteen groups, sixteen special meetings were held with ten Churches, and one hundred and eighty children attended six story hours. In the afternoon institute sessions, 417 Sunday School superintendents, officers and teachers were directly reached. The institutes financed themselves.

Upon the chairman's request for suggestions from the membership of the committee relative to possible channels of activity, Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, of Dover, Dela., suggested a questionnaire on the basic principles of the Christian religion, for use among the teen-age students of our Sunday Schools. The chairman requested each member of the committee, together with Dr. W. A. Harper, to submit fifteen questions. From the seventy-five thus secured, no two identical, the chairman created the following questionnaire of twelve questions, the student being urged to answer ten of the twelve:

1. Why do you believe there is a God?
2. What is the Bible?
3. Who was Jesus Christ, and what about Him especially appeals to you?
4. How do we become Christians?
5. What are some of the obligations of Church membership?
6. What is prayer?
7. What is sin?
8. What is faith?
9. For whom and for what was the Sabbath established?
10. Name as many as you can of the principles of the Christian Church.
11. What is the Holy Spirit?
12. What differences can you give between Protestantism and Catholicism?

At first reading, these questions appear involved and beyond the grasp of the comprehension of a teen-age girl or boy. But closer observation reveals they are what they were intended to be—questions on the basic principles of Christianity.

Our teen-age girls and boys did what we wanted them to do—they answered the questionnaire as best they could, and they answered it well.

Twenty-three of thirty-nine schools approached through their superintendents requested the questionnaires, and seventeen of these schools returned them to the committee. The following observations drawn from a study of the results by age groups are interesting, instructive and constructive:

1. Our young people, either in their homes or their Churches, or in both, are being effectively instructed in the basic principles of Christianity.
2. Even scholars so young as ten years attempted and, in the main, could answer ten of the twelve questions.
3. More stress apparently has been laid on the obligations of Church membership than on several of the essential principles on which Church membership necessarily must be based.
4. On the whole, there was a vagueness in regard to what constitutes faith.
5. Few attempted to define the Holy Spirit.
6. Very few could name the principles of the Christian Church.

Some one has said: "It is one thing to be a Christian, and quite another to know what Christianity is." We understand Christian education to be the effort of the Church, through every available agency and channel, but more especially through the home, the Sunday School, the Christian Endeavor, and the missionary societies, to teach what Christianity is. It is not to teach ethics, nor morality, nor social service, but to teach the essentials of Christianity, that these might work out in ethics, in morality, and in social service. We are very mindful of Paul—"Work out your own salvation, for it is God that worketh in you."

Another has said: "It is apparently quite possible for one to go to Sunday School and Church considerable without ever gaining a clear conception of what Christianity is." The investigations by groups of chaplains and Y. M. C. A. religious secretaries a few years ago in the armies of England and the United States bear out the truth of this. One report reads: "We find astonishing, lamentable, universal ignorance concerning the facts and truths of Christianity." It is to remedy such a condition to emphasize the necessity of Christian education. The Church of the Reformation was a teaching Church, and we have got to become again more and more a careful and thorough teaching Church.

We wish to make the following suggestions:

1. That our pastors, from time to time, preach on:

The religious truths of the Old Testament.
The teachings of Jesus.
Paul's interpretation of the life, the death and the resurrection of the Christ.
The history of the Church.
The principles of the Christian Church.

2. That our Sunday Schools have brought before them from time to time:

The history of the Church.
The history of missions.
The great essential truths.
The principles of the Christian Church.

We wish to recommend:

1. That the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies of our Conference manifest a greater interest in the Convention organized and carried on in their behalf.
2. That our Sunday Schools give considerable thought to the advantages of grading and of using graded literature.
3. That our Sunday Schools conduct daily vacation Bible schools.
4. That where it is practicable, our Churches promote and support the Virginia system of public school Bible study.
5. That we endorse the request of the Board of Religious Education of the Southern Convention for the "Children's Day" offering from our schools, and that we urge the promotion of the offering.
6. That our Churches conduct classes in leadership training, especially teacher-training.
7. That our pastors take more active part in the Sunday School, informing themselves and instructing the Sunday School leaders in methods, organization, and worship.
8. That until the Southern Convention takes some action, the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies of our Conference support, as an emergency, the Department of Christian Education of the General Convention with one Sunday's offering each year, preferably the offering received on rally day.
9. That our Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor Societies and missionary societies endeavor to be represented at the Elon Chautauqua and School of Methods.
10. That the executive board of the Convention of Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies and two members at large, to be appointed by the president, constitute the Conference Committee on Christian Education.
11. That we, as a Conference, endorse the plans and suggestions of the General Convention Department of Christian Education for a program of Christian Education for our denomination.

GETTING ACQUAINTED WITH BOOKS.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

The food of the infant must be suited to infancy. Childhood and youth have their special calls and necessities if proper growth is to be expected. In the physical body, we all recognize and act upon these special demands that are the call of faithful mother nature. We dare not disobey them.

To secure the proper growth and development of the mental, and emotional, and spiritual nature of the child we must keep in mind the fact that the diet must be properly chosen and carefully adapted to the varying needs of the child at the different stages of his life's history. The thing that would be just suited to one period may be very distasteful if offered at some other time. With a love for reading once fully established, and with a proper beginning made along the paths of literature, it is a certainty that the child will continue to walk for all his days with books as his constant companions and among his most cherished possessions. How important, then, that the early years of the child shall have due thought in order that his feet may be set upon paths that will afford so much happiness and real help for his life!

It is almost a crime to allow a child to wander aimlessly along in his first years of reading. Then, if ever, he needs a friend—some guide to point out for him books suited to his growth and meeting his inclinations. If this is not done, he may conclude that books have nothing to offer him, and as a result go through life denied the power that he should have been able to draw from this source, and without the joys that can alone come from a wide, intellectual range. Right here parents, teachers, ministers, and all who come in contact with childhood have a great possibility of service that they should gladly meet.

This is not intended to be a catalogue of the books suited to the different ages of life—nothing of the kind—still we must suggest that no child of himself can be expected to know that he should read certain delightful fairy tales unless his attention is called to them; likewise, how is he to visit Crusoe's Island unless it be pointed out to him, or revel among the wonders of the tales of the Thousand and One Nights? King Arthur can never become a heroic figure to him until he makes his acquaintance, and Rip Van Winkle can never hold his fancy until he learns of his doings and his dwelling-place. Tom Brown's life is a sealed book, until he can go with him to Rugby, and share with him a boy's trials under such conditions of life. He does not know until told that Charles and Mary Lamb are waiting to lead him into fascinating ways that he may later traverse again with the world's immortal dramatist, Shakespeare. He knows of no jungle-land, no Kipling, until it is pointed out; neither does he know that many of the world's most delightful poets have certain poems just suited to his needs if some kind hand but lead him to stray through the pages of some carefully compiled collection.

A proper beginning once made, and all becomes easy. One naturally finds his way along after he has seen something of the lay of the land. He soon finds certain authors making special appeal to him, certain ages holding him with their historical movements, certain lines of thought meeting his own peculiar cravings. The abundance of material no longer confuses; but he sees it shaping up under various heads, as science, history, fiction, poetry, and other classifications, and taking its place as belonging to the different ages of mankind—ancient, modern, mythical, authentic, speculative, established—and the reader finds himself able to select just what he needs. He has become his own best guide, and his tastes and inclinations have become competent to care for him in the world of books. He knows much, and, best of all, he knows where and how to find what he does not already know. He moves with a sense of power and certain victory, for he has learned how to find his way among the mightiest monuments of the ages, the pyramids of thought that rear their heads, not on Egypt's sands, but upon the shelves of the libraries of mankind.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

GOD AND US.

"What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with thy Lord."—Micah 6:8.

Let us begin the week with a clear understanding of what the Lord would have us do during the week. He has not left us without His guidance. He spoke to the devout men of the Hebrews, and out of it came our Bible. He spoke to the Nomads of Asia and gave us the Koran. He spoke to the American Indian, and they had their happy hunting ground. He spoke to the black tree-dwellers of Africa, and they found comfort. He revealed Himself to Moses and gave to the world the Jewish law, which Moses said was better than the jungle. He spoke to the apostles and the law of righteousness, justice, mercy, peace and forgiveness became better than "an eye for an eye"—better than the courts. There is hardly a moment in our lives that one of these does not knock at our door. Let us live the week in obedience to our text.

Prayer.—Our Father, renew our spirits with the week, and so reveal Thyself to us every step of the way, that our work will be a delight to us, and not a burden. Give us such a love for Thee and Thy law that it may be sweet to us to obey. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things which he possesseth."—Luke 12:15.

*"When one buildeth up a wall, behold! they daub it with untempered mortar. I say unto them that daub with untempered mortar that it shall fall. * * * Lo, when the wall is fallen, shall it not be said unto you, where is the daubing wherewith we have daubed? * * * And ye shall know that I am the Lord."*—Ezk. 13:10-14.

So is he who builds his character—his house of life. God accused the children of Israel of false-witnessing, challenging authority, hating one another, having an abnormal aversion to work, seeking after pleasure, denying the spirit of God in human life, unrepentant, and says that they are like cement with too much sand in it. One would think that He is talking to the present generation when it is seen plainly that so many are filling their lives with the mud of iniquity, unhallowed purposes, disobedience to authority, contempt for law, hating and back-biting, evading honest labor, making pleasure the chief aim in life, denying God and chilling the heart toward Him. Let us look well to our building and put in the right sort of stuff every inch of the way, so that in looking back we may not have to ask, "Where is my wall? Oh, it was built of mud!"

Prayer.—Dear Father, we thank Thee for pointing out the way, and that we may build our lives of goodness on the sure foundation of eternity. We confess our sins and shortcomings and pray Thee for forgiveness. Thou who hast given us a life and a character to build and all good things to complete the structure, help us to build wisely. In the purity of our thought, purify our own. In the glory of Thy wealth, inspire us to make good use of our own, and when we lose, may we not lose our reputation. Give us strength to live so that at the close of every day we may feel Thy spirit saying, "Well done." This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

DARING TO SAY "NO."

"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor than silver and gold."—Prov. 22:1.

Learn to say "No" to anybody or to anything when it is a matter of going wrong. It takes a lot of backbone, and grit, and cheek, and audacity, and nerve, to do it; but set this as your standard and stick to it, and it can be done to your eternal profit. There is a story of a boy who was an apprentice at a trade. One day the gang around him tried to make him take a drink; but he said "No." Others joined in to intimidate him, and said, "You have got to. We will pour it down you or we will spoil that new suit of yours in trying to do so." He replied, "As you please; I came here this morning with a clean jacket and a clean character. You can spoil my jacket, but you cannot spoil my character."

Gladstone said: "Be inspired with the belief that life is a noble calling, not a mean, groveling thing, but an elevated and lofty destiny." If one is inspired with this idea, he will try to live so as not to fall short. Let us seek this inspiration for our lives.

Prayer.—Our Heavenly Father, from whom all noble inspiration comes, deliver us from anything that would drag us down or mar our character. When the enemy sweeps in upon us, or we are tempted, even in the smallest thing, lift the barrier of Thy spirit within us that we may withstand all sinful suggestions. In hours of weakness, be Thou our strength. When failure or misfortune drives us to discouragement and despair, cheer us up and be Thou our hope. If circumstances are against us, suffer us not to be overwhelmed, save by Thy mercy and promises. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"BOASTITIS."

"Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall."—Prov. 16:8.

One of the most fatal diseases of the soul is "boastitis." When we reach the pinacle of position and honor, we stick our thumbs in our vest, square ourselves back and with a broad, bland smile present an attitude that says, "See who I am!" or "Look what I have done!" It is human to be proud of our achievements, but it is fatal to feel it and be self-centered. You know what happened to the rich man, and the rich young ruler; and you also know what Jesus said to the disciples when they disputed about chief seats—"He that would be greatest among you, let him be your servant." If there is a fly in the cup, we reject the cup. Before we boast or even feel secure, let us see that there are no flies about us. Remember the words of Jesus to the men who asked him to judge the woman who was caught in the act of adultery—"Let him that is without sin cast the first stone." Let us remember that when we see what we think are wrongs in others, that others are seeing what they think are wrongs in us, and they may be right. Let us have a care to keep our own souls clean. The Lord has his hand on all, and some day will demand restitution. .What will we do?

Prayer.—Dear Heavenly father, forgive us the multitude of our transgressions and forbid that we shall presume on Thy goodness by boasting of our own. Forbid that we shall grieve Thy heart by looking to ourselves. Hold Thou before us visions of the heights yet to be attained, and inspire us, by even the failures and short-comings, to strive all the harder to overcome the world. Give us this victory today. We ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE HOME OF THE SOUL.

"She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth."—1 Tim. 5:6.

It is one thing to have a place to live, but quite another as to where the soul lives. The two homes may be as far from one another as from pole to pole. Our souls do not always live where our bodies do. Willie said, "Aunt Kate, do you rent rooms?" "No," said Aunt Kate; "and why do you ask?" "Because," said Willie, "Papa said you had room for rent in the upper story." If it were customary to disclose the whereabouts of the soul, strange and startling revelations would appear.

The Bible says of a certain woman: "She liveth in pleasure." In other words, she delights in parties, fine clothes, fooling, jesting, touring, etc., and having a general good time. These things reveal her spiritual address—where her soul lives. She puts on the name-plate of her home, "Life." God puts there, "Death." God does not wish to deprive us of pleasure, but He wishes us to live in prayer, love, charity, Christian brotherhood and honor to God.

Prayer.—Heavenly Father, in whose hands are the hearts of Thy creatures, have mercy upon our frailties and turn our whole being to Thee. Quench Thou our pride and greediness for the things of the world and create within us more thirsting for communion with Thee and a more ardent desire for righteousness and godliness in the world. Hasten the time when pleasures shall have only their proper place, and all the world shall honor Thee and every soul shall live in the garden of God. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE BLESSING OF CONFESSING.

"Whosoever shall confess (acknowledge) Me before men, him shall the Son of Man confess (acknowledge) before the angels of God."—Luke 12:8.

The most of folks take a pride in letting folks know something of their experiences. The soldier wears his service stripes and every other badge he may be entitled to, and these are silent witnesses of what he has done. Fraternities and brotherhoods wear their badges, and these are silent acknowledgments of something they are, and there are but very few lodge men who cannot and who do not talk up their lodge; but when it comes to a matter of religion, the greatest brotherhood of the world, they are not only silent, but stay away from it. We do not any more hear testimonies in the prayer-meetings as we did of old. If we were bolder to testify of our Lord and His spirit, we would have more power for Him. The architect of the colliseum of Rome, with King Nero, stood watching the lions tear in pieces the Christians. He cried out to the kind, "Why this horror? I am a Christian." We need a boldness to declare the testimony of our Lord and Master and our allegiance to Him before any people, thinking little of ourselves. Let us walk with Him today and tomorrow, and He will walk with us in white and make us worthy.

Prayer.—Dear Father, redeem us by the blood of the Lamb. Take away all our sins, and help us to bear witness of Thee everywhere, in all that we do and say. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE SABBATH AND MAN.

"I came that they (ye) might have life, and that they (ye) might have it more abundantly."—Jno. 10:10.

Life is religious, and the Sabbath is given us that we might develop our religious instincts and bring the best that we are capable of to full fruition. Believing things merely about God is not religion; if so, a savage may have as much as we. Christ did not come that we might believe things, but that we might have life. He came to save us, and that means the whole man as well as our faith. It means heal our diseases, feed the hungry, warm the cold, cool the hot, relieve the suffering; and these things are first in His ministries. His way was to relieve situations and then He taught them the glories of heaven and the soul. Thus let us get away from the idea that there are only some things that are divine; that there are some places only where we may meet God. He is everywhere, in work and in play, in home and Church. Where the heart is, there is God; and where He is it is divine. We do not go to Church to meet God. We do, of course, but I mean to say that is not the primary motive for our going. We go to Church to worship God together with the saints, to commune with Him, to be taught in Him and to socialize life's influence through Him. Today is a solemn appeal that we be all this, and enter into life's callings, understanding that only that is secular in which God is not recognized. In all things, we are challenged to our best, that we may bring most good to the world. That is glory to God, and if we do our duty today, the spirit of the day itself will do the rest.

Prayer.—O Lord, increase the spirit of the Sabbath day in the hearts of all Thy believing children. Increase the number of those who keep this day aright. Forgive us of our sins, and forbid that we shall desecrate it in any way, but enter into all its soul-life. Amen.

FILLING THE EMPTY CHURCH.

(In Two Parts—Part II.)

The Church leaders should have a profound passion for souls, a warm sympathy for those unguided individuals who do not attend Church, a divine vision of the world task, and an intelligent program which relates the local Church to the entire world. The big aim of the campaign should be to get men and women under the influence of such a Christ-surcharged program and atmosphere. Spiritual life supports Church attendance almost entirely; hence non-Church attendance is due to the fact that the spiritual life is lacking in our Churches of today. The manifestation of that life makes the Church attractive. The member who can stay away from the religious services of the Church without a valid reason and feel no compunction of conscience, needs instruction regarding the meaning and obligation of his Christian profession. It should be the purpose of a "go-to-Church" campaign to bring the people into the Church for instruction, worship and inspiration.

We have been so busy making converts, in these days of high-pressure evangelism, that we have not taken time to learn what has become of them after they are made. One thing certain: these great Pentecostal ingatherings have not increased Church attendance and efficiency in an adequately large measure. Hundreds may have been gathered in, doubling the membership of the Church, but six months later you could not tell it by the size of the audience, the attendance at prayer-meetings, or the missionary offering. Should we eliminate from our records those who have no part in the work of the Church, or seek to re-enlist them, and reckon the work of saving the saved as important as converting the unsaved? I am entirely convinced that the latter is more in harmony with the spirit of Christ, who wept over the orthodox but unresponsive city of Jerusalem.

The methods of the campaign are such that your Church is able to get into touch with every family within the legitimate boundary and influence of your Church.

A printed card registering the attendance of each individual is provided, together with leaflets for general distribution to those you expect to co-operate in the campaign. The community is divided into districts, with fifteen to twenty families in each district, and friendly visitors, two by two, are sent to visit them. The delinquent ones should be visited every week until they come to Church, and if they lapse after beginning to attend, they are to be visited again. As the campaign proceeds, the visitors may be changed to other districts, so that new faces and new and different messages may be delivered. The pulpit will also prepare for the delivery of messages that will help win and hold the delinquents when they appear at the services, and cause them to become regular in their attendance. The pastor is the keyman. The plan contemplates the services of no one but the local membership, and it will succeed if they are willing to pay the price. The best sort of help a Church can get is self-help, the kind only its own membership can give. The most beautiful thing about such a campaign is that it will not work itself. It needs the human element to make it go.

Some Churches begin their "go-to-Church" campaign on Easter Sunday, while others end their campaign on Easter. Some put on a campaign to avoid the summer slump, while other congregations plan to increase their attendance during the winter season. Special days should be arranged for during the "Church-attendance campaign" such as "home-coming day," "girls' day," "Sunday School rally day," "boys' day," "mothers' and babies' day," "old folks' and home department day," "men's day," "Christian Endeavor day," "woman's day," "evangelistic day."

Many a Church is known as "The Friendly Church" because it pays attention to the stranger within its gates. Always consider yourself as the host; the stranger is the welcome guest; treat him so. "Be careful to entertain strangers, for thereby many have entertained angels unawares." We should make the building, as well as the services, attractive. Nothing is more beautiful than cleanliness. We should begin the campaign with a house-cleaning party. After the building is cleaned, it can and should be made beautiful—flowers and plants add wonderful to its attractiveness. If you have a man of sense, put him in charge of the ventilation, for many a sermon has been weakened in power by bad ventilation. Have a reception committee to greet every stranger and turn him over quietly to an usher, who will seat him near the front and place a hymn-book in his hands. If you do these things, you will give the Church the beauty of cleanliness, the beauty of flowers, the beauty of orderliness, the beauty of reverence, the beauty of worship, and the beauty of hospitality to strangers.

The Church needs to advertise. Good goods must be displayed. Religion is a commodity of the heart which everybody needs, but few acquire. This should be done through the newspaper, Church paper, bulletin-board, electric signs, window display, card distribution—any sane publicity for religious institutions will be uniformly successful. The advertised goods must be delivered. The real Church will always have a message from God. There is nothing so derogatory to the science of advertising as to promise something to the public that you cannot produce when it gets there.

We need not go far to find the cause for the half-filled Church. The regular habits of children in leaving the Church service are developing a personal irresponsibility in the membership of the Church of tomorrow. The restoration of the family altar, the family pew and the introduction of a child's service in the Church will go far to solve the problem of Church-attendance in the next generation. It will be a new day for the Church when it manifests enough vitality and efficiency to hold its converts, form a Church-attendance conscience, preach the Christ of the Bible and His terms of salvation, and when the names on its records stand for active Christian service.

Christian Orphanage

SOME ENCOURAGEMENT.

DEAR FRIENDS:

While attending the Eastern Virginia Conference I had a good friend to tell me that his Church was going to send the orphanage the largest Thanksgiving offering this year that it had ever sent. Crops are good, cotton and tobacco bringing splendid prices; people in fine spirits. When God so richly blesses us, we should be willing to give a part to Him. When you give to bless little orphan children, you are blessing God.

I was also encouraged last Sunday while attending Church in a city, by the splendid way in which the pastor called the attention of his people to the Thanksgiving offering to be made in the next few weeks, and urged upon them the great need of the orphanage with its 105 children with quite a number on the waiting list waiting to be received. The Church will raise a fine offering, the pastor as well as the people are interested.

I truly hope all our pastors will take the time to urge their people to make the Thanksgiving offering as large as possible this year. The need is urgent and the cause worthy.

God's Plan for Your Life.

"God has a plan for your life. There is one place in this round world of need that will be a place of power and joy for you, and only one. Find that will of God, and standing right with Him, right with men, right with yourself, you have found the life of blessing."

This message of Sherwood Eddy to the great band of young people who had declared "It is my purpose to be a foreign missionary," and were assembled in a great student volunteer convention, is a message for all men. God has a plan for your life, even as the architect has a carefully prepared plan for his building, and the artist for his picture. When the architect for the great Brooklyn bridge saw the completed structure, he exclaimed: "It is just like the plan!" How wonderful will it be to know some day that your life is just like God's plan for it!

Jesus Christ came to earth to live a life and utter truths which would help man of all ages to find God's plan and live lives which bring blessedness and peace. He came, not as a ruler with pomp and display, nor as a judge with many rules and regulations. Rather, He came as a servant, as a teacher—above all, as a missionary. He was sent by a God who loved the world, and yearned to see all men brought to His throne. He was sent to save men from eternal death. He was sent to save men from sin and to relieve them from pain. He came as a "helper." And then He prayed in His prayer in that upper chamber just before His crucifixion: "Sanctify them in the truth: Thy word is truth. As Thou didst send Me into the world, even so send I them into the world."

Picture the little group of men whom Jesus had closely associated with Him. They had been fishermen and humble folk. They were not chosen for great riches nor culture. They were "average" people, developed into great leaders, because they were willing to be used by Jesus, to receive power from Him. To this comparatively small group was given one of the greatest tasks of all time—to bring all nations to God. They lived in a small country. What could they do? They had little of organization nor training, nor influence, as this world would think, in a world dominated by Grecian thought and Roman power. But here is the secret of the great movement which they began. They knew Jesus. If you would find the God-planned life, that is the first requirement. You must know Jesus.

"Oh, how you'll love Him when you know Him;
Know the Christ who died to set you free."

Knowing Jesus leads to love for Him. Love leads to a desire to be like Him. Such a desire inspires missionary zeal, for Christ was first and foremost a missionary, teaching, preaching, healing, helping, always eager for people to know the Father. Even without His great commission, which has won many to the missionary cause, His life was a continual missionary message. His call to the disciples was ever to search for others, to *"Go * * * teach * * * for, lo! I am with you."* Read the story of His life, as found in the four gospels, with the thought in mind: "Jesus wants me to work with Him to bring all people to know the Father for themselves, and then to bring them to be helpers to carry the message of love to others."

God calls His children to be missionaries. His plan for your life must include this missionary call. He will reveal just what part you are to play. Every child of God may find and enter into God's plan for His life. Mr. McConkey, the great spiritual writer of many tracts, suggests four ways by which God's plan may be found, and error safeguarded. These ways are to believe in God and believe that He has a life-plan for every individual; to pray for God's guidance; to will to do God's will, and to do the next thing which God points you to do, following Him as His guidance appoints. These steps will help every Christian to find his or her place in the great missionary program, which is the supreme work of the Church, the winning of the world to Jesus Christ. Your best work may be done on your knees praying for the missionaries who have gone, and for the Churches which are sending them:

"Away in foreign lands they wondered how
Their simple word had power.
At home the Christians two or three had met
To pray an hour."

Missionary advance depends upon earnest, believing prayer. The Father who has given you all, may count on your gifts to send others to represent you on the foreign or home field. The Father may honor you with a call for your life, your all, as a gift to His service. By finding God's plan for your life, realizing that His call is to all to help to bring His kingdom in, may keep you at home or send you afar, but all will be where He wishes them to be.

All Christians are called by God to be missionary. All followers of the Christ may be blessed with power to accomplish much in His service. The last words spoken by our Lord on earth were in the form of a command and a prophecy: "Ye shall be My witnesses, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Jerusalem and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." He made no distinction between home and foreign missions. Both are included in His great plan for world-redemption. His heart of love could not distinguish between the birthplaces of men, in determining their worthiness to hear the Gospel, and know of His Heavenly Father's love.

Jesus Christ, our Saviour and Master, was the first great Christian Missionary. To follow Him means to be missionary. Followers who refuse the program of their leader are simply no followers at all. Their heart cannot be in the work, nor their love for the leader great. The great Leader of leaders, who never makes an error in His guidance nor a mistake in His plans, calls for Christian followers, who with hearts of devotion, willing spirits and trusting, courageous lives, will volunteer to follow Him all the way.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

November 25, 1923.

Topic: "What we thank God for."—Ps. 103: 1?22.

(Thanksgiving Meeting.)

Thoughts for the Meeting.

"Soul service is the soul of service." Even more than thankful words are due to Jehovah. The psalmist is blessing God with a thankful spirit, with all that is within him. Verse 1.

How often His goodness is forgotten! God is remembered in times of sorrow and of need, but so often His every-day mercies are overlooked. Verse 2.

Study the blessings which the psalmist enumerates, forgiveness of sin and health of body, safety from danger and happiness, strength and justice. For how many of these have you thanked Him today? Verses 3-6.

"Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling-place in all generations." (Ps. 90:1.) Through the ages, Jehovah has been guiding His children. His love is for all time. Verse 7.

God is always ready to forgive the penitent. His is great patience for the offender. The greatest blessing which can come into a life is a knowledge of His love, and love for Him, who loved the world enough to give His only begotten Son that men might have everlasting life. God is a friendly supreme power. What would life be without Him? Verse 8.

If God dealt with us after our sins, what a change there would often be! Disobedient, willful children are dealt with patiently and lovingly. Let us be grateful for His dealings with us. Verse 10.

"Like as a father." A kind, loving, forgiving Father, best defines our God. Verse 13.

The psalmist calls upon the angels to bless Jehovah, His hosts and His works. But He also raises praise Himself. As Spurgeon once said of the psalmist: "He would practice what he had preached. He would be leader of the choir which he had summoned. It is poor business to say, 'Praise ye,' and never add, 'Praise, O my soul.'"

Inner thanks is the heart of thanksgiving.

"This world is not so bad a world
As some would like to make it;
But whether good or whether bad,
Depends on how you take it."

How do you take the world and God's gifts—as a mere matter of course, or as a matter of gratitude? It is easy to tell others to have a thankful spirit, but deep down in your own heart are you really thankful?

In your own life, have you ever tried to make a complete list of things for which you may be grateful?

From the Bible we learn that—

Jesus was thankful (Matt. 11:25, 26:27).

The Passover was a thankfeast (Exod. 12:17, 42).

The psalms are largely hymns of thanks.

That we are commanded to be thankful, and shown how to render thanks to God (Prov. 3:9; Col. 3:15-17).

"Thanksgiving without thanksliving comes under condemnation both from the prophets and the Lord Jesus."

Plans for the Meeting.

Send special invitations to young people of the Sunday School and community to this meeting. "How long since you said, 'Thank you,' to God. Say it at C. E. Sunday night," might appear on the invitation card, or on a poster calling attention to the meeting. Give the room a Thanksgiving appearance by decorating with autumn leaves, corn stalks and other signs of autumn and harvest. Let the prayer meeting or program committee plan to give the atmosphere of thanks to the whole meeting, through hymns of praise, thankful prayers, personal testimonies to God's goodness.

Topics for Brief Talks or General Discussion.—Every-Day Blessings from God. Developing a Thankful Spirit. Living a Thankful Life. The Heavenly Father's Goodness. The Bible and Praise.

Suggested Hymns.—"Come, Thou Fount of Every Blessing," "We Praise Thee, O God," "Doxology," "I'll Live for Him."

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

NOVEMBER 25, 1923.

TOPIC: "How God shows His goodness."—Ps. 145:9, 10. (Thanksgiving Meeting.)

"The Lord is good to all."

"All Thy works shall praise Thee, O Lord."

Thanksgiving Day is one day in the year set apart to thank God for His goodness to all of us. But His goodness is not for one day, nor one week, nor even for one year. It is for everybody and for all time.

A friend of children, Dr. Amos R. Wells, tells in this way of God's goodness, and of the blessings which He gives:

"The sap flows from the ground into the roots of the great oak; but the roots pass it on, nearly all of it, to the trunk; and the trunk passes it on, nearly all of it, to the leaves; and the leaves, after a while, fall off and decay, going back into the ground again, so that the ground gets back nearly all it gave to the tree. Why doesn't the tree keep it all? The great earth could surely afford to lose it. But no; the tree is glad to throw off its leaves and cover the earth and enrich it, since the earth is so good to the trees. Don't you think that God's children ought to give back to Him some of the many blessings He gives them?"

God will be pleased if you bring a new Junior to this Thanksgiving meeting, if you will try very hard to keep the Junior Christian Endeavor pledge which you have made to Him, if you will do kind things for others in His name.

His blessings come to all every day. Why not make every day a Thanksgiving Day to Him?

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION DOINGS.

Oak Level and New Hope Churches, in the Eastern North Carolina Conference, have fine Christian Endeavor Societies, young but doing splendid work.

The Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention met in special session at Hotel Raleigh, Raleigh, N. C., on the 9th. Plans for the future work of the board were laid.

Dr. H. Shelton Smith, who takes up his work as superintendent of education of the International Council of Religious Education on November 10th, addressed the Eastern Virginia Conference, and also services at Bethlehem, Suffolk and Richmond, on the "Why of Religious Education."

Both the Conferences of Far South voted to promote a Chautauqua and School of Methods at Bethlehem College next summer. Plans are being made for a bigger, better gathering at Elon, July 28th to August 3rd next. The course offered will permit those attending to receive credit on an international diploma.

Raleigh Junior Christian Endeavor Society has nine Junior Christian Endeavor experts, with six more ready to take the examination under their efficient superintendent, Miss Fleda Summers.

New Christian Endeavor Societies doing good work are active in the Antioch Church, Alabama Conference; Cragford, Alabama; Beulah, Eastern North Carolina, and a society soon to be organized at Martha's Chapel.

WOMEN'S ACTIVITIES.

PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary.

A Young People's Missionary Society was organized at the Reidsville Church Sunday evening, November 4th. In spite of the inclement weather, a fine group of young people were present and entered whole-heartedly into the election of officers and making arrangements for the future work. Monday evening after the second Sunday in the month was chosen as the time of meeting.

Mrs. W. D. Wilkins was unanimously elected superintendent. She is teacher of one of the young people's classes of the Sunday School, interested in young people, and thoroughly prepared to serve as a sympathetic adviser.

Miss Rose Walker was elected president, and will make a capable, consecrated leader. Other officers elected were: William Stanfield, vice-president; Maude Griffith, secretary; Virgil Brown, treasurer; Tommie Smith, chairman membership committee.

The following are members: Josephine Brown, Mrs. Pattie Stanfield, Mrs. Vera Trent, Oliver Smith, Tillie Smith, Ethel Smith, Glenn Gilley, Clarence Hilton, Robert Brown, Eugene Rice, Rose Walker, William Stanfield, Maude Griffith, Virgil Brown, Tommie Smith.

They hope to be able to report more new members later.

THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE.

The Moody Bible Institute has announced a change in its plan of operation to meet what is anticipated in its future development.

Mr. Henry P. Crowell, for nearly twenty years president of the institute, has been made president of the board of trustees, though with practically the same responsibility as before. Rev. Jas. M. Gray becomes president of the institute, after nearly as long a period of service as executive secretary and dean.

The educational department has been divided into three schools, each under a separate dean. Rev. L. W. Gosnell, formerly assistant dean of the department, has been made dean of the day school; Rev. P. B. Fitzwater, who has served as director of the evening classes, becomes dean of the evening school, and Rev. J. H. Ralston, who was secretary of the correspondence department, is now dean of the correspondence school.

It is stated that these changes bring the plan of operation of the institute more nearly in line with that of other educational institutions.

The institute has had a total student enrollment in all departments since its founding of 47,837. The total number now under instruction is 8,764. Of these, 872 are in the day school, 862 in the evening school, and 7,030 in the correspondence school. M. B. I.

SHARPER THAN A TWO-EDGED SWORD.

A striking illustration of the truth of Hebrews 4:12, "The Word of God is living and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword," etc., occurred in the South last summer.

A little country Church was holding a special children's meeting under the direction of a Moody Bible Institute student. During the reading of the Scripture, a tall boy of about eighteen years entered. He was accompanied by a little girl, whose lovely expressive face showed in marked contrast to his, which was so devoid of expression as to proclaim him for what he was—an idiot.

The little service proceeded, and the children began to recite this verse in unison: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." The idiot boy and his little sister joined in and repeated that blessed verse over and over, and even on the way home the boy continued to recite it.

All the rest of that evening, until he retired, the boy repeated that verse in the presence of his father, who was a confirmed drunkard, but who loved his son with all his heart. He listened to his son's voice with gradually deepening interest as those glorious words penetrated, first his brain, and then his heart: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Very slowly he perceived the great truth embodied in those few words, and began to realize his own lost condition—his absolute need of a Saviour. And so, a little later, he knelt at the Master's feet and received a full and free salvation.

Truly, God uses even the most simple and foolish instruments to bring precious souls to the knowledge of His saving grace. M. B. I.

HOW THE PASTOR SETTLED HIS DIFFICULTY WITH THE CHOIR.

We have heard of one minister who called his choir the "war department of his Church." We do not know if this is deserved or not, but we are quite sure that the choir is often the center of Church difficulties. Musical natures are probably more sensitive to discord than are the average man and woman, and so it comes to pass that they may show their resentment at what they regard as discord, whether it be in the choir or in the conduct of the pastor.

The Christian Register tells of a most interesting instance when the choir took offense at something the pastor did, and how he settled with them in a most unusual way, as follows:

Rev. James Converse was for thirty-seven years minister of the Church in Weathersfield, Vt., going there soon after his graduation from Harvard and remaining until he died, pastor, counselor, leader in affairs spiritual and political. His skill in settling troubles is shown in the story of his dealing with the choir, which because of some difference with the minister had gone on strike. The choir announced that it would take its place in the choir-loft on Sunday morning, but would not sing. The Church was crowded by those who wanted to witness the pastor's dealing with the situation. Mr. Converse, for the first hymn, announced, "We will now sing 'St. Thomas'—

" 'Come, we who love the Lord,
And let our joys be known;
Join in a song with sweet accord,
And thus surround the throne.'

"We will begin with the second verse:

" 'Let those refuse to sing
Who never knew their God,
But children of the heavenly King
May speak their joys abroad.' "

The choir capitulated and sang with fervor.

PLUCKY, CLUCKY, AND LUCKY.

"What did our new master say to you?" Plucky the sheep-dog asked Clucky the queen hen.

"He said 'You poor old thing; why haven't you any water on this hot day?' Then he fetched a little troughful and said to the little fairy who was with him: 'Molly Rosepetal, you've got to take care of Clucky, our best new hen.' And then he said to me: 'Clucky, you must take care of Molly Rosepetal and lay her nice brown eggs.' I shall. I shall, indeed."

"He said to me: 'You are a fine fellow.'" cried Plucky. "Then he told me that I was a bit untrained, and he told me I was to take care of the little girl, and he gave me a jolly pat, which after the kicks I used to get from old Farmer Price, was fine. I'll serve him well, and I'll guard the little one. What did he say to you, poor Mizzables?"

"Don't call me Mizzables any longer," replied Nanny Goat, who was tied up near the gate, a very thin goat indeed. "I'm going to change my name to Lucky. Our new master seems to understand me. He looked at me for a long time, and said: 'You're not very well, having been left out too much in the rain and wind. And you want careful feeding, and you shall have it.' I am glad, for I have been feeling very queer. Then he showed me to the fairy-child and asked me to give her some beautiful milk. I shall do my best."

"I am glad Farmer Price sold the farm and all of us to this kind new man," shouted the animals in chorus, and the goat danced and butted, and Plucky barked and Clucky clucked. Then they all stopped short, for they saw a sight which made them feel very worried indeed. Molly Rosepetal was rushing down the field toward the new and very deep chalkpit. "She'll fall in and break her leg," screamed Clucky, who was a mother herself, and she and Plucky tore to the place and got there just before Molly. They barred her path, so that the little girl was saved. Lucky would love to have gone too, but she was tied up. Molly was old enough to understand that the animals had saved her, and she stroked Clucky and threw her arms around Plucky's neck. — The British Weekly.

There is no real sorrow for sin when one is not willing to make restitution, so far as he is able. There is a sham repentance which is only selfishness under cover.

Happy is the nation that has some trusted leader to go up to God and bring back God's plans and purposes.

How Shivar Mineral Water Relieves Rheumatism

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate, and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism, it is, therefore, necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable conditions due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred, on the average, report no benefit.

Shivar Springs,
Box 16-B, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

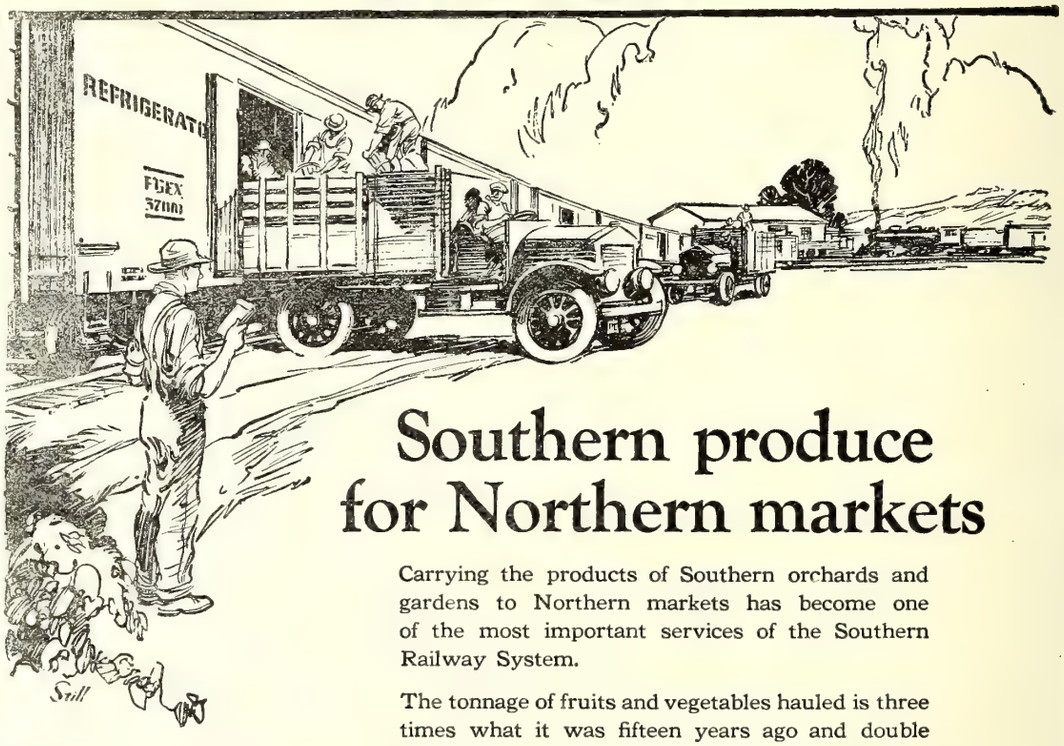
SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM



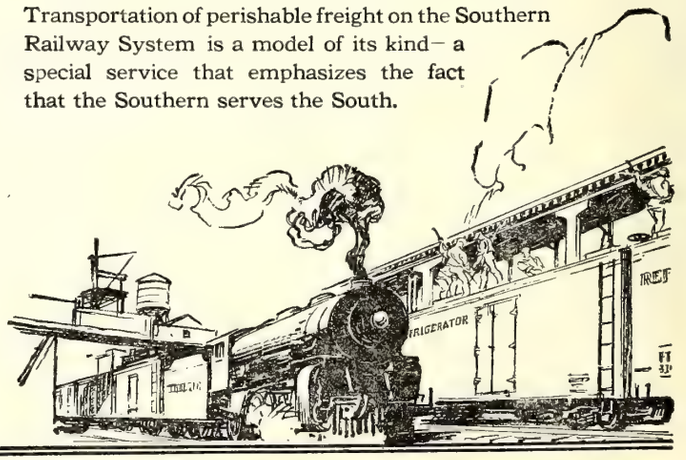
Southern produce for Northern markets

Carrying the products of Southern orchards and gardens to Northern markets has become one of the most important services of the Southern Railway System.

The tonnage of fruits and vegetables hauled is three times what it was fifteen years ago and double what it was ten years ago, and now equals the cotton tonnage.

Building up this great market for Southern produce, which increases the prosperity of the South, would not have been possible without dependable transportation, and this the Southern has provided.

Transportation of perishable freight on the Southern Railway System is a model of its kind— a special service that emphasizes the fact that the Southern serves the South.



Southern Railway System last year spent in the South $20,000,000 more than it received from the South.

P. H. FLEMING.

IT WAS A SPLENDID SERMON.

Before starting to prepare his Sunday morning sermon, did he spend a long and quiet hour of prayer in communion with the Divine to receive wisdom and inspiration?

He did not.

But he read six books on the subject, he looked up his statistics carefully, he outlined his argument logically, and he went into the pulpit fully prepared. And it must have been a great discourse, for after the service several persons told him it was a "splendid" sermon. And he went home to dinner feeling elated.

Did any one come up and confess Christ on account of the sermon?

They did not.

But it was a "splendid sermon"—at least, several of the members said so—and the minister knew it was.

Many prominent men and women of the State will gather in Raleigh on November 19th to attend the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Foundation, who are completing a transcontinental tour in the interest of the movement to provide for the purchase of "Monticello" and the establishment there of a memorial of Jefferson.

It is an interesting question to discuss whether the world is getting better or worse. But it is a more profitable thing to help make it better by doing something instead of talking about it.

IN MEMORY OF ED. SMITH.

Ed. Smith was born May 22, 1860, and died August 3, 1923, being at his death 63 years 2 months and 11 days old. In early life he joined Pleasant Hill Christian Church; later he moved his membership to Spilona, and from there to Amelia, where he belonged at his death. He began life with but little except a strong, healthful body and a sound, vigorous mind. In both respects he was considerably above the average man. He was a splendid farmer, both in planning and in executing, and in these respects was a model in his community. He built a nice home and reared a family of highly respected children. He was kind, sympathetic and generous. A warm-hearted hospitality was natural with him, and visitors were made to feel at perfect ease in his home. He embodied most of what is best in country life. He was kind and affectionate in his family, and they loved him devotedly.

His community held him in high esteem. He also had many friends in other sections who loved him, the writer being one of them. He was a real man, a true husband, a loving father, a devoted friend, a Christian gentleman. He did his part, dodged no responsibilities, and has gone to receive his reward.

May the Lord comfort those that loved him. G. J. GREEN.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

School Teachers.—

Of the 700,000 school teachers in the United States, 300,000 have never had regular public-school training above the seventh grade, says the president of the University of Minnesota. Salaries are too low to permit adequate training.

The Greenwich Observatory.—

Greenwich observatory, known and used by the scientific world, is to be moved from Greenwich to Holmbury Hill. Electrification of a railway line running nearby necessitated the change. The observatory was built in 1675 for the advancement of navigation and nautical astronomy. "Greenwich time" is the world's standard.

Auto a Necessity.—

The luxuries of yesterday are the necessities of today. The auto, for instance, was clearly a luxury when first brought on the market. Now it is about 50 per cent a necessity, and daily more so.

A poll by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce shows that, out of 100 autos, 59 are used daily driving to work, 46 are used daily and 36 occasionally in conducting business, and 58 are used for shopping.

Innuendoes of Story.—

Decidedly the most succinct and true opinion that has been passed on Hendrik Van Loon's "Story of the Bible" is found in the Survey Graphic for November: "If the Bible had been no more than the story of the Bible it would hardly have survived long enough for Mr. Van Loon to deal with it. * * * Perhaps the pagan child will make the leap from Van Loon to Isaiah —but one doubts it * * * Certainly one who first approached the story of the nativity through these casual paragraphs would fall on Luke's narrative with surprise and delight * * * His drawings show Jesus with the halo, yet the text rationalizes or avoids the miracles."

The Moody Bible Institute.—

The opportunity is now open to young men and women throughout the country who would like to take advantage of free training for Christian service offered by the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, to enter the institute's evening classes while pursuing some regular employment during the day. The employment bureau of the institute is prepared to co-operate in securing employment for any who would like to follow this plan.

The evening classes give a training equivalent to that of the day classes, without any charge for tuition. The director is Rev. P. B. Fitzwater, D. D., whose expositions of the International Sunday School Lessons are familiar to millions of newspaper readers throughout the country.

Seven hundred and forty-five students—315 men and 430 women—are now enrolled in the evening classes.

Stars' Invisible Spectrum Analyzed.—

In addition to measuring the heat of the stars to the hundred millionth degree, Dr. C. G. Abbott, of the Smithsonian Institution, has been enabled, through his experiments at the Mount Wilson Solar Observatory, for the first time to analyze the invisible spectrum of stars.

Radiation of many stars, from the coolest to the hottest, was measured and plotted in three nights' work att he observatory by Dr. Abbott, the result arousing intense interest in the scientific world.

The spectrum of any given star consists partly of heat, light, X-ray and invisible spectrum, say the scientists on Mount Wilson. Heat differs only from light in that its wave-length is greater. The X-ray is the shortest and radio energy is the longest known to science.

The Jews are Drifting.—

Jews, it is said, are drifting away from the Synagogue, until now 80 per cent claim no connection with it. That means they have no religion. This vast multitude of people without a God, without a Saviour, without salvation, are here in our midst. Because of religious persecution in many so-called Christian countries, and because of the social aversion in which they are held by many Christians, a great barrier has been raised between them and the religion of Jesus Christ. The Christian people of this country have a better opportunity for removing this barrier than any other people in the world. There has never been any religious persecution of the Jews in this land of religious liberty, and in business relations, and to some extent in social relations Gentiles and Jews mingle freely together. If God's people will make an earnest effort to win them individually, many of them can be won for Jesus, who alone can give them the salvation they so much need.

Coolidge with Aims of Autoists.—

In an address to delegates attending the convention of the National Motorists' Association, President Coolidge made it clear that he is in complete sympathy with efforts of American automobilists to secure better roads throughout the country and an equitable method of taxation.

"I doubt if people in general realize the great importance of motor industry, or the great contribution that it is making to human welfare," the President said. "It has raised the people up and given them an entire new outlook on life. It is very difficult to conceive, any longer, of a shut-in population. The motor car takes people abroad, so that they may see not only those things with which they are ordinarly engaged, but they come into contact with all new and novel scenes. It is a great method of education, but in order that it may reach its best fulfillment, it is necessary that it be served by good roads. It is necessary also that reasonable rules and regulations be made, and cars taken so that safety to the greatest possible extent may be preserved."

The Cost of Crime.—

Crime in this country is very costly. The United Presbyterian says: "The nation's annual loss through crime is three billion dollars, according to the National Surety Company. This includes direct losses only. There is no calculation of the indirect cost of crime, which would include the greater cost of maintaining police departments, jails, reformatories, safes and the like." The best and only real preventive of crime is the Gospel of Jesus Christ. It will be far cheaper for this country to preach the Gospel to all the people than to suffer the losses due to crime. This is considering it merely from the financial standpoint. Crime means criminals. Criminals means unsaved men and women. The people of this country might well remember the teaching of our Saviour, "lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where * * * thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where * * * thieves do not break through and steal."

England Accepts Dry Limit.—

The proposal of Secretary of State Hughes that all vessels in American waters be subject to search for contraband liquors twelve miles from shore, instead of only three miles, was accepted by the imperial conference at London and announced by Lord Curzon, the British Foreign Minister. The conference was made up of the Premiers of the various British dominions, and it is believed that they exerted a strong influence over Lord Curzon, who not long ago announced that the government could not consent to the extension of the existing three-mile limit. A strong public sentiment also prevails in England in favor of restricting liquor-smuggling under the British flag. This evidence of co-operation between the two governments in the matter of the enforcement of the prohibition laws is indeed gratifying, and should result in a decided improvement in the situation. At any rate, the international complications which the "wets" gleefully predicted have failed to materialized.

("If iniquity be in thine hand, put it far away."—Job 11:14.)

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. W. J. Edwards, of the Western North Carolina Conference, has moved from Coleridge to Seagrove, N. C., where his correspondents will please address him.

At the Western North Carolina Conference, November 7th, Bro. J. M. Allred was ordained to the office of elder in the Christian Church. We wish him well in his ministry.

The many friends of Rev. H. H. Butler will sympathize with him in the death of his brother, the late Stephen C. Butler, of Berkley, Va. See the obituary of this brother in THE SUN.

The Conference at Bethlehem was a real success as to its spirit. Then, too, it was forward-looking and reaching after larger fields and a better service. Let that be the trend with us in all of our Conferences.

Rev. J. W. Patton transfers his membership from the Western North Carolina Conference to the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference. If we mistake not, this is Bro. Patton's return to his old home Conference.

Dr. Staley was able to attend the late session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference at Holland, Va., even taking part in the work. His general condition is most encouraging, and he is likely to be well and at work very soon.

Orders for "Peloubet's Notes" and "Tarbell's Teachers' Guide" will be received by THE CHRISTIAN SUN, 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va. Great interest will be developed in the study of the International Sunday School Lessons for the years 1924 and 1925. In these two years the lessons will extend over the whole Bible. Price, $2.00 per copy, post-paid.

So far as we heard expressions of opinions, the verdict that the Rev. William D. Harward, D. D., the new president of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, made a fine presiding officer is unanimous. The work seemed to come to him as a natural gift—it was apparently no trouble for him to preside, and he came as near to keeping the business of the program right on time as any president we have known in that body for many a long day.

Rev. P. T. Klapp was taken ill on November 9th, so that he was not able to attend Conference at Bethlehem, Alamance County, November 13th and 14th. His many friends will miss him much and regret deeply his absence. At this writing (November 12th), his condition is not considered serious, but he is too ill to hope to attend Conference. It is the wish of many friends that he may soon be enjoying his usual health, which has been fine of late, or till this late attack.

Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, secretary of religious education, is soon to retire from that position, having accepted a position of like character in our General Convention of the Christian Church, with headquarters at Dayton, Ohio. Miss Pattie Coghill will succeed her and do the work in connection with the work she is now doing, except she will not write the lessons for that department. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle will prepare the lessons. These changes will take place in December.

This week the North Carolina Conference is to meet at Wake Chapel, in Wake County, N. C. Following that, the Christian Missionary Association of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference will meet with the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., December 4, 1923, and that will close up all of our general meetings for this year. So far as we have heard, or observed, the general meetings for this year have manifested a fine spirit and much interest in our general work.

Let the secretaries of the various Conferences who have not yet sent the editor of "The Annual" their Conference proceedings, do so at once. The printer is ready for the minutes, and he is wishing to go ahead with the type-setting, so that "The Annual" may come out earlier than it did last year. Please hurry along your minutes to Rev. J. P. Barrett, editor of "The Annual," Elon College, N. C. One delay occasions other delays, and so hinders the appearance of "The Annual" on time. Do not delay.

To pastors, superintendents and Church-workers in particular: THE CHRISTIAN SUN is published every Thursday, at Richmond, Va., at the following rates: One year, $2.00; six months, $1.00. Or, to new subscribers, if five join in forming a club and remit $7.50 at one time, THE SUN will be sent each one year (separate addresses); for a club of ten and a remittance of $15.00, an extra copy will be sent as a premium to the one getting up the club. Only new subscribers can avail themselves of these prices for November and December.

In this issue, notice is given by Rev. W. L. Wells, secretary of the Christian Missionary Association, for the annual meeting of that body with the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., for December 4th. Let a full attendance be given and a bigger and better work than ever be undertaken. It is forward or backward—which shall it be with us? No body of people in Christian work can stand still—they will go forward or they will go backward. It behooves every loyal and working member to be on the lookout to see that no backward step is taken.

Rev. P. T. Klapp, of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, has been quite sick for almost two weeks. On account of this sickness, he was unable to attend the late session of his Conference at Bethlehem, Alamance County. Yesterday (November 16th) he was slightly improving, but still very sick. We hope to give better news of his condition next week. During the past summer and early fall he has been in unusually good health, and we hope for good health again soon. He was unable to attend his appointment at Danville, Va., last Sunday.

Our Baptist brethren of Virginia last week celebrated their centenary of the Baptist General Association of Virginia. The semi-centenary was celebrated in Richmond in 1873. Now, after fifty years have come and gone, they again met in Richmond to celebrate their centenary. They had a rousing time, no doubt, and a big attendance. We notice that the Religious Herald is growing in the right direction with age—it is now in its ninety-sixth year. In referring to the Baptist brotherhood of that State, the Herald says: "Long past is the day, if indeed it ever was, when Virginia Baptists were willing to cherish any unworthy resentment on account of the privations and sufferings to which their forefathers were subjected. They treasure up no ancient wrongs. They love all who love their Lord, and bid them godspeed wherever they are casting out devile in Jesus' name." That is a fine spirit, and we extend the hand of fraternal good will to these beloved people.

Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., was in attendance upon the late session of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference at Bethlehem, Alamance County, N. C. He is looking remarkably well, and though almost half through the eighties, he looks quite as well as he did ten or fifteen years ago. He announced to the Conference that on the occasion of the division of the Conference several years ago, he was automatically placed with the Western Conference without his authority, and that he wished now to re-enter his old Conference, and the motion was quickly made to receive him, and the vote was unanimous, and the brethren received him gladly.

At the late session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, Bro. Herman C. Taylor, of the People's (Christian) Church, Dover, Del., was ordained to the office of elder in the Christian Church. Bro. Taylor is a man approaching middle life, but apparently in robust health, strong and vigorous, a good singer and a good preacher. We wish some of our Churches could persuade him to enter into pastoral relations. Dr. Helfinstein, his pastor, regards him most highly and feels perfectly free to call him to his assistance when he is needed. He is well prepared for the work. Churches in need of a pastor may do well to keep their eyes on him, and if possible induce him to become their pastor.

That is a fine message from Dr. J. O. Atkinson, telling our people of the work of the Christian Temple at Norfolk, Va. Notwithstanding what he says, there will be persons who will even now seek to throw cold water on it, but it is vain to do such a thing—that people have committed themselves to the great task of building the finest temple of worship to be found in the bounds of the Christian denomination. It is an achievement of which all really progressive people in our Church will be glad. Of course, there will be some outsiders who will disparage the enterprise, but never mind, we will not be driven from the great undertaking by such criticism. The house will be built and in due time paid for—the best-equipped house of worship among us.

Rev. H. Russell Clem, now of Greensboro, and who recently resigned the pastoral care of the First Christian Church in that city, has received and accepted a call to the pastoral charge of the First Christian Church of Fall River, Mass., and will enter upon his duties about January 1, 1924. Bro. Clem was pastor of the First Church at Springfield, Ohio, for a number of years (sixteen, we believe). His work at Springfield was signally blessed, both in the building up of a strong membership and in the erection of a splendid new house of worship. Two years ago, or more, he came to Greensboro and has since served that Church as pastor. Now he goes to Fall River, Mass., where he will have a big field of usefulness, supported by a fine salary and a good parsonage in which to live. In leaving North Carolina, Bro. Clem takes away what he did not bring with him—his beloved wife, who was Miss Bessie Holt before her marriage, two years ago last September. She was formerly field secretary for the work of our young people. Hundreds, and possibly thousands, of her friends in the South will be sorry to have her leave us, but they will wish her high usefulness in New England and the making of as many friends there as she has in the South. Our best wishes go with Bro. Clem and his devoted wife and his four fine boys to their New England home.

AS A LAMP THAT BURNETH.

"For Zion's sake, I will not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth."—Isa. 62:1.

To get the true thought of this text, let us go back to verse seven of the previous chapter, and then approach the text from that standpoint. Israel had been humiliated. Her sins had led her into captivity and to shame and confusion. God never gives up His chosen people. It is in the midst of her humiliation God is giving her a great hope for her future. Israel is to be taken out of her captivity and her former glory is to be doubled. What a picture to hold up to a people who have been in captivity so long! And this promise to Israel seems to be prophetic of the coming glory of the Church of Christ. Hence the message has a double significance—to the Jews the promise is for the near future, but for the Church it is for the day when Christ shall come and establish His kingdom in the earth.

The Lord is appealing to the Jews immediately. He wishes them to turn to His ways, that He may do these great things for them. If they will hear and obey, He will make an everlasting covenant with them. And what was that covenant?

1. He will make their seed known among the nations of the Gentiles.
2. And all that see them shall acknowledge them.
3. That they are the people whom the Lord has blessed.

That acknowledgment has been made by the peoples of the earth a thousand times. We all know that God has signally blessed His people, and this blessing has made the Jews the wonder of the earth. Just here there creeps out of Israel an expression of their faith. They were in ecstacy over the promise of God. They said: "We will greatly rejoice in the Lord, in the promises which He had made to them. Then they tell why. He hath clothed them with the garments of salvation and covered them with the robe of righteousness till they should look like a bridegroom and his bride, decked for the wedding.

Then He saw the earth bringing forth her buds like a garden. Here we have a symbol of the future glory of the Church of Christ when He has done His work in establishing His kingdom on earth. The prophet seeing in a prophetic vision this moment in the history of God's people tells of their breaking forth in praise and joy in that hour.

Now we come to our text. When the prophet sees all of this, he breaks forth in the glad words of our text:

"For Zion's sake, will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness (or as the dawn), and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth."—Isa. 62:1.

In this wonderful symbolism we not only see the people of God in their return from captivity electrified with joy, but we see the Church since Pentecost, and even in these early days of the twentieth century. She is rejoicing in the glory which God gives to her. The same spirit that came upon them must come upon us, if we are to catch a clear vision of the true Church and have the presence of God with us.

But have we anything to do in bringing this state of God's people to pass? Most assuredly we have. The text tells us that we must give God no rest till His righteousness go forth among His people and so make them true to the type given in prophecy.

If we are to give God no rest till this work is done, surely the day of activity is here. This expression is most impressive. It is like the children of a family, having seen something they very much wish, they give their parents no rest till what they wish is given. What a strong figure! The Church is just such a family, and like the children, we are to get so in earnest that we shall give God no rest till His Church shall be to the world in darkness a lamp that burneth, giving light to the multitudes who know not God.

This is the work of the Church. We must give God no rest till the Church at home shall shine as the dawning of a new morning in the glory of the rising sun, even the Son of Righteousness, and then thus equipped she shall go forth to the lands of darkness as a lamp that burneth. What a wonderful type this is of the glowing light of a true spiritual life. This idea is especially emphasized in Isa. 62:6-7. Hear the word hot with the breath of God upon it:

"I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night; ye that make mention of the Lord, keep not silence, and give Him no rest till He establish and till He make Jerusalem a praise in the earth."

O Church of the Christ, do you catch a full view of that picture? Do you see that the establishment of the Church in the earth is waiting on the zeal of the people of God? Do you ask: But must we weaklings stir up God to induce Him to do His part in the salvation of the world? Nay, nay, we cannot do this in the ordinary sense, but this is the Lord's way to stir us up to doing our best for the salvation of the world through Christ. Our effort to stir up God by our prayers is the means of stirring up ourselves. The prayer that will give God no rest is the surest means of stirring up the Church to invest its best in the proclamation of the Gospel to a dying world. We thus become workers together with God in His greatest enterprise among men.

Let us study the facts involved:

1. Since Jesus died to give life to all men, every man and woman in the whole world has the right to have the Gospel preached to them.

If you and I hinder this preaching through our carelessness, will we not deserve a greater condemnation than they who have not heard it at all?

2. God has made it the duty of His people to send the Gospel to all the world?

He not only imposes the duty, but He gives us the power to do it. Listen as Jesus declares this fact: "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. And lo, I am with you always." He gives us the duty, the opportunity and the power to do this work. If we do not do it, who is to blame?

3. If we have the power to give the Gospel to one who does not know of it, and if you fail to exercise that power, and that soul is lost through our neglect, will not the blood of that soul be required at our hands? If you think not, then give yourself a good reason why it should not be so required.

Then there are at least four reasons why all Christians should be missionaries with their chief work the giving of the Gospel to all men in all lands of the earth.

1. The believer's spiritual prosperity depends on having the abiding presence of Christ with us.
2. His abiding presence with us depends on our obedience to His word.
3. It is Christ's will and He has so expressed the thought in His Word, that His Church should give the Gospel to the world.
4. Because indifference on the part of the Church means the blighting of our own spiritual life and the defeat of the work of saving the world, for without the missionary spirit the Church itself is dead.

As Christians, let us give God no rest till this great work is accomplished. That is just what we are told to do. Turn again and give Isa. 62:1, 6, 7 a careful and a prayerful reading.

And what do you think of this? The Christian Advocate (Nashville) tells a rather remarkable story as follows: "It is reported that Billy Sunday left Louisville, Ky., where he was holding a series of meetings, before he expected to go 'on account of an unsympathetic attitude on the part of the city.' It seems that there was objection to his preaching hell fire, preaching against the modern dance and evolution. The board of education would not let him address the pupils of the public schools. This brought very severe condemnation of the board of education by the evangelist. So far in his remarkable career this is the first time that opposition to the methods and preaching of Billy Sunday has ever taken form in such a way as to cause him to acknowledge defeat or even to prevent him from drawing great crowds and receiving large contributions." Now, think of that! A so-called Christian community was so aroused, if correctly reported, so much as to make it necessary for a preacher to discontinue his ministry in their midst, and all because he had preached in their midst the doctrine of hell fire. They even refused to allow him to preach to the children. Alas! for such doctrinal views. If there be no hell, then there be no heaven; at least, "not as we know of," since the same Bible authorizes hell as well as heaven. If there be no hell, then where is your authority for heaven?

The Page News and Courier of Virginia brings us the news of a change in pastorates. Rev. Bro. Hook, of Rockingham County, Va., is going to Albany, N. Y., we presume, as pastor, although the paper does not say. Rev. R. P. Crumpler, who is pastor at Leaksville, Va., has been called to succeed Bro. Hook. He has resigned his Leaksville charge and other Churches and goes to the Rockingham field, left vacant by the removal of Bro. Hook. Bro. Crumpler's post-office address will be Edom, Va. In referring to the work of Bro. Crumpler, the Page News and Courier says: "Rev. R. P. Crumpler, pastor of Leaksville and other Christian Churches in this county for the last three years, resigned Sunday to accept a call from the Rockingham pastorate, consisting of four Churches in Rockingham County and one in Green County. His future residence will be at Edom, Va., five miles northwest of Harrisonburg. Mr. Crumpler is a consecrated worker and has done a great deal of good in this county, and added many new members to his Churches. His resignation will be effective in the near future. Mr. Crumpler came here from near Raleigh, N. C. In Rockingham he succeeds Rev. Mr. Hook, who goes to Albany, N. Y."

The Mortons are here, and fine people they are, too. We are expecting great things of them and some fine work. They are young and just ready to learn. They are interested in Porto Rico, and we are hoping for them a long and successful term of service here.—Rev. D. P. Barrett, Ponce, Porto Rico.

"IS IT SCRIPTURAL TO PRAY FOR A WORLD-WIDE REVIVAL?"

We find in a recent issue of the Sunday School Times the following question. The answer to it is so illuminating that we are publishing both for the benefit of our readers. The answer will bear close and careful study. We believe the Times has the right view of the question, and we sincerely hope it may be widely read among our people.

The question is as follows: "I would like to ask (just for information) why, in your paper, you ask us to pray for a world-wide revival when we understand by God's Word that in the end of this age there will be a 'world-wide apostasy?'—An Ohio Reader."

To this question, the editor of the Sunday School Times makes the following timely answer:

Many are asking the same question. Let us be sure at the outset that there is a common understanding of the terms "revival" and "apostasy." The former word, as indicated by its etymological construction, can have reference only to that in which there has been life. That in which there has never been life cannot be revived. For the word "revive" means to "restore" or "bring again to life," to "bring into action after a suspension," to "recover from a state of neglect or disuse." Hence, the unregenerate man, dead in trespasses and sins, is not a subject for revival. Spiritual life from above must first be imparted before it can be, as it were, blown into a flame. Therefore, revival can have to do only with those who have been "born again," but who are living spiritually below God's standard for his regenerate children. In other words, it can have to do only with the true members of the body of Christ, none of whom can ever "fall away" unto eternal death. (See John 10:27-29; Rom. 8:38, 39; 2 Tim. 1:12; 1 Peter 1:5, and other like Scriptures.)

On the other hand, the word apostasy" means a "falling away," and is so translated in 2 Thes. 2:3, where the reference (as indicated in the original) is not a "falling away," but to "the falling away," to "the apostasy" which is to be the culmination of all apostasy of the present age. Says the commentator Blackstone: "Apostasy consists in the total renunciation of Christianity, by embracing either a false religion or no religion at all. The offense can only take place in such as have once professed the true religion." But since no true member of the body of Christ can ever "fall away" in this sense, apostates can only be those who have made profession, but have been without possession of vital Christianity. That is to say, revival has to do with the truly possessing members of the body of Christ, while apostasy has to do with the merely professing members of his body, particularly with those who have "fallen away" from even their profession of a vital relationship of Christ. That relationship can result only from a divinely inwrought heart acceptance of Christ as Saviour through the atoning merits of the shed blood of Calvary. To profess such a relationship is not necessarily to possess it. Those who possess it will never deny it in the apostate sense. Those who profess it, particularly such as have been Spirit-illumined (Heb. 6:4), and who then deny it, never possessed it, and these are apostates.

From the foregoing, it is evident that revival and apostasy in the professing Church of God can go on side by side, and in fact have thus gone on throughout the entire history of the Church, and will so continue. The former will culminate in the rapture of the saints, and the latter in the apostasy of the merely professing portion of the Church.

A few questions remain.

Are believers generally living up to their blood-bought, high and holy privileges as members of the body of Christ? If not, then do they not need revival?

Are they merely bearing fruit, or are they glorifying Christ by bearing "much fruit?" If the former, do they not need revival?

Have they executed the command of their Lord to "preach the Gospel to every creature?" Two-thirds of the human race is still unevangelized. How can an unrevived Church effectually gospelize an unevangelized world?

Is Christ pleased with His unrevived, impotent body? Would you be pleased if your body were so paralyzed that it would refuse to do your bidding?

The Church's supreme need is revival; the world's supreme need is evangelization; and God's supreme need is a multitude of intercessors who believe God rather than man.

God works when men pray. His predictions of apostasy were meant, not to prevent prayer, but to provoke men to prevailing prayer. Therefore, "men ought always to pray, and not to faint." They ought to pray against world-wide apostasy in the professing Church, and for world-wide revival in the true Church, for thus they are praying according to the will of God as revealed throughout the entire New Testament in its almost unnumbered warnings and exhortations. And this is the confidence which God would have His intercessors have in Him, that, if they ask anything according to His will, He heareth them. (Would any one say that revival of the members of the body of Christ is not according to His will?) And if they know that He hear them whatsoever they ask, they know that they have the petitions which they have desired of him (1 John 5:14, 15).

The darkness of the night should encourage rather than discourage united, prevailing intercession on the part of God's people. The recently widely circulated paragraphs, written by the Rev. D. M. Panton, of Great Britain, bear directly upon this point:

"It was in the midnight of the dark ages that the huge revival which we call the Reformation, breaking out in an Augustinian monastery, convulsed Europe, and changed the history of the world.

"The conditions before the revival of Wesley and Whitefield have been thus described: 'Death in the Churches, rottenness in public morals, infidelity coming in like a flood.'

"Blackstone, the commentator on the laws of England under George III, says he went to every Church of note in London, and found it impossible to discover whether the clergyman was a follower of Confucius, Mohammed, or Christ. Do any worse conditions than these prevail today?

"So, before the last great general revival, that of 1860, the lands the revival visited were those lying under a pall of reckless waste, an unparalleled fever for riches, deepening doubt, and alarming ungodliness.

"Historically, conditions of appalling darkness have not been against revival, but for it; for revival is God, by a mighty uprush, saving the world from its downgrade to hell."

"God's resources," says the Great Commission Prayer League," are not exhausted. That worldliness has all but engulfed the professing Church; that an evolutionary philosophy has swept like a devastating flood through our colleges and universities; that twenty millions or more children are said to be growing up in America with practically no religious instruction; that a large part of the true Church of Christ has turned its back to the enemy in cowardly, despairing defeat—these things do not constitute a situation too hard for God! Rather, they constitute the mightiest call to simultaneous prayer ever sent forth to the members of the body of Christ. They are God's challenge to intercession!

"Let Gideon's hosts return home, but let God's handful remain, and the victory is won—not by human might nor power, not by human means nor by calls to prayer; but solely 'by My Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts; that God, and God alone, may receive all the glory. (See Isa. 42:8.) Pray for revival!"

We believe the Times is right, and if so, the question is well worth a careful and even a prayerful study. As Mr. Trumbull says, it was in the midnight hour of the dark ages that the greatest revival of modern times broke out, and that was certainly in the Church. It was the revival which is more generally known as the Reformation, out of which came Protestant Christianity. You could never have gotten that revival out of the world. The revival of the Protestant Reformation was certainly a revival of the Church.

Some of our readers are very jealous for the thought that the world is all the while growing better. They judge by what they now see as the truth. They think if the world is growing better at this time, that is proof that it is getting better. But that is a mistake. If you wish to judge the matter of the progress of the world toward righteousness, then they must take the successive ages of the world, say since Christ came, and so get the average condition of the world through these two centuries and then you may tell whether the world has grown better or not through these two thousand years.

As Mr. Trumbull says in the days just preceding the Wesley and Whitfield revivals, conditions were dreadful. "Death in the Churches, rottenness in public morals, infidelity coming in like a flood." We are wondering if some of our readers would not say that in that period the world was improving! If death in the Churches, rottenness in public morals and infidelity coming in like a flood was a proof of the world getting better, then who can tell us what would be its condition when it was getting worse? For that time the world was getting worse, but following that time there were evidences of decided improvement, and so has the world been moving through the Christian era. The world, as well as men and women, has its seasons of rising and falling in the moral and spiritual scale. There can be no question that there are times of moral and spiritual retrogression, and then there are other seasons when the truth seems to be in the lead and a new day is dawning. If we had judged the world in the dark ages, we should have pronounced it as in decline, but looking at it in the days of the Protestant Reformation, and it was getting better, marvelously better. Again, looking at the world in the days of Wesley and Whitfield's boyhood, and it would have been hard to see anything other than a decline, but looking at it a few years later, when their mission was in full sway, and it would have seemed to be getting better rapidly. Moral and spiritual conditions rise and fall as the days come and go. The world is the place of sin. The Church is the place of revival. Mr. Trumbul puts the matter in its true light, as we believe.

WITH THE NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

On Tuesday, November 13, the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference met in its annual session at Bethlehem Church, Alamance County, N. C. It was called to order by Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., of Burlington, N. C., president of the last session, and President W. A. Harper was secretary. Little was done in the first session beyond organization and the delivery of the Conference sermon by Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, pastor of the Christian Church at Durham, N. C. It was a great sermon and attracted much favorable comment. It was a sermon—no doubt about that—such as we rarely hear in these days of mixture of human opinion and scriptural teaching. It was easily one of the best opening sermons we have heard in many years. While it was strong, very strong, the thing which attracted so much attention was his unyielding loyalty to old-fashioned Gospel truth. His subject was "The Goal of the Christian Church." His text was "Jesus Christ came to seek and to save that which was lost." He made it plain that this is the goal of the Christian Church, and that, with this left out, there is no goal, as this is vital to any aim and purpose of the Christian Church. It was indeed an old-time sermon. It is true, the sermon was by a young man, by a graduate of Elon College and Union Theological Seminary at Richmond, Va., but it was an old-time sermon in its plainness and its insistance on plain biblical facts. Bro. Harrell was indeed loyal to the Bible, regardless of what evolution says, or what its friends may think. He was giving the plain Gospel facts, regardless of what the scholars may say, though he himself is quite a scholar for a man of his age. We have rarely heard a sermon in which every sentence in it from beginning to end emphasized so deeply and truly loyalty to the Word of God. He had no "ifs" and no "ands" in it—he plumbed the track to Gospel truth, and he had no excuses to make. We only wish the Durham Church could constitute their pastor a missionary to take that sermon to every Church in our Conference, for we believe it would revolutionize the thinking of many who are now not fully awake to the present situation. We do need to think and to think in harmony with the teachings of the Scriptures, that we may have the blessings of God upon us in the giving of the Gospel to the people straight.

If any sermon is needed everywhere, we think this one is, and we verily wish it could be heard by the membership of all of our Churches. Bro. Harrell is a growing man, not only intellectually, but spiritually as well—if we are capable of judging at all in the matter. The Durham Church is most fortunate in having such a pastor, and if our Churches knew his real ability, intellectually and spiritually, we think the Durham Church would be very fortunate if it could hold him as a preacher. There are many Churches which, if they knew his power as a preacher, would jump at the opportunity to secure his services, but he is doing so well at Durham the cause at large cannot afford to have him go away from there. God bless any man who is so true to the Word of God, and especially a man so young as is Bro. Harrell. We are no prophet, but if Stanley C. Harrell stands true to his present convictions, he will, under the blessings of God, become a leader in our work; indeed, he is already one.

When Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., the president of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, delivered the president's address before that body on Wednesday, November 14th, he said something, and the people heard him. He came out in the plainest terms and showed the difference between the fundamentalist and the liberalist. His theme was "Asking for the Old Paths," based on the words of Jeremiah (6: 16). His sermon was asked for to be published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. We hope he may give it to us, and that very soon, for it is needed in many homes. If one could hear him on this theme and then be willing to side with the liberalist, as against the fundamentalist, we do not see how he could do it. The message had two points of real worth. It was very strong, and it was very clear. Dr. Fleming need never be ashamed to speak for truth and righteousness as long as his words ring true to the Word of God. We urge our readers to keep a watch on these columns, and when it appears, give the sermon a careful and a prayerful reading, and if you can see the truth, then fear not, but take a stand for the truth as the expression of God's thought and tell it as plainly as you can wherever you have opportunity. We are certainly living in the days of testing of our confidence in the truth. Let us see to it that we do not falter in our loyalty. Be sure to read Dr. Fleming's sermon when it appears.

Bro. Hermon Eldredge, the managing editor of our Sunday School literature, was present and gave an address on "Christian Education," which called forth many words of approval. When he was through with his address, a thing happened which most likely never happened before in our work. Bro. Eldredge was followed by his own daughter, who also made a stirring address on the work of our young people. Together and separately, they made a fine impression for the work of Christian education.

The report on moral reform was offered and discussed and passed. It was offered by Rev. J. S. Carden, who discussed the same in a short talk.

The report on publications was offered by Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, who introduced the discussion by a very sensible talk, and was followed by some others. The editor delivered an address on "The Church Paper in the Christian Home." Prof. Kernodle was present, and also made a few remarks on the value of the Church paper. He also took subscriptions. It came out that only six of our ministers do not subscribe to our Church paper—THE CHRISTIAN SUN. A brother from the North, who was present, was so surprised that only six of our ministers do not take the Church paper that he was moved to tell a tale out of school. He said that in the Defiance District (the section of our territory from which Defiance College draws its support) there are 300 Christian ministers who do not take the Herald of Gospel Liberty. This brother who gave this report said he was ashamed to tell it, but felt impelled to do so as a sort of a contrast to the way the ministers in the South take THE SUN. That reminded us of an incident in Edinburgh, Scotland, during the world mission conference. One of the commissions reported that the biggest hindrance to the cause of missions is the lack of interest on the part of ministers of the Gospel. The Rev. Ross Stevenson, now president of Princeton Seminary, in New Jersey, was called upon to make this fact known to a meeting of the ministers. When he faced 500 ministers to give them this sad comment, he seemed very much embarrassed and hesitated to come out with the story, but at length he told them what the commission had found, as it related to the ministry and missions. He said, if we mistake not, he was ashamed to tell them the news of the unfaithfulness of the ministry as to this great work. Bro. Eldredge will do well to call the ministers in the Defiance territory of the Christian Church together and tell them what has been found out as to the way they support the Herald of Gospel Liberty. Surely, it is a hard blow at the ministry of the Christian Church that so many of them in a given territory do not read their own Church paper. We are grateful that our Southern ministers do so much better, but it is a fact our lay people are almost running a race with the ministers up North to see whether in proportion they can beat them in not reading the Church paper. Our publisher, who was present, said that the Christian Church in the Southern Christian Convention has ten thousand families, or thirty thousand members, and that now we have about one member in ten taking THE CHRISTIAN SUN. It is true that is pretty good, and yet not nearly so large a percentage as it should be. Our people must learn to take more interest in the Church paper, North and South, if they would help themselves and the cause, too.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson gave one of his characteristic addresses on "Stewardship and the Great Commission." It was a masterly address, and greatly interested the audience. We would that he could give the address in all of our Churches.

Rev. J. A. Ledbetter, of Reidsville, gave an address on "Avenues of Evangelism," and Rev. S. L. Beougher, of Graham, N. C., was announced to preach the closing sermon on Thursday at noon. As we could not be present on Thursday, we cannot report these efforts, but we do not doubt but that their work was helpful to the cause.

On Wednesday night, Prof. Hook showed a large number of educational pictures and greatly interested the people.

Many other items were worthy of note, but we cannot spare the space for these in this issue. It was generally agreed that the Conference was one of the best we have had in years, and all seemed to work through in harmony and good will—we trust a harbinger of a new day in Christian effort.

A PLAIN AND POINTED QUESTION.

Our brethren of the Presbyterian Standard are usually very clear and very forceful in the presentation of their views; but, for once, we feel that they have been caught napping. If we understand the utterance to which we refer, it means that a wrong done by one of the editors of the most excellent paper is to be excused in others because the editor himself had been guilty of the same wrong. That our readers may judge for themselves as to the correctness of this view, we quote the paragraph as follows:

"There was a time when failure to heed these assembly deliverances was a cause for discipline. That, however, has become a portion of the past, and pastors in despair quiet their conscience by pleading the uselessness of the attempt. We are not blaming them, because, as pastor, we were guilty of the same failure."

That may be all very nice, but we are surprised to see that our brother excuses others from blame on the ground that he had done the same thing himself. It seems to us that the Mayor of a certain municipality did the right thing when he found that he himself had violated the law, fined himself as Mayor for the offense he had committed. Now, we think the standards of a gifted and dignified editor of a great Presbyterian paper ought to be at least as high as those in a Mayor's office. If not, why not? Will our brother rise and explain?

Old Bethlehem Christian Church, in Alamance, took care of the late session of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference well, and the people who were entertained were well pleased, as they ought to have been. Bethlehem is not only one of our old, but it is one of our strong Churches. Long may it live and flourish.

ELON LETTER.

The noise of the builders is still abroad on the campus, and promises to be heard for many a moon yet. It is an agreeable and welcome noise, however—a noise that prophesies a larger Elon, and, we devoutly hope, a better.

In the last few weeks some excellent gifts have been made to the building fund. It will be recalled that soon after our fire, two great laymen of the Methodist Church telegraphed us each $5,000 for rebuilding. That was before the board of trustees had met and outlined its statesmanlike rebuilding plan. These friends now, Messrs. B. N. and J. B. Duke, have added $40,000 to their original ten, and will erect the science building on our campus in commemoration of their mother, who was born in Alamance County and who lies buried at Haw River. Mrs. Duke was, before her marriage, Miss Artelia Roney. The Roney family is a distinguished Alamance family, and many of them are members of the Christian Church. These two noble sons are now erecting a beautiful stone fence around the cemetery where their sainted mother's remains lie. So that in death, as in life, her presence is a blessing to others. Great wealth is beautiful when joined with great hearts—hearts that delight to help those in need and unable to help themselves.

Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Caveness, of Greensboro, have given the college a concert Grant piano. Whenever these friends make a gift, the best is none too good. So they have given a Mason & Hamlin, which is the highest-priced piano on the market, the list price being $3,200. "Even this is not good enough for our college," said Bro. Caveness in making the gift.

And Mr. P. J. Carlton has decided to provide the steel stacks for the library building. These stacks are very expensive, but they will last forever. The cost will range from twenty to thirty thousand dollars.

But the end is not yet. We need a pipe organ to replace the burned instrument, a fence around the campus, walks, driveways and grassy lawns for the campus, and many thousand dollars worth of furniture, to say nothing of the fire-fighting apparatus and the chimes to make melody as the students change classes and the work of our college goes steadily on in its appointed way. And then the books for the library. Beloved, our generous friends have done nobly, but there is an abundance of work yet to be done and a lot of money to be given. Am I mistaken in the confidence I have in our friends that they will make these generous and necessary gifts?

W. A. HARPER.

REPORT OF BUDGET COMMITTEE.

We recommend that this committee be known in the future as the "Budget Committee." Our thought is that the apportionments are in no sense an assessment, but suggestions to the Churches as to what is needed as a minimum to carry on the work of the Conference and its enterprises.

We recommend that each Church be asked at once to adopt this suggested amount as part of its local budget and that the secretary of the Conference so notify the secretary of each Church in writing.

We recommend that each Church take steps at once to raise its local budget, in cluding the Conference budget, by an every-member canvass, using the envelope system of payment, weekly or monthly or semi-monthly as the Church has preaching services, and that the Conference budget be remitted to the treasurer of Conference quarterly, on February 1, May 1, August 1, and November 1, he to give the Conference a report of what has thus been paid in at the annual meeting. We recommend that the mission secretary of the Southern Christian Convention be asked to aid our Churches in making this plan effective.

We regret to report that some two or three Churches have asked for a reduction in their part of the Conference budget, alleging in every case that it is too much. Those Churches are honestly mistaken. The trouble is not that the Churches are asked to raise too much money, but with our lack of system and of biblical methods in raising it. We say it deliberately—our Churches can pay to the Conference budget ten times what we are now paying if we will use the every-member canvass and tithe our incomes.

We, therefore, recommend that the budget for the ensuing year be exactly the same as last year, with the hope that some Churches will voluntarily increase their gifts. We promise every such Church the opening of the windows heaven for it, and an outpouring of divine blessings such as it has not conceived to be possible.

We recommend that $200 each for superannuation and the Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention be deducted from the total receipts before the percentages are made.

We recommend that the secretary of the Conference endeavor to get any Church not remitting at the Conference session to send him its remittance and that he include the same in the collector's report.

We further recommend that then the secretary percentage the funds in hand and draw drafts to the proper persons and officials.

TWENTY-FOUR COUNTIES HAVE DEATH-RATE FROM "T. B." ABOVE 100.

Twenty-four counties of the State claimed the special attention of the North Carolina Tuberculosis Conference, which recently assembled in Durham. These are the counties which have the highest death-rate from tuberculosis and which have not yet provided adequate facilities for treating their people having the disease. These counties, printed in red on the conference program, have a tuberculosis death-rate higher than 100, while the average for the State is 97.5 per 100,000. The death-rate for white people alone is 66.7, and for colored people alone 169.6, or more than twice as much as that of white people. These counties and their death-rates from tuberculosis are: Pasquotank, 156.2; Durham, 152.2; Hertford, 151.3; Camden, 148.6; Wayne, 135.7; Pamlico, 132.4; Chowan, 131.4; Person, 123.7; Alexander, 113.1; Orange, 112.7; Forsyth, 111.7; Union, 111.6; Edgecombe, 111.2; Perquimans, 107.5; Alamance, 106.6; Caswell, 106.3; Greene, 105.7; Craven, 103.5; Northampton, 102.5; Scotland, 102.1; Martin, 101.8; Henderson, 101.2; Wake, 100.9, and Warren, 100.3.

Durham County, which has the highest rate, save Pasquotank, has issued a call for an election to be held in Durham County in November, to authorize the county commissioners to issue bonds for the erection of a tuberculosis sanatorium. The bond issue is not to exceed $100,000, which is the limit fixed by law, and probably not that much. It is proposed to levy a tax of not over five cents on the hundred dollars worth of property for maintaining the sanatorium. Guilford County has recently opened a $130,000 sanatorium for the treatment of tuberculosis, while Forsyth has had one for a number of years.

County sanatoria for the treatment of tuberculosis are now regarded as an essential part of every State program which proposes to fight tuberculosis to the finish. The State sanatorium, regardless how efficient it may be, is not sufficient to serve all the people as they should be served if tuberculosis is to be stamped out. The county problem is a big one, but one capable of being handled with success. SUPERINTENDENT.

Rev. John G. Truitt is enjoying his work at Norfolk (Berkley) and we risk nothing, we think, in saying that the First Church people are also enjoying his work. He has a fine field in which to labor, and we believe he will, under the blessings of God, bring things to pass in that field. We are not a prophet, but we believe a new Church building will be the outcome of his labore there.

THE DELIGHTS OF LITERATURE.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

The search for pleasure is as old as the human race. In every age and clime, man has schemed and planned to wrest from the passing moments an hour of joy and happiness. Each man has sought happiness from his own viewpoint, and fondly dreamed that he might succeed in obtaining more of this treasure than some less fortunate fellow-man. Taking no warning from the failures on every side, he vainly dreams of long-enduring days, and hours of joyous ease. Samuel Johnson makes Rasselas cry out in his poetic apostrophe to the Nile: "Answer, thou great Father of waters! thou that rollest thy floods through eighty nations to the invocations of the daughter of thy native king. Tell me if thou waterest through all thy course a single habitation from which thou dost not hear the murmurs of complaint."

It is agreed by many that man's chief pleasures are to be sought from three sources, viz: companionship and association with fellow-men; the unbounded resources of nature; and the thought of the world as stored up in the literary treasures of mankind. This classification is, perhaps, as good and as true as any that has yet been made. Granted, then, that this is true, we see readily how necessary it is for us all that we avail ourselves of the pleasures to be found in the world of literature, if we are to obtain such measures of pleasure as are possible in this present existence. If we neglect this source we have restricted ourselves to a limited field in which the chief pleasures will be found only through the perishing things of the transient moments.

The unbounded fields of literature afford one of the surest and finest means of human happiness. It is here that we can touch the thought, not alone of the present hour, but the thought of all times and of all races. It is here that we may enter into full communion with the passions, and delights, and aspirations of the entire history of the world. It is here, and here alone, that our range becomes infinite and limitless. It is here alone that man's God-like power to feel, and think, and draw deductions and conclusions, reaches its highest range of possibility. Denied this field, man becomes indeed limited and puny in all his relationships.

Go into the most elegantly furnished home that you can find. On every side see evidences of the conveniences and the luxury made possible by wealth; delight in all the bodliy comforts afforded by the surroundings of opulence. In case you find no books, and no literature, but only the material evidences of the possession of wealth, you will soon find that the chief thing is lacking, and that the range of thought and life must be confined to very limited and insignificant circles. A case comes into mind where one who dwelt amid such surroundings made the remark, "I read nothing," and this remark was soon followed by another that came as a natural sequence of the first remark, "Life, after all, is a very petty and mean affair, and the happiness it affords is but a trifling thing." The abounding and continual riches of thought had been left out of the situation, and it was thereby robbed of its true delight and glory.

All good things come by growth. Beginning in early childhood and passing on through youth and into maturity, there should be made a continual effort to form good habits of reading; proper habits of thought; correct ideals of expression; knowing that all these will add immeasurably to the power of the individual, and so enlarge his range of living that wonderful realms of possible joys and happiness will be opened up to him. Every step leads him to higher ranges where the limitations of the mere physical and animal existence are left behind, and newer, fairer worlds opened before his vision. Would you then find life's greatest happiness? One of the things you must do is to enter into the abundant possessions of the race as contained in the world's greatest literary treasures.

A REAL HELP TO TEACHERS.

"Tarbell's Teachers' Guide to the International Sunday School Lessons" is a real help to teachers. The volume for 1924 is the nineteenth in annual succession, and lives up to the good reputation of its eighteen predecessors.

This is a book for the teaching as opposed to the lecturing teacher. It is impossible to lay this book down before you as you would a quarterly and read off the comments verse by verse. For that reason, teachers who pursue the lecture method do not prefer Tarbell's. It would be well, however, for these teachers to purchase this hypothecary shop of religious information, so to speak, and out of it compound their own lesson presentation. The resulting achievement, or lack of it, would no doubt be a revelation to them as well as to their classes. It might revolutionize their methods for the future.

It seems to the reviewer that a teacher fully bent on doing his best will need Peloubet's and Tarbell's both. They are different in their manner of lesson treatment, but each thoroughly stimulating. The writer's conviction is deep and abiding, however, that better teaching will result when teachers do their own compounding of the spiritual and informational ingredients that properly enter into the presentation of a well-taught Scripture passage.

The "Tarbell's Teachers' Guide" has twenty-two pages of instruction eminently worth while. The twenty pages of "suggestions to teachers" is especially gripping. The two pages which follow and elucidate the gospels in their relation one to another will help clarify the teaching process.

I have for nineteen years known and appreciated this really excellent lesson help. I cannot do without it, but I want it supplemented by Peloubet's.

The price is $2.00 net. It is published by the Fleming H. Revell Company, but may be ordered of The Christian Sun, Richmond, Va.

PRESIDENT'S THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

The American people, from their earliest days, have observed the wise custom of acknowledging each year the bounty with which divine providence has favored them. In the beginning, this acknowledgment was a voluntary return of thanks by the community for the fruitfulness of the harvest. Though our mode of life has greatly changed, this custom has always survived. It has made Thanksgiving Day not only one of the oldest, but one of the most characteristic observances of our country. On that day, in home and Church, in family and in public gatherings, the whole nation has for generations paid the tribute due from grateful hearts for blessings bestowed.

To center our thought in this way upon the favor which we have been shown has been altogether wise and desirable. It has given opportunity justly to balance the good and the evil which we have experienced, in that we have never failed to find reasons for being grateful to God for a generous preponderance of the good. Even in the least propitious times, a broad contemplation of our whole position has never failed to disclose overwhelming reasons for thankfulness. Thus viewing our situation, we have found warrant for a more hopeful and confident attitude toward the future. In this current year, we now approach the time which has been accepted by custom as most fitting for the calm survey of our estate and the return of thanks. We shall the more keenly realize our good fortune if we will, in deep sincerity, give to it due thought, and more especially if we will compare it with that of any other community in the world.

The year has brought to our people two tragic experiences, which have deeply affected them. One was the death of our beloved President Harding, which has been mourned wherever there is a realization of the worth of high ideals, noble purpose and unselfish service carried even to the end of supreme sacrifice. His loss recalled the nation to a less captious and mere charitable attitude. It sobered the whole thought of the country. A little later came the unparalleled disaster to the friendly people of Japan. This called forth from the people of the United States a demonstration of deep and humane feeling. It was wrought into the substance of good works. It created new evidences of our international friendship, which is a guarantee of world peace. It replenished the charitable impulse of the country.

By experience such as these, men and nations are tested and refined. We have been blessed with much of material prosperity. We shall be better able to appreciate it if we remember the privations others have suffered and we shall be the more worthy of it if we use it for their relief. We will do well, then, to render thanks for the good that has come to us, and show by our actions that we have become stronger, wiser and truer by the chastenings which have been imposed upon us. We will thus prepare ourselves for the part we must have in a world which forever needs the full measure of service. We have been a most favored people. We ought to be a most generous people. We have been a most blessed people. We ought to be a most thankful people.

Wherefore, I Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States, do hereby fix and designate Thursday, the 29th day of November, as Thanksgiving Day, and recommend its general observance throughout the land. It is urged that the people gather in their homes and their usual places of worship, give expression to their gratitude for the benefits and blessings that a gracious providence has bestowed upon them, and seek the guidance of Almighty God that they may deserve a continuance of His favor.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the great seal of the United States.

Done at the city of Washington, this fifth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-eighth. Calvin Coolidge.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

DOWN NORFOLK WAY.

It was a joy and a privilege to be with Dr. L. E. Smith's congregation at Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., for both regular preaching services Sunday, November 4th. If one wishes to see and worship with a happy congregation, let one find that congregation who is deeply interested in some great work for the Church and the kingdom. And should one wish to see the very happiest congregation, let that one find that congregation who is undertaking greater tasks for the kingdom than the congregation itself feels that it can undertake. In such a condition, a whole congregation turns its eyes and heart to Him who is able to do far more and abundantly beyond all that the hand of man can do. Such a congregation right now is that of Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va. It is burdened to the breaking point with a task greater than its own strength can hope to accomplish. We wish all SUN readers could see what has been done for our cause in Norfolk. Here is a congregation that has never had any sort of suitable quarters in which to worship—merely a planked-up board building, which no one, without knowing in advance, would ever guess was a Church building. Yet from this ungainly building comes an ideal for the most magnificent Church edifice in all our Zion. Dr. Smith and his devoted membership are not only bearing their burdens and fighting their battles, but they are bearing the burdens and fighting the battles of the entire Christian denomination. In the first place, this building will challenge others of the denomination to undertake larger and better things in the years to come. In the second place, this building will stand, when completed, as a monument to the faith, zeal, and sacrifice of a congregation whose ideal for the Church is marvelous indeed to contemplate. There will be in this edifice complete departments for all the organizations of Church and Sunday School, and besides a magnificent auditorium that will seat twelve hundred people, there will be smaller auditoriums for other assemblies than that of the regular Church service. There are to be rooms for social gatherings, pastime, and recreation; for gymnastics, and baths, for cooking and dining-rooms, for parlors, and rest rooms, and for all that goes to make up a model and modern Church building. They began with the thought of $150,000 equipment. They will be fortunate indeed if they get out with $125,000 additional to the original estimate. Already this Church has visions of service and achievement which few of our Churches, already well housed and cared for, have dared indulge. These people, without a comfortable, inviting or adequate house in which to worship, have on their pay roll, in addition to their own budget, four missionaries—two in the home field, two in the foreign field—and are now ready to send out and support the fifth one. If the present ideals are maintained and the great and worthy aspirations of this devoted congregation can be carried out, it will not be long befobre this one Church will be supporting more missionaries and giving more to the spreading of the Gospel and the building of the kingdom than all the Churches of the Southern Christian Convention are now doing. This, we say, is a challenge to the whole Church and will serve to inspire others of us to more noble sacrifice and greater service in the Master's name. The congregation hopes to be domiciled in their new and commodious quarters early in the year 1924. Already the Church contemplates entertaining the Southern Convention next spring and the Eastern Virginia Conference next fall. This demonstrates the truth that hospitality at home breaks out abundantly among those who are seeking to benefit, to bless, and to help those away from home.

A new day for our Church dawns with the building and the opening for service of Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., and we most heartily congratulate and felicitate the splendid and great hearted people who have led and are leading us to such high and holy achievement in the name and for the sake of Him who said, "He that is greatest among you shall be your servant."

NORTH CAROLINA WOMAN'S CONFERENCE.

On the evening of October 11th, the North Carolina Woman's Conference met in the Burlington Christian Church in its tenth annual session. Dr. G. O. Lankford, pastor of the Burlington Church, presided at the opening session. Mrs. D. E. Sellers, president of the Burlington Society, gave a most fitting and cordial welcome on behalf of the local society. Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, of Raleigh, responded in a very happy manner. The musical program of the evening, rendered by the Burlington choir, was quite happy and appropriate. The principal feature of the evening was an address on "Missions" by Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, pastor First Christian Church, Durham, N. C. This address had to do in a large measure with financing the kingdom, and showed how giving is, or should be, made a real asset in spiritual development. It is to be published in full, and should have wide reading.

The Conference assembled at 9:30 A. M. on October 12th, and the delegates from various societies made their reports and gave account of the work done the past year. Quite a number of pastors were present and were all enrolled as deliberative members of the Conference.

Mrs. J. W. Patton, Elon College, N. C., gave an account of letters sent out to the societies and work done as secretary the past year.

Mrs. W. R. Sellars, Burlington, N. C., is the wide-awake and deeply interested treasurer of this body, and gave a report of moneys collected and paid out amounting to over $2,500 the past year. Mrs. Sellars not only receives and pays out money as treasurer, but, as every good treasurer should do, seeks to increase the receipts with commendable zeal and energy.

Mrs. H. R. Clem, of Greensboro, N. C., gave the status of the young people's work and made an interesting report of what had been achieved the past year, with the plea that more active work in behalf of the young people should be undertaken the coming year.

Mrs. J. J. Henderson, Graham, N. C., reported for the literature committee that little had been achieved in her department the past year, because there seemed to be a very small amount of literature put in the hands of the superintendent or demand of the superintendent.

Mrs. N. G. Newman, Elon College, N. C., is deeply interested in the babies of the Conference, and made a very inspiring report of work done for cradle rolls the past year.

Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Burlington, N. C., president, did not make a formal report, but limited herself to making some very timely recommendations which she trusted the societies of the Conference would put into practice the coming year. Among the recommendations of the president was that our mountain work be continued with more zeal, and that buildings be erected at the earliest possible date for the immediate needs of the workers there. Mrs. Carroll, as president, showed that she had the work full in hand and had wrought very faithfully the past year in behalf of the Conference and the work committed to her.

The mission secretary was permitted at this point to give an address on the subject "Enlarging Our Borders."

Luncheon for the day was served in the spacious dining-room of the Burlington Christian Church, and not only satisfied the appetite of all present, but was served so bountifully and graciously that it showed the hospitality of the Burlington Society to be unbounded and most praiseworthy in every particular.

At the afternoon session, Mrs. W. A. Harper, of Elon College, N. C., read a very timely paper on "Stewardship," which SUN readers have had the pleasure of seeing, and which has no doubt had far-reaching effects for good.

Miss Chiyo Ito, a Japanese student at Elon College, from Mrs. Fry's school in Japan, was introduced to the Conference.

Miss Pattie Coghill, field secretary of the Woman's Board, made a very timely address on "The Work of Our Young People." All present enjoyed this address very much.

The following officers were elected for the coming year: President, Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, Raleigh, N. C.; vice-president, Mrs. J. P. Avent, Durham, N. C.; secretary, Mrs. J. J. Henderson, Graham, N. C.; treasurer, Mrs. W. R. Sellars, Burlington, N. C.; superintendent of young people, Miss Pattie Coghill, Elon College, N. C. (we learn that Miss Coghill, since her election, has resigned, and the executive committee of the Conference has elected in her stead Miss Mary D. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.); superintendent of literature, Miss Pattie Coghill, Elon College, N. C.; superintendent cradle roll, Mrs. N. G. Newman, Elon College, N. C.

The apportionment committee recommended that the total apportionment remain the same as last year, and that the societies try to reach the goal this year and increase their offerings by ten per cent, if possible.

An offering was taken for the building fund for our pastors' and teachers' home at Fancy Gap, Va., and the amount received was $29.12.

The Conference voted to meet with the Reidsville, N. C., society in its next annual session, and that the executive committee set the date of the meeting.

The banners were won by the following societies: Burlington Woman's Society, Burlington Young People's Society, Wake Chapel Willing Workers, Elon Cradle Roll.

A letter was read from Mrs. C. H. Rowland, president of the Woman's Conference of Eastern Virginia, challenging the North Carolina Conference to furnish two rooms of the pastor's home at Fancy Gap, Va., and suggesting that the Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference furnish two rooms. The challenge was accepted and the Conference unanimously voted to furnish the two rooms.

It was moved and carried in the Conference that what has been heretofore known as the "Hardcastle Fund," be known hereafter as the "China Fund," and that the same be kept intact and added to against the day when it was hoped and believed that such a fund would be demanded.

The Conference was harmonious and delightful in its proceedings and fellowship, and the delegates from the various societies felt inspired to undertake better and greater things for the kingdom the coming year. The Burlington society entertained all visitors most generously and graciously, and gave the impression that it was a real joy to entertain the body.

This Conference has a wide field of operation and opportunity, and during the coming year proposes if possible to add at least twenty new societies to the number already organized. There are certainly more than twenty Churches in the Conference that should have woman's and young people's societies, and these Churches will not do their duty nor fulfill their obligation to the kingdom until they have operative in them wide-awake missionary societies.

It was a joy to be in the North Carolina Woman's Conference and to experience the fellowship of the good women composing it and partake somewhat their eagerness and desire to see the work of missions go forward.

J. O. ATKINSON.

MEN AND MILLIONS.

Quite a few subscribers to Men and Millions paid their pledges in October to their local captains. These captains have not yet reported, but are still collecting pledges. We sincerely trust that all who can possibly do so will pay something on their pledges during the month of November. While other obligations are being met, we should certainly not forget our obligations to our Church and the Lord's cause. We fail to see how one can discharge an obligation to his fellowman and then satisfy his conscience without also meeting his obligation to his Church and his God.

The following amounts were collected and turned into the hands of Bro. C. D. Johnston, executive secretary, Elon College, N. C., during the month of October:

A DAY WITH THE WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

On Wednesday, November 7th, leaving Elon College in the early morning in company with Dr. and Mrs. W. A. Harper, Miss Phillips and Mrs. Barrett, we went on Dr. Harper's big automobile to Ether, in Montgomery County, N. C., to attend the annual session of the Western North Carolina Christian Conference, which had met the day before with the Ether Christian Church. Though a little late, yet we arrived in pretty good time to find the brethren in session and at work. Forty years ago we attended this Conference almost as regularly as the body met. We had been with them only once before this in many years, that was at Park's Cross Roads' Church several years ago. The truth is, time is going so rapidly that we cannot recall the year, and so we have to say "several" years ago.

Since the days when we were regularly in attendance, many of our beloved friends have gone away to return no more. I looked upon two audiences that day as I stood before the Conference—one of the long ago, and the other the one then assembled. In the first, there were many faces which did not appear in the one then present. As I looked back upon the Conference of forty years ago, I saw the faces of Rev. W. W. Hayworth, Rev. W. R. Brown, Bro. Oliver Vestal and has son, Henry C. Vestal, J. Rankin Parks, and many others whose names are too numerous to mention. I cannot say that they were not present in the Conference in spirit, but the new generation did not see them. They were Conference acquaintances of my early manhood days, but they are gone, and I saw them only by means of memory. They have gone, but their works do follow them, and in many cases their children are their successors. Of course, there were a number present whom I had seen in these annual Conferences of the long ago, but they were conspicuous by the smallness of their number. But I must not dwell on the past so much. I noticed among the visiting brethren present, President W. A. Harper, Revs. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., G. O. Lankford, D. D., and Bro. Chas. D. Johnston of the orphanage, Prof. P. J. Kernodle, managing editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and possibly others, whose names for the moment escape me.

The usual subjects were up and discussed with a good interest, but we must admit that the growth in the work of the Conference leaves it much where it was in the "eighties" of the last century. Missions and education are still forces in this Conference, but they are not far from where they were in the days when I was a regular attendant upon their annual meetings. The Sunday School work is just about where it was in those days. I noticed that many of the local schools reported that they did not use our own Sunday School literature. How can they expect much success in their Sunday School work if they spend their money to help up the work of other publishers while they let our own drag along as best it can without their help? We wish those who do not use our own literature would ask Bro. Hiram Freeman, of Ether, what he thinks would happen to his business if he should spend what money he could spare to help up the business of other men and let his own get along as best it could without help—the help which he could give to it if he chose to do so. Again, we noticed that a good many of the letters, reporting the work of the Churches, said the financial requirements of the annual Conference had not been met, and they gave as a reason that they were too high. That explains why they are not progressing—they are, in many instances, not loyal to their own work, and, of course, they do not prosper. When it came to the matter of the Church paper, I do not think they are taking as many copies of THE CHRISTIAN SUN now as they were forty years ago. THE SUN has a good many friends there, and they are good friends, but the great majority of those who ought to be reading THE SUN weekly do not read it at all. This is another sign of a non-progressive people. And when we came to missions, the interest seemed very little, and, of course, no Church which is a non-missionary Church can be progressive, and unless there is a change in this matter, the people who go to Conference there forty years from now will find them not much in advance of today, if any. The question which cannot now be answered definitely at this time is: Will there be any Conference there in forty years from now? Brethren, if you are going to be a factor in the Lord's work, you will have to get up and do things by the help of the Lord, or you cannot grow. But we must stop. We had dinner (our party did) with Bro. Hiram Freeman and family. He has frown older, of course, but otherwise he is the same beloved brother he was forty years ago, and he is still true to the cause. As Sam Jones used to say: Brethren of the Western North Carolina Conference, do get a move on you—the fields are inviting and ready for the workers, but you do not seem to be ready.

J. P. B.

LAUNCH OUT INTO THE DEEP.

In THE CHRISTIAN SUN of October 11th, there is a letter from Rev. William T. Scott entitled "A Bird's Eye of My Field." In this letter, Bro. Scott makes a statement which impresses me, and the truth of which I have felt in my own experience. The statement is, "The discouraging part about many of our country Churches is that they are failing to undertake things. The excuse is that they are small." And he adds, "They are small because they do not undertake enough to be large."

I don't think the trouble which Bro. Scott mentions is confined to the country Churches; but I am afraid that it is a disease which affects the whole body of the Christian denomination. There are exceptions, of course; some very notable ones. But generally speaking, our Churches seem afraid to undertake programs that are really big. I have seen something of the Christian denomination in three sections of the North American Continent, and I have found much the same attitude in all three. Everywhere you hear something like this: "We do very well for a small Church, but we are small and, of course, we can't do very much." So often, too, we find a sort of habitual pessimism that causes our people to refuse to look for or expect real progress. Recently I heard of one of our misinters who went to one of our Churches for the first time. After the service he remarked on the splendid congregation, and one of the members replied: "Oh, a good part of them are here out of curiosity."

Let us hear again the splendid statement of Hermon Eldredge: "I am not ashamed to belong to a small Church, but I am ashamed to belong to a Church that does small things." There should be no shame nor humiliation in belonging to an organization that is small, for all things that are large have come from things that were one time small. But there is real shame and humiliation in belonging to an organization that is content to stay small or uses its smallness as an excuse for not undertaking things that are big.

The reason for this all-too-common attitude isn't that our Church can't really do the big things. The few times when our Church has really launched out, has proven its power to do that which is really worth while when it gets started. Drs. Harper, at Elon; Smith, at Norfolk; Helfenstein, at Dover; Walters, at Richmond, and many other examples have proven that we can do the big things as well as anybody else when we launch out.

However, our Church as a whole seems very slow to learn this fact. We have limped along and lost opportunity after opportunity to enter the cities and large centers of population, all because we were small and were afraid we could not do the big jobs. How long, oh how long, must we wait before we hear and obey the urgent command of our Master to launch out into the deep.

MONDAY.

The Meaning of Prayer.

Why pray? Read Ps. 50:14, 15, 119:2, 66: 19-20; 1 Thess. 5:17, 18; Matt. 21:2, 6:6, 5: 44; Col. 4:2; Jer. 29:13; Jas. 1:58, 4:2, 3, 5:15, 16; Prov. 15:8, 29; Matt. 26:41; 1 Tim. 2:1, 2.

Jesus Christ took prayer for granted, and when instructing his apostles in prayer, merely said, "When ye pray." It was Carlyle who said: "It is the native and deepest impulse of the soul of man." We all believe it is the offering up of our desires to God, with a faith that attains, and it includes our soul's thanksgiving, adoration, confessions, petitions and dedications to Him. There are experiences in every one's life when God is the only one he can appeal to. In such times, the instinct to pray is mightier than logic, and it is in humble prayer that we have recourse to His supreme power, which is able to help us.

It is natural for us to be ambitious and want to be something (for many of us any way), and to rely on friendships, et cetera, for assistance. Prayer puts us in communion with the highest friendship—God Himself, who does not give us, as a Santa Claus gives to his children, but who gives us of His life in a way to make something of us, and he who denies himself the function and tendency to pray cuts himself off from the essential function of his life and stands in his own way to be the man he ought to be in the world; he misses the deep meaning of life's highest calling and robs himself of life's friendship with God.

Prayer.—Heavenly Father, forgive us our neglect in suffering the days and hours to pass without endeavoring to live with Thee. Grant us the desire to seek for Thee; and finding Thee, may we love Thee; and loving Thee, may we hate sin. Come, Thou, and dwell in our souls and make us fit for Thy habitation. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

Prayer (Continued).

A woman once said that she used to pray, but that things had changed, and prayer had gone out of her life. The minister asked her if she was ever conscious of an unseen presence that gave her peace and satisfaction. "Yes," she said; "I could not do without that." "Well," said he, "that is prayer. A sense of God's presence calls unto you to look to Him and find Him a friend."

Prayer is said to be the opening of the door of the soul. We open the door of our homes and our hearts to our friends, which means communion with them. By our love for Him, we may open unto Him. "Behold, I stand at the door and knock," says He, "if any man * * * open the door I will come in to him and will sup with him and he with Me" (Rev. 3:20). Only the one who prays in this way may see God and know Him, and only to such an one can God make Himself vivid. How much have we done this? How much have we made friends with God as we make friends with our acquaintances? Suppose we did not make a friend except when we need somebody. What do you think of a man who evades his responsibilities? does nothing for his fellow-man or his country? takes no interest in his country's problems? will not vote? will not pay his taxes? and yet, when his own personal property and welfare is in jeopardy and his rights are attacked, he is among the first to call upon his country for help? Will we call upon God only when we are in distress, or will we make it a daily friendship with Him?

Prayer.—Dear Father, give us Thyself and make us what we ought to be. Without Thee we can do nothing well. Make our souls to seek Thee evermore, and cause us to persist in it until we have found Thee. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

Covetousness.

(Luke 12:13-15.)

Covetousness is defined to be "desire for the things of others, or greed for wealth," and the most of us are afflicted with it. The damning characteristic lies in what it leads to. It lures men on. It countenances the little beginnings of sin.

"Is a stingy man a covetous man?" "Is stinginess wickedness?" The surprise with which these questions are so often asked clearly indicates the stealthiness with which this sin creeps on the unsuspecting, and, with sweet deceit, fixes one's affections on things rather than life. There is apparently little harm in the request of the man in today's Scripture, but Jesus sees the snake of covetousness lifting its poisonous head, and He cries, "Beware."—The Message of Stewardship.

"I have had many people resort to me for confession. The confession of every sin I have known of, and of sins so foul that I have never dreamed of them has been poured into my ear. But no person has ever confessed to me the sin of covetousness."—Francis Xavier.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, have mercy upon us; we bow before Thee in shame to ask Thee to forgive us our sins. Sanctify not only our hearts, but out minds by the enlightening power of the Holy Spirit. Make us able to detect the little beginnings of sin, even though they should be pleasant and alluring to us, and thereby cleanse us from all covetousness, whether of the world, of the flesh or the devil. This we ask through Jesus Christ. Amen.

THURSDAY.

Eyes Fixed.

"Stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."—Phil. 3:13, 14.

That is what we all do when the wolf is at the door, under which circumstances, nothing is impossible. That is what we do also when there is immediate gain in doing so; that is, fix our eyes on what we are striving for and press on unto it. Nothing short of misfortune can deter us. I wonder why we cannot always put the same sort of stuff in our religious endeavor? Our every-day need is the understanding that our highest values lie in Christian character, and it is for this we should strive for as strenuously as we would for some personal gain. Paul laid aside all material gain to obtain his calling in Christ, and the later version says he "strained" to do so. It was in this way that he "endured" throughout his life as "seeing Him who is invisible," and the interpretation says, "he never flinched." Nothing is impossible to him who sees the invisible end of his doings. We are told of men who have gone through a seven days' strain without eating. The accomplishment of their purpose deprived them of their food. It is possible to forget our selfish or temporal wants in the lure of achievement. Drudgery is unbearable until we can see the glory it brings later on, and then we do not think of its hardship. When interest is stimulated, service is efficient. Jesus is an example. He came to bring righteousness and peace, and He never wavere din the achievement of it, even in the face of death. Let us try to live with the same idea.

Prayer.—Dear Father, Thou God of all power, give strength to us and to all Thy children, that we may give ourselves to Thy task and never waver or flinch. Though it be a wilderness way, or through fire and flood, or through sacrifice and want, may we see Thy glory at the end and not falter. Give us grace to press on; we ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

FRIDAY.

Our Most Precious Jewel.

"As the truth is in Jesus."—Eph. 4:21.

As bread is the life of the body, so truth is the life of the soul. And as hunger is one of the intensest yearnings of one's physical nature, so the longing for truth is the deepest cry of the spirit. Many as are the material things that excite the desire of men, and the outward prizes which are their idols, still there are those who pre-eminently prize truth. They deem it the rarest prize, the chief treasure, the noblest object of search. To attain it, they will cheerfully give time, labor, patience, and the sacrifice of every lesser good. These seekers after truth are the real leaders of men. They see things in their right perspective. They have a just estimate of values. They justly regard truth as the rarest of all jewels, a treasure that fire cannot burn, nor thieves steal, nor oceans sink. Truth enlarges the mind, ennobles the soul and gives a new joy, dignity and strength to its possessor, such as no outward wealth can convey.

Truth is a boundless realm. It exists in myriad forms. It is vast as the universe, deep as infinity. Nor does it lie on the surface. Like veins of gold hidden in the rock, so it must be striven for, dug out by hard labor. The field of truth is broad as nature and has countless phases.

Now, all the various kinds of truth are wonderful, desirable, useful and beautiful. And the more one knows of them, the greater he is in soul, and the more admirable in personality. Yet not one of them is to be named by the side of religious truth. This is the knowledge of God, the secrets of the invisible, the spiritual life that longs for the unseen, that searches after the infinite, that strives for fellowship with the divine, that hungers after the heavenly and eternal.—Junius B. Remensnyder, D. D.

Prayer.—Heavenly Father, in Thee we live and move and have our being, and wet hank Thee. We praise Thee that truth is the most valued possession of our souls. Help us to seek for it until we shall possess it in fullness. Let the virtue of our Saviour's passion for it stand between us and our enemies until we shall finish our task well in Thee. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

SATURDAY.

Saturdays and Sundays of each week are full of "week-end" doings in which our faith is put to a test. The question is, will we fill these with our own way, with seeking our own pleasures, void of all prayer or thought for God, or will we recognize the opportunity, acknowledge God and all that He means to us, and maket he most of it for God and humanity?

To some, the name "God" is only a doctrinal convenience, to others it is only a swear word, to others He is only a subject of agitation, to others He is in the class with Buddha and Confucious. None such can establish strong faith in the true God. We need to know God better than that. We need to know Him in terms of manhood and present-day living, problems of living and how we are to meet them. We are not even fair to ourselves unless we make the most of our opportunities to know Him in such. We are fair enough to inquire into other things we wish to know and get an answer. Science has asked its questions and got answers. Astronomers have asked their questions and read the heavens, and thank God we can inquire into Him and find Him out. Every day is our opportunity, of course, but Saturday and Sunday are special days of opportunity. Our Sabbaths are what our Saturday's preparation make them, and they cannot competently be prepared for by dissipation or late hours on Saturday night. Plan today to include in your tomorrow's program deep devotion to God; to inquire into His temple and His life, and consistently observe the day.

Prayer.—Our Father, in whose hands are life and death, by whose powers we are sustained, and by whose mercy we are spared, thou who art the Father of all wisdom, understanding and strength, we beseech Thee, in the name of Christ, to send the Holy Spirit into our hearts and teach us how to learn of Thee. In the Saviour's name we ask it. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE SABBATH AND MAN.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

In six days, one follows the Lord in material effort, and the seventh he follows Him in sacred employment. This is nature's divine law of love and worship, so that we need not repress all that does not take the form of worship, but only those things that destroy the higher and better life. No one who has a fine regard for society or the best conditions for man will do on Sunday that which he has time to do in the week. He will keep the day set apart for truth and for good for himself and mankind. God does not force any one to certain religious observances, but it may always be said of Him, "As many as touched Him were made whole." When the Sabbath is not used thus to come in touch with Him, it ceases to afford repose.

Prayer.—Almighty God, Thou who hast founded the Church for Thyself, and the Sabbath for us, that we might become like Thee, and Thou who hast promised to dwell in Thy Sabbath forever, that we might live, enlighten and sanctify it today, we beseech Thee, by Thy spirit. We pray Thee for the pastors and ministers of grace that Thy people may be fed with Thy Word in all truth, that they may look to Thee and be saved. Bless all who serve Thee in Thy Church, all who minister to the poor, and all who teach the young. Strengthen their labors and draw all to Thee. Give them courage to make good confession and declare Thy truth, and may the Sabbath and the Church grow and increase more and more until every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that Jesus is the Christ. Amen.

BETHLEHEM NOTES.

The Bible class of Bethlehem College met with its teacher, President M. W. Hook, in the college building, this morning for recitation. This class being the first to have a recitation in the new building. Our college chaplain, Rev. E. M. Carter, was present and conducted a short devotional service.

Every member of the class was very glad to have met in the new building. Although the building is yet unfinished, we are hoping to be able to enter for full work there in the near future. The work here is progressing nicely under the splendid faculty. We are, indeed, thankful for Bethlehem College, and we are looking forward to the day when she will send out her boys and girls to bless the world. Let us pray God that it may be so. S. D. LANKFORD.

THANKSGIVING APPEAL.

DEAR FRIENDS:

Thanksgiving is a time we all look forward to with a great deal of pleasure. It comes at the time of year when we are gathering in the fruits of our year's labor. Our people should be very happy at this Thanksgiving season because God has been good to us this year. Seasons have been good, crops better than for a number of years, prices high and business on a boom. Let us not forget others while our blessings have been many, and think only of ourselves because we have obligations to fulfill to others. Deut. 14: 28-29, "Thou shalt bring forth all the tithe of thine increase the same year and shalt lay it up within thy gates, and the stranger and the fatherless and the widow which are within thy gates shall come and shall eat and be satisfied; that the Lord thy God may bless thee in all the works of thine hand which thou doest."

One hundred and five children in the Christian Orphanage. Have you brought forth your tithe as God has commanded you and fed these little children? Giving to support the orphanage is a modern way to carry out God's command. The appeal of the orphan child and the cry of the widow should touch every human heart.

What if your children should some day become orphans! How would you have others consider them in their misfortune? "To others do as you would thatt hey should do unto you."

We appeal to you in behalf of the most pitifully helpless of all our people. The fatherless and motherless children. We appeal to you to look upon these little ones and, measuring the circumference and depth of your heart, to pour out a gift for them that will be worthy of you; one that will bring to you a sense of duty well done; one that will have in the place of your money a great wealth of joy. Give at least the value of one day's income. More, if you feel in your heart you would like to, and less if you can't give that much. Give through your Church and Sunday School or mail direct to Chas. D. Johnston, superintendent, Elon College, N. C.

The North Carolina Orphan's Association has issued a call in the interest of all of the orphanages in North Carolina. It makes an appeal for at least the gift of what you make in one day in your regular work, more if you can, and less if you cannot do so much; but they ask you to make the offering for this great and good work. Send it through your Church, or send it direct to the orphanage of your choice, but be sure to help, and do it on or about Thanksgiving Day. November 25th is "Orphanage Sunday." The Christian Orphanage is located at Elon College, N. C., Chas. D. Johnston, superintendent. Do not forget the orphans at Thanksgiving time. Bro. Johnston is in need now of a large offering this fall. He has 105 orphan children there to care for, to clothe, house and educate—help, and help him just as liberally as you can.

TELL THEM SO.

Did the preacher's sermon help you at Church the other day
As you worshiped with the people in your journey by the way?
Tell him so.

Do you appreciate your friends and the kindness they bestow
Upon you every day as through the world you go?
Tell them so.

Is your heart still lit with love for your faithful, loving wife,
Who has helped you bear your burdens in the conflict and the strife?
Tell her so.

Do you still love your dear old mother, whose love was ever true,
Who spent all her time and strength in doing things for you?
Tell her so.

Do you love your Heavenly Father and long to render service true
For all the glorious blessings He has given unto you?
Tell him so.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

December 2, 1923.

Subject: "The Power of the Early Church."—Acts 2:1-8:1.

Golden Text: "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved."—Acts 2:21.

Devotional Reading: Joel 2:28-32.

The Source of Missionary Power.

"They were in an upper chamber;
They were all with one accord,
When the Holy Ghost descended,
As was promised by our Lord."

The apostles were all gathered in one room. They were united in spirit and desire. So very recently their Leader had left them, with the promise, "Ye shall receive power when the Holy Spirit is come upon you," and the command, "Ye shall be My witnesses." The days since His ascension had been spent with His nearest in prayer and devotion. Dominated by a great love, the apostles longed for the power which would send them out as winning forces. When "they were all filled with the Holy Spirit," the Church which Jesus Christ established would become powerful. They had been assured that the Holy Spirit would guide them "into all truth" (John 16:13). Long ago the prophet had called the Spirit "the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of Jehovah" (Isa. 11:2). And the Holy Spirit proved to be the Spirit of power and love, "For God gave us not a spirit of fearfulness, but of power and love and discipline" (2 Tim. 1:7). This Holy Spirit, which changed timid fishermen into flaming evangels, which transformed self-seeking men into apostles glad to make any sacrifice, even to life itself, this Spirit which gave power to the early Church, is the source of power for the Church of every age, the electric current which must speed the missionary message.

The Power of the Early Church, the Holy Spirit, is for All.

"They were all filled." "To you is the promise, and to your children, and to all that are afar off." Not only to ministers and to missionaries and great Christian leaders, was this divine gift given, but to you. The Holy Spirit is for all that are afar off, whether they may live countless miles from that upper chamber or centuries thereafter. It is for all who meet the requirements of the gift. "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, unto the remission of your sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." In his "Threefold Secret of the Holy Spirit," Mr. McConkey explains this passage thus: "It is evident from many passages in the Word that baptism was here an ordinance administered upon faith in Christ as a sin-bearer, and thus God here taught through Peter this great truth that the two great conditions of receiving the Holy Ghost are repentance and faith in Christ for the remission of sins. No other conditions are required. Two things for us to do, and then one thing God does. If ye do these two things, ye shall receive, says God, the promise is absolute." This divine gift is for you, if you will meet the conditions. Do you long for power as a Christian? Then do you have faith in Jesus Christ, and are you repentant? If so, the power bestowed by God through the Holy Spirit is yours. The Church needs spirit-filled members. The world needs the ministry of men and women, guided and impelled by the spirit of God. The men whom God can use in His kingdom to bring the world to Him are spirit-filled, spirit-led men. Are you that type of Christian? Is the prayer of your heart and life—

"Holy Spirit, faithful Guide,
Ever near the Christian's side,
Gently lead us by the hand,
Pilgrims in a barren land."

Men and Women Filled with the Holy Spirit Make a Powerful Church.

No other force can successfully do this. Great architecture and beautiful music help. Eloquent oratory and great programs contribute to Church life. But without the power of the Holy Spirit, these cannot give the Church the influence over lives that God meant for her to have. Architecture and music and oratory cannot alone save a soul, though they often lead men and women toward God. They are great helps, when used by Christians, filled with the love of the Father, and a real desire to follow in the footsteps of the Man of Galilee. The Holy Spirit in the lives of Church members makes possible a continuous revival, so that as in the early Church the Lord may add to the Church "day by day those that were saved."

There should be no service in the Church where it would seem unnatural for a man or woman, or a boy or girl to accept Jesus Christ. To win folks to Him is the greatest business of the Church, and one which cannot be carried on through a single week or weeks of revival meetings. When the Church members live close to God, praying steadfastly, working daily, looking ever upward, this power will come, and every Church service will in some way point to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world. Charles G. Finney, entering a mill, was so filled with the power of the Spirit that the operatives fell upon their knees before the mere presence of the evangelist before he had uttered a word. He was alive with the Spirit of God. As a live wire produces an instantaneous effect, so the power of the live Christian is felt. A dead wire can in no way affect a person any more than can a dead Christian. Criticism of the Church should be rather criticism of the members who make up the Church. It is their weakness which hinders the spiritual progress of the world. It is their failure to live up to their great privileges which keeps great sections in darkness and ignorance and sin.

The power of the early Church was manifested when Peter, transformed and made new by the Holy Spirit, bravely carried the message to the hosts on the Day of Pentecost, when only a few weeks before he trembled before a serving maid. The power of the early Church was shown when three thousand souls accepted Jesus Christ at the close of Peter's powerful, but simple message. The power of the early Church was revealed in a spirit of brotherhood which was expressed in a common life of peace and unity, in a spirit of Christian courage, which made the great apostolic leaders willing even to face martyrdom gladly for His sake. To produce men and women of such power is the task of the Church of 1923. To teach boys and girls the message of the Gospel, so that they may possess the great qualities of Peter and James and John, revealed in lives of courage, consecration and faith and devotion, is our great opportunity to produce a Church of power.

The promise of the gift of the Holy Spirit by the Master, was coupled with the command, "Ye shall be My witnesses," as a logical following of the gift. The Holy Spirit cannot abide in the selfish heart. Hence, with it comes the missionary spirit, or the spirit of loving concern for the Master's world, which gives great and enduring power to the individual and to the Church.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

December 2, 1923.

Topic: Lessons from the Psalms—12 The Life-Obedience Psalm.—Ps. 40:1-10.

(Consecration Meeting.)

Thoughts for the Meeting.

"We turn from seeking Thee afar
And in unwonted ways
To build from out our daily lives
The temples of Thy praise."

Life-obedience in every-day life is the attitude God wishes from His children. He reveals His will to the heart which seeks Him earnestly and patiently. He will always hear. Verse 1.

"To whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little" (Luke 7:47). The Heavenly Father has been very kind and lenient with all of us, has forgiven our weakness and selfishness when we have come to Him. How much we should love Him! How gladly "trust and obey." Verse 2.

Forgiveness brings joy. A right relation toward God produces peace. Many are brought to God through the song of the life of the righteous man. Verse 3.

God's blessings to us are beyond number. Our very life, and all that sustains it day by day are from Him. "They are more than can be numbered," said the psalmist. How can we adequately thank Him, save through life-obedience? Verse 5.

The prophet declared "This people honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me." It is heart service which pleases God. Form nor outward worship cannot satisfy Him. He justly claims our all. Verse 6.

It is possible even to go to Church and take part in the service, and yet not worship God, because the heart is not in the worship. Mere Church attendance is far from true worship. Verse 6.

"I delight to do Thy will." The true Christian is the happy Christian. Obedience brings joy. Life invested from Him brings the largest returns. Verse 8.

Really knowing God leads the Christian to want others to know Him. "In the great assembly" perhaps, or to a single friend, or a little child, the story will be told. Verse 9.

To receive of God's bounties, to be led by Him in all ways of life, and then to hide all His goodness in the heart, or to try to, is the highest form of selfishness. Let us not conceal what He has done for us. The greatest blessing comes to the out-and-out Christian. Verse 10.

"If you learn to think right, you will soon find yourself acting right."—C. Fillmore.

"Let others use only their tongues, but as for me, I will cry, 'Bless the Lord, O my soul!' "—Dr. Charles Spurgeon.

Plans for the Meeting.

If your society has life work recruits, let them take a part in the meeting as leaders or special speakers. Constantly hold before your society, as well as before the juniors, the opportunities offered in life Christian service. This topic offers a splendid chance to win recruits. Perhaps the juniors or intermediates will join in this service, acting as a junior choir.

Ask the members the week before to come to this meeting with a verse on "obedience," to give in response to their names at the consecration roll call. The Bible abounds in such passages showing the blessing which comes to him who obeys the voice of God.

SUGGESTED HYMNS: "Jesus Calls Us," "Take My Life and Let it be Consecrated," "My Life, My Love I Give to Thee," "I am Thine, O Lord," "Jesus, Saviour, Pilot Me."

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

DECEMBER 2, 1923.

TOPIC: Help the Unfortunate—Why? How?—Luke 6:33; James 1:27.

Why?

"And if ye love them that love you, what thank have ye? for even sinners do the same."

Whom do you love? Mother, father, homefolks, friends? Yes, but no one else? The junior topic today calls us to think of those who are unfortunate and unhappy, and calls us to help them. To truly help, we must first care for them. Jesus said that even sinners love those who love them, but His followers must do more than this—they must care for those who need love, whether they are kind or cross, whether they are friends or enemies, for that is the Jesus way, which juniors are seeking to follow.

How?

"Pure religion and undefiled before our God and Father is this: to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep oneself unspotted from the world."

Read what "Uncle Charlie" has to say in the Orphanage corner of THE SUN, and see some of the things your Church is doing for unfortunate boys and girls. Ask your superintendent to tell you about the one hundred and five boys and girls who are happy today because the Christian Church has given them a happy home, and ask her how you can help to keep them happy. Then perhaps near you there is an old lady, or a crippled soldier who would be happy if a junior paid a visit, or a hungry family whom you could take a basket to this Christmas month. Loving leads to helping. See whom you can find to help!

THIRTY-NINE SUNDAY SCHOOLS REPORT CHILDREN'S DAY.

"Children's Day" has been set apart by the Southern Christian Convention as a day to be observed in all Churches, and as the time for the annual offering from the school to the work of the Board of Religious Education, which is to promote Christian education for our youth through the Christian Churches of the South. "Children's Day" is one of the hoppiest days of the whole Church school year in places where it is observed annually. It gives an opportunity for the children to show what they are learning from Sunday to Sunday, and also to impress upon the parents the real value of Christian education. It is to be hoped that the time will come when every one of our 200 Sunday Schools will observe this day and make it one of the finest days in the program of the school.

The following thirty-nine Churches sent in "Children's Day" offerings this year to C. H. Stephenson, of Raleigh, treasurer of the board, amounting in all to $302.74. There may be other schools yet to report. If so, they will be added to this honor roll. The list is taken from Mr. Stephenson's annual report to the Board of Religious Education, and the board joins him in thanking the Churches which thus definitely expressed their interest in Christian education and desire to co-operate in the plans of the board. Will your school be in the front rank next year?

WOMEN'S ACTIVITIES.

PATTIE COGHILL, Field Sec'y.

During the annual session of the Alabama Conference, held at Cragford, Ala., October 16-18, the women present held a special meeting at the home of Mrs. W. D. Mitchell. Most of the women present had done some kind of missionary work in their local Churches and were enthusiastic over the plans to extend the work to reach each Church in the Conference.

After reports from the societies represented, the following board members were elected: President, Miss Siddie Latham; vice-president, Mrs. E. M. Carter; secretary, Mrs. O. H. Orr; treasurer, Mrs. Lena Stephens; superintendent women's work, Mrs. V. L. Carter; superintendent young people's work, Mrs. M. W. Hook; superintendent cradle roll, Mrs. Hood.

The board members and several others familiar with the work promised their assistance in the task of organizing during the coming year where organization is needed. They voted to ask for two sessions at the next General Conference to be conducted by the women and given over to the transaction of business of the Women's Missionary Societies. This was granted by Conference, and the women are hopeful over the work which they think can be accomplished this year.

They are proud of Misses Lois Calhoun and Siddie Latham, two young ladies from the Alabama Conference, who are studying now in Bethlehem College and will later give their lives to missionary work.

After Conference closed, I had the privilege of visiting New Harmony, Spring Hill, Wadley and Beulah Churches. The first three mentioned have good missionary societies, and Beulah has a wide-awake Christian Endeavor.

There were not very many women present at the Georgia and Alabama Conference held the following week of the Vanceville Church, near Tifton, Ga., because Tifton is in the extreme southern part of the work. However, those present were eager to do as much as possible for the cause of missions. The following board members were elected: President, Mrs. J. H. Abel, Richland, Ga.; vice-president, Mrs. W. H. Dennard, Enigma; secretary, Mrs. W. A. Hand, Tifton; treasurer, Mrs. J. S. Stephenson, Kite, Ga.; superintendent young people's work, Miss Ina Gray, Lanett, Ala.

After Conference, I visited Enigma Church, where I found a live missionary society, which is conducted for the young people, and older people, too. At Ambrose we organized a missionary society, with Mrs. Smith, president, and Miss Tressie Ferguson, secretary-treasurer.

The following Sunday was spent with the two Churches in Columbus, Ga., and Beulah, which is just across the river in Phoenix, Ala. There is a missionary society doing good work in the Rose Hill Church, a ladies' aid society at Beulah, and a home mission society at North Highland.

Monday night I had the privilege of visiting the handsome new Church in Lanett, Ala., which has been erected during the past year. Rev. H. M. Gray is pastor, and has done a wonderful and very commendable work there. In the last three years the membership has been tripled, a new Church erected, financial conditions bettered, and a new interest awakened. Miss Ina Gray has had a very fine part in the work there as Christian Endeavor president and pianist.

Tuesday night I visited the First Church, in LaGrange, Ga., where Rev. C. W. Hanson is pastor. They have an interested, growing Woman's Missionary Society there doing splendid work.

One could not help from enjoying a visit among the good people of Alabama and Georgia. They are not only hospitable, but responsive and appreciative, and good, consecrated people.

STANDARDS OF EXCELLENCE.

A banner will be awarded to the young people's and willing workers' society which attains during the year the highest rating on the following points of excellence:

1. Regular monthly meetings and best average attendance.
2. At least one public meeting; also one social meeting.
3. Largest percentage of increase in membership.
4. Largest amount contributed per member on regular goals.
5. Largest amount for specials per member.
6. Largest amount for mite boxes per member.
7. Largest per cent of members who tithe.
8. The society sending at least one or more delegates to the Woman's Conference.
9. Largest number of subscribers to the Christian Missionary.
10. The society maintaining during the year a regular mission-study class.

The rating is 100 per cent, on a basis of 10 per cent on each of the ten points of excellence named above. PATTIE COGHILL.

STEPHEN CAREY BUTLER.

At his home in Berkley, Norfolk County, Va., October 8, 1923, Stephen Carey Butler, son of the late Dempsey C. Butler and a brother of Rev. Harrison H. Butler, of Suffolk, Va., departed this life. He died suddenly, in his sixty-ninth year, from a stroke of paralysis. He was never married, though he kept house, and when his brother, Donaphin E. Butler, and his wife, died, leaving four children, three sons and a daughter, he took those children to his own home and reared them to manhood and womanhood. These were W. H. Butler, Arthur C. Butler and Mrs. Pattie Bartlett, wife of L. W. Bartlett, all of Norfolk County, Va., and Lloyd H. Butler, Zuni, Va.

Stephen lived not for himself, but for others. He was greatly beloved by all who knew him. He was commonly called "Uncle Stephen," a term expressive of the affection in which he was held. He was a member of the First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va., where funeral services were conducted over his remains by Rev. O. D. Poythress, of South Norfolk, Va., assisted by Dr. I. W. Johnson, Suffolk, Va., who spoke very beautifully of his not living for himself, but for others, and of his Christian character. He leaves three brothers and many friends. His remains were laid to rest in the Magnolia Cemetery, Norfolk, Va., where, in the morning of the resurrection, we shall hope to meet him in his spiritual body.

Bro. Butler did not try to make a big show in life, but he was given to doing good and serving his Lord and his fellows in a quiet way. We had known him in his youth and up to the closing days of his earthly career, and he made the simplicity of his life speak in strong expression of what he was. To his brothers and loved ones we extend the sympathy of one who had known him practically all his life. Peace to his ashes.

Rumatism and Indigestion

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its affects in their practice, believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect, and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

If you suffer from Rheumatism, Indigestion, or from any curable disease, accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to—
Shivar Springs,
Box 16-D, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons (two five-gallon demijohns) of Shivar Spring Water. I agree to give the water a fair trial in accordance with instructions which you will send, and if I report no benefit you are to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

Mr. Israel Zangwill lectures on "The Truth About America." Pilate asked, "What is truth?" and how can Mr. Zangwill be sure that he has it to tell? His co-religionists declare that he is far from the truth in his views on Zionism. If he cannot judge Jerusalem after a life of study, how can he judge America in two weeks?

That the Churches are numerous and active in our capital city is shown from the following figures given out by the Church Federation of Washington: "There are in the District of Columbia 280 Churches, with a membership of 157,000, and with Church and parsonage property valued at $14,000,000."

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

For your own protection—

The peril of the road crossing has become a national problem with the multiplication of automobiles.

The Southern Railway System has eliminated 584 grade crossings, and is eliminating more every year, but 7,000 remain to be separated on this system alone. The total cost to complete the work is a stupendous sum—probably half as much as the cost to build the railroads.

Even if the money were available, and the public willing to pay the increased freight and passenger rates necessary to provide a fair return on it, many years would be required to do the work.

Protection from the peril for the present generation at least must be found in some other way. Trains cannot stop at every crossing if they are to be run at the sustained speed expected by the public and required to carry the commerce of the country. The train crosses a highway about every mile. The motorist encounters a railroad only occasionally.

It is necessary, therefore, for the automobile driver to stop in order to avoid risk. No one who did this was ever killed. In North Carolina, where the law now requires such a stop, the number of road crossing accidents on our lines has been reduced one-half.

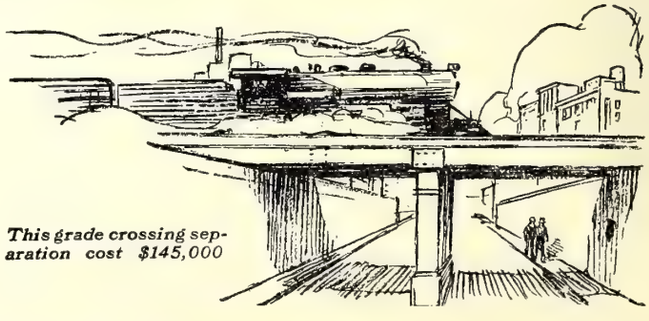
Grade crossing accidents can be prevented if you will approach the zone of danger determined to exercise caution For Your Own Protection.

It is better business to save a life than to save a minute.

Personal Responsibility

(Reprinted from the Saturday Evening Post)

Final dependence for a reduction in the number of railroad grade-crossing disasters must be placed upon the individual's sense of responsibility. If when approaching and crossing a railroad at grade the traveler will think of that crossing as a zone of danger to him, and regard himself and those with him as in imminent danger until the crossing is completed, the chances of accidents will be automatically reduced to the minimum.



This grade crossing separation cost $145,000

BARLOW.

Mrs. Margie Harris Barlow was born September 2, 1898, near Waverly, Va., and died November 12, 1923. She spent her life in Sussex County. She married Arthur M. Barlow February 17, 1920; to this union was born a little girl November 11, 1923. She leaves to mourn their loss a devoted and faithful husband, an aged mother, Mrs. Jesse Harris; three brothers—G. H. Harris, of Norfolk, and W. W. and H. T. Harris, of Waverly, Va.; also three sisters—Mrs. Allan Minitree, of Petersburg, Va.; Miss Ellen Harris, of Norfolk, Va., and Mrs. Edwin Plummer, of Waverly, Va.; and many relatives and dear friends connected with each family.

She joined Waverly Christian Church when a young girl, and remained till death. Her life was filled with energy. She was indeed a helpmate to her husband, sharing all his joys and responsibilities and lending a cheerful and helpful hand in whatever work came. Their lives were a happy unit. Their faithfulness was beautiful in the home life, and it seems so hard in this separation.

May God bless and sustain this sorrowing husband and this little one be kept in the hollow of His hand. Burial services at Waverly Cemetery, in the presence of a large gathering of friends. Beautiful flowers showed the high esteem in which the deceased was held. Ceremonies were conducted by the pastor.

JAMES L. FOSTER.

It is said that only 176,000 children of school age in Cuba, out of a school-age population of 750,000, are attending any school and receiving any instruction. Here is a vast field where the Protestant Churches of America may do some real missionary work not far from home.

BOLL WEEVIL PLANS.

Plans of Southern farmers, as represented in the American Cotton Association, to combat the boll weevil were laid before President Coolidge by Harvie Jordan, of St. Mathews, S. C., secretary of the association. The President is said to have told Mr. Jordan that he would assure the association of the government's co-operation.

More money has been put into savings banks this last year by working-people and all sorts of people than ever before in the history of banking. It seems to be true that if the people are spending more than ever, they are at the same time saving more. Whatever else national prohibition has done, it has not taken the people's savings. Neither are the majority of the old drinkers spending their savings for bad booze.

The influence of Christianity is making itself felt in a practical way among the students of Japan. Nine of the most prominent universities have joined in a movement to fight the use of alcohol among the students. Some of the leading educators of Japan are reported to be enlisted in this fight.

It is reported that the Gideons, an organization of Christian commercial traveling men in America, has already placed more than 500,000 Bibles in the hotels of the United States and Canada. Samuel R. Boggs, of Philadelphia, is president of this organization.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

When the Mountains "Walked."—

Mountain ranges that moved a mile in one stupendous heave, burying villages, lakes and rivers as they passed; landslides that eddied like waterfalls; huge cracks in the earth that swallowed houses and camel-trains; a death-list of nearly 200,000, and a country whose whole topography was changed overnight—these are some of the results that made the earthquake in Kansu, a province in the west of China, at once one of the most appalling and picturesque catastrophes in history. The destruction worked upon civilization by the Japanese earthquake was greater, but "the mountains walked" in China in a way of which history has few records. The earth of the country is largely loose, a mixture of clay and powdered quartz, and it flowed and billowed and piled itself into new hills and valleys under the terrific impulses of the earthquake. Probably not since prehistorical times, it is said, has the physical geography of a country been so altered before.

This great earthquake has also, in the words of a correspondent of the National Geographic Magazine, who followed its course over 10,000 square miles of territory, the distinction of being "perhaps the most poorly advertised calamity that has occurred in modern times." It was scarcely noticed in newspaper reports at the time, and mention of it has, for the most part, escaped the notice of our encyclopedists and gazetteers. Though the tremendous shaking-up occurred on December 16, 1920, the story, thus far, has hardly spread beyond the narrow defiles which guard the entrance to Kansu Province.—Literary Digest.

The Death of Mr. Bonar Law.—

After a very gallant fight for life, Mr. Bonar Law has at last succumbed, mourned by colleagues and opponents alike as being one who, more than most men, has sacrificed his life to his sense of public duty. When he first emerged from the comparative obscurity of the private member he was perhaps not much more than an able business man with strong opinions of a distinctly conservative type, and an amazing gift for lucid exposition. But those who did not accept his opinions were ready to accept him as a man of absolute honesty and disinterestedness; and, despite his strong leanings toward protection, convinced free traders within the conservative camp were willing to serve under his leadership when Mr. A. J. Balfour resigned in 1911. But it was the war that revealed his pre-eminent qualities—of selfishness and of comradeship in a great enterprise. No two politicians could have been less alike than Mr. Bonar Law and Mr. Lloyd George in their political propensities and upbringing, but yet their association begat in both of them a mutual affection and respect which lasted to the very end; and the last visit paid by Mr. Lloyd George before sailing for America was to the colleague whom he was not destined to see again alive. When Mr. Asquith resigned, it was to Mr. Bonar Law that the king turned for a successor; at a dark and critical passage in the war. It is only a man of big moral caliber who can refuse a much-coveted honor, but Mr. Bonar Law did it; and, what is more, undertook to support Mr. Lloyd George and to use his influence to induce his party to do the same. His whole career is that of one who always put duty before both interest and inclination, and he has had his reward in a kind of reputation which is unlike that of any politician of our time.—Western Christian Advocate.

Burning Coal Twice.—

It is reported in the New York Evening Post that Mr. Henry Ford has a way to burn coal twice. He is now making 8,500 cars a day, but when this new process is complete he can make 15,000 cars a day, and it will all be cheaper than now. In the New York Evening Post we read as follows:

"By a new process, he is going to burn it twice and get cheap gas, cheap gasoline, cheap fuel oil, cheap fertilizer, and cheap coke.

"The gas will be suitable for illumination, the gasoline for automobiles, the fuel oil for engines, the fertilizer for farms, and the coke for furnaces.

"Where he is making 8,500 cars a day now, he will be able to make 15,000. Instead of an expensive coal, he will be able to use a cheap coal. And the coke that will result from the first burning will be of such a character that he will be able to make his own steel.

"Finally, such a revolutionary thing is this new process that power plants all over the country must come to it, Ford engineers say, and as gasoline is derived from this method of distillation at a cost of only six cents a gallon, an inexhaustible source of cheap gasoline will be established.

"More than a million dollars has been spent by Ford already in assisting experimental work. His money has been in it. His technical staff has been in it. He is now spending $5,000,000 to establish the process in his River Rouge plant in Detroit.

"As far back as 1694, men were talking of the hidden properties in coal and seeking some method of releasing them. The beginnings of accomplishment were in 1854 when the first high temperature by-product recovery plant was built in France. Since then, particularly in recent years, there has been experimentation in low-temperature distillation, as being a more efficient method, but although as much as $100,000,000 was spent, a satisfactory process was not perfected."

Is a Cotton Famine Likely?—

"The carry-over of American cotton at the end of the 1922-1923 season ended July 31st is estimated to be 3,100,000 bales by the United States Department of Commerce. This represents the smallest carry-over in recent years and is dangerously near a critical depletion of stocks available to the world textile industry. The same authority shows a total world consumption of American cotton for the twelve months ended July 31st to be 12,450,000 bales. Of this, domestic mills consumed 6,664,710 bales, and 5,785,290 bales were consumed abroad.

"It is now generally agreed by leading statisticians and the best cotton authorities that the yield of the 1923 crop will not exceed 10,500,000 bales. Exports are showing a decided increase over exports one year ago for the same period, and domestic consumption will doubtless parallel the consumption of 1922. Assuming that exports of the staple will be equal to those of 1922, which amounted to 6,300,000, and domestic consumption for the same year aggregated 6,600,000 bales, we have the following situation facing supplies and demand:

	Bales.
Carry-over July 31, 1923	3,100,000
Estimated production 1923 crop	10,500,000
Total available supplies	13,600,000
Estimated domestic consumption	6,600,000
Estimated exports	6,300,000
	12,900,000
Estimated carry-over July 31, 1924	700,000

"With the world available stocks of American cotton depleted to 700,000 bales by August 1st next year, it means nothing short of famine comparable to the almost complete exhaustion of supplies in 1865. It would mean the forcible closing down of hundreds of mills and the checking of the textile industry throughout practically every country in the world. The situation is serious and is fraught with great danger to the textile industry and the consumers of cotton fabrics in this country and abroad.

"What the hazards of production in 1924 will be with the whole South infested with the weevil menace, shortage of labor, and continued financial depression, it is difficult now to predict."

As the Montgomery Advertiser points out:

"The big surplus of cotton that was on hand when the war ended has been practically used up. The world may see what the South has sometimes expected, but never seen, a practical cotton famine."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. A. C. Youmans, for some years pastor at Greenville, Ohio, is now pastor at Haverhill, Mass.

Rev. P. T. Klapp was today (November 26th) considered better, but it will be some time before he can resume his work. This will be good news for his many friends.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson's estimate of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, in this issue of THE SUN, is literally true. Read it. It makes our hearts feel glad.

Rev. John Baughman is in revival work in Illinois. That is the work he loves. He is both a singing evangelist and at the time can do his own preaching. He is the author of some hymns which he sings with good effect.

Let us remember that "man" means more than a mouth to be fed; than hands to play the game of life; than feet to move in the realm of music and dance—he is a heart in which are the deep passions of the soul, and in which ideals exist that make him a man. Unless we are as men like these, we grow to be monsters without a conscience, and are dangerous to ourselves and to society.

Rev. Geo. D. Eastes, late an evangelist of the Southern Christian Convention, and who has been ill for more than a year, has so far recovered his health as to be able to take work, not as an evangelist, but as pastor. He has received a call to succeed Rev. William Mason Jay, at Holy Neck pastorate. Bro. Eastes has a fine people with whom to labor, and we wish him great success in that field.

Dr. Staley continues to improve, but has not as yet attempted any hard work. He was at the Eastern Virginia Conference, and was last week at the North Carolina Conference, not undertaking any work which required much effort, either physically or mentally, but he will, if he continues to gain, in a few weeks be able to take hold again. He is expecting to resume his "Suffolk Letter" soon. This will be good news to the many SUN readers, who have missed his letters a great deal.

Rev. A. H. Hook has entered upon his work as pastor of the Henderson (N. C.) Christian Church. He is just now giving most of his time to finishing his course of study in Elon College. He expects to graduate next May, and then he anticipates moving to Henderson and giving his whole time to that work and the Church at Fuller's. His father and mother were both preachers in New York State years ago. We are glad to have him here in the South, where there are plenty of opportunities to work.

Do not forget at this Thanksgiving time to do your best for the Orphanage at Elon College. Bro. Chas. D. Johnston, the superintendent, is very busy these days, getting in the crops made by the orphans, but he is taking time to look after the needs of the orphanage. His family of orphans grows, and he is dependent upon the free-will offerings of the people to take care of 105 children, and we all know that it takes money and time to care for more than one hundred people. He asks that at this Thanksgiving time our people remember well the orphanage and its needs. He is looking for a large collection this fall to enable him to take care of a big family of 105 children. He asks each person to give at least as much as the value of one day's work. After you have taken the collection, do not forget to send it in right away.

A brief note from Dr. D. A. Long, Franklinton, N. C., brings us the news that the only daughter of his son, Mr. Joseph Long, of Florence, S. C., is ill from diphtheria, but her condition was hopeful. The little girl is six years old. Dr. Long also had, we believe, in the same mail, news that his grandson, Daniel Long Belvin, Raleigh, N. C., had just had his hand injured by fire. No particulars were given, and it is hoped that both of these little sufferers may be speedily brought back to health.

Dr. Frederick Cooper, one of our Iowa ministers, is in the evangelistic work in that State, and with good results. The last news from him was that he was in union meeting in which the local Presbyterian and Methodist Churches are uniting with the Christian Church at Milo, Iowa, in which there had been about eighty professions of faith, and the work was still going on with good prospects. We count Bro. Cooper an old friend, and we assure him we are glad to know that he is still busy in the work of winning the world to Christ. He is a strong preacher.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, of Elon College, has been called to the pastorate of the Christian Church at Wakefield and certain other Christian Churches near that place. He will visit the field once a month, preaching on each visit to the three Churches of the pastorate, till he graduates here next May, after which he will move to Wakefield and take up the work regularly. He seems to be an excellent young man, a good singer and preacher both. We wish him and the Churches he serves great success in their united labors for the Gospel. Bro. Crutchfield will find some mighty fine people in that field, and we believe they will stand by him in all the good work he may undertake there.

At the late session of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, three of their young ministers were set apart for the work of the ministry by the laying on of hands by the presbytery. They were W. T. Scott, S. M. Lynam, A. H. Hook. The Conference also received a request from the Alabama Christian Conference to set apart for them to the work of the ministry Bro. Jessee H. Dollar, a young man of promise who is now in Elon College and preaching to various Churches within the bounds of this Conference, since it was not convenient for him to be in place for that purpose during the sitting of the Alabama Conference. The request was granted. There was quite an impressive scene when these four young men were set apart to the work of the ministry. We wish for them all great success in the work of the ministry. May God give them all grace to keep humble and true to the Word of God, for their usefulness will be greatly enhanced by these two accomplishments.

It was published in THE SUN not long ago that Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., who had served Alamance County, N. C., as the welfare officer for several years, had resigned. The reason for his resignation was the fact that they insisted that he must give up his work as a pastor if he would continue his work as welfare officer of said county. Dr. Fleming promptly said he would not do it, as the preaching of the Gospel was the first work with him, and he stood fast in that purpose. After waiting several months, the officials who had the matter in hand re-elected Dr. Fleming, with the privilege to continue his work as a minister of the Gospel and as pastor of certain Churches. We congratulate Dr. Fleming on the outcome, and we congratulate Alamance County on having its welfare work in such competent hands as Dr. Fleming has proved himself to be in actual practice. Dr. Fleming's home is still at Burlington, and while he serves Alamance County as welfare officer, he will continue to serve the Churches at Pleasant Hill, Haw River, and Union, Alamance.

FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH, NORFOLK.

The official board enjoyed a most encouraging meeting on November 21st, after midweek service of our Church. Among several items of interest to the board, the following three are noteworthy:

A report of the result of our roll-call day was made by Mrs. M. L. Bryant, chairman of the financial board. On the day of the roll call two sermons were preached on "Stewardship of Our Means." As the names were called and answered to, a card was given to each member, and they were allowed to make their annual pledge in connection with the duplex envelope system which obtains in our Church. In this quiet way the pledges amounted to considerably over $3,000. This will lighten considerably the personal interviewing of the remaining unpledged members of the Church, and which will carry us easily above our $4,000 mark. This was encouraging, as it indicates real progress.

The board adopted a motion to have printed weekly a four-page bulletin, carrying all our announcements, plans and achievements for each person attending our Sunday services.

The Boy Scouts have been given a large place in our educational program, and the board agreed to set aside a liberal sum each month to aid them in their work. We have been fortunate in securing Linwood Barrett, a young Christian gentleman, who has been practically over the whole world under military orders, and who has large experience in Boy Scouting as scoutmaster. We are expecting our Boy Scouts to make us proud of them, both now and in the years to come.

Incidentally, I might add that the preaching of Christ and Him crucified seems still to have its drawing power, as our audiences are slowly growing. The gallery was in use last Sunday night, and our board is praying that it may be increasingly needed.

Norfolk, Va. JOHN G. TRUITT.

BRO. FLOWERS IN THE VIRGINIA VALLEY.

DEAR BRO. BARRETT:

I closed a protracted service at Mt. Olivet Church, in Green County, last week, in which we had twenty-eight professions, mostly young people. I don't think I ever conducted a more orderly meeting. They listened with intense interest to my discourse; and when I asked them for a decision on the matter, they just quietly rose, came to the front and offered themselves for membership in the Church.

Four others expressed themselves as expecting to take membership with the Church on my return. In all, the Church is counting on about thirty-three new members. The Church thinks this good news, and wishes it mentioned in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. I am spending a week with the people on the Page Valley charge. I may take charge of the work until a pastor can be secured. A. R. FLOWERS.

THE BIBLE STANDARD OF CHRISTIAN PURITY.

"And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as He is pure."—1 John 3:3.

Some one has said, if you wish to please the people, tell them what they wish to hear; but if you wish to do them good, then tell them what they need to hear. It is better to do the people good rather than merely to please them. I wonder which my readers would prefer—to have me please them, or to do them good! Which do you prefer—to be pleased with this sermon or to get good from reading it?

So far as I am concerned, I cannot stop to consider such a matter, since my commission reads: "Preach the Word." I must do that or lose my reward, if not my salvation. I am, therefore, coming to you with a message which may not please some of you, but I am assured that all need it—need to hear my message and then put it into practice. My message is vital to your everlasting happiness. Will you hear it? Will you need it?

My text is very plain. It brings an urgent message to every hearer. It sets forth the fact that "every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as He (Christ) is pure." What is the hope referred to in the text? It is the hope of seeing Christ and being like Him. Than this, there is no hope to be more desired. To see Christ and to be like Him is supreme bliss. To attain it will bring greater riches than all the gold of the earth. May we, then, consider—

1. That the Children of God have a very definite and well-grounded hope.

They have a blessed hope of eternal life in Christ. That hope rests on the fact that we are living a life which will enable us to be like Him and to see Him as He is. But how shall we know that we have this hope? If we take Him as our standard, we shall purify ourselves even as He is pure. That is plain enough. This hope will then become an anchor to the soul, and it will keep us in the midst of every storm that blows.

At some of the bathing resorts, a rope is fastened to a stronghold on the shore, and then it is taken away out into the water and fastened to a strong and steadfast stake. Then the bathers know that as long as they hold to this rope they are safe—they may go as far as it goes without danger. It is much that way in the raging storms and the turbid waters of sin. Holding on to the hope of seeing Christ and being like Him in glory, we shall give diligent attention to the matter of purifying ourselves, even as He is pure. If we turn loose this hope, then we are indeed lost in the waters of the overwhelming flood of the sins of the flesh.

2. The nature of this hope.

It is as an anchor of the soul. The figure here is that of a mighty ship at sea in a storm. In her desperation, she casts anchor and is safe, riding the billows in safety. So it is with a true Christian. In the temptations and battles of life, the hope of seeing Jesus, as He is, and of being like Him forever, that is indeed an anchor to the soul which keeps steady and true, even in the midst of Satan's assaults. Remember, if we have the hope, we keep ourselves clean—not will do it some day, but we do it now—we keep ourselves clean because we have this ever-living hope in Christ. The man or the woman who has this hope sets himself or herself bravely to the task of keeping clean.

3. The basis of this hope is the promises of God.

That is the way Paul regarded the basis. He said: "Having, therefore, these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and the spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God."—3 Cor. 7:1.

That language is plain, very plain. The promises of God give His people this blessed hope, and this hope prompts us to cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit. But what is the filthiness of the flesh and the spirit? It is anything which outwardly pollutes the body and inwardly the soul. The two seem to be very closely connected. The promises of God make the foundation for this hope.

"Standing on the promises that cannot fail,
When the howling storms of doubt and fear assail—
By the living Word of God, I shall prevail."

4. What is the influence of this hope?

It induces the believer to give up his sins. It is in giving up one's sins that he does the human part in self-cleansing. Having given them up, the cleansing blood completes the work, and we walk in the light of God. But what is the difference between the cleansing power of the blood of Christ and the cleansing of ourselves. Jesus does the one and the believer does the other. In other words, Jesus forgives and then we put them (our sins) away. It is the sin which you love that is besetting you. The fact that you love a sin is no indication that it is harmless to you, or that you will be excused from its consequences in blighting your soul and destroying your hope of seeing Jesus and being like Him. The opposite is true. The fact that you love a sin is in itself evidence that it is consuming your spiritual life and, therefore, needs to be given up at once.

Do you, can you, realize that the sin you love is making you more and more unlike Jesus every day you live? It, therefore, needs to be given up at once, if you would be saved from its everlasting blight. There is no doubt that the ugly habit is making you more and more unlike Jesus. If you continue its slave, you will lose that blessed hope in Christ. While waiting for a train one day at Basic City, Va., I saw a boy approaching the station. He was almost the image of a corpse then, but he was smoking a cigarette. I said to him in a kindly way as he came up: "Do you not know that smoking is killing you?" "Yes," he said, "I know it." "Well, then, why do you not quit the habit?" "Oh," he said, "I like it." "Yes," said I, "but it is killing you." He again said, "I know it; it has had me down twice already." I said: "How did it attack you?" He replied: 'In my lungs." "Well, why do you not quit it; it is going to kill you?" He replied: "Yes, I know it, but I like it." His love of tobacco was no evidence that it was not destroying his life. It was quite the reverse—it was evidence that it was killing him, but all I could get out of him was "I like it."

Now, if he had had this blessed hope of seeing Jesus while he was thus poisoning himself, would you not think it time to seek another Saviour? You would not wish a Saviour who was like that boy? Certainly not. These habits tie us down in sin and so keep us far off from Christ. Did you say "I cannot give up the sinful habit which I have?" Well, then, you cannot keep the Christ. If you prefer the habit above your Lord, you surely cannot keep Him. Take your choice. It is sin or holiness. May God help you to decide well and wisely to keep the hope of seeing Christ and being like Him in the hereafter.

HOLLAND.

A young man of the Holland Church, now away at college, writes: "I am working very hard in my subjects, and I am also trying to do my bit for the promotion of God's work."

The Holland Church was greatly benefited by being host to the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference in its one hundred and third annual session. Friendships were formed and associations experienced which will long be remembered and cherished by our people. Too, Conference calls for a co-operation of effort that can but have a salutary influence upon the people of a Church.

We were greatly rejoiced by the presence every day of Dr. W. W. Staley, veteran Suffolk pastor and veteran of Conventions and Conferences. Dr. Staley was instrumental in bringing about the transfer of the old Hebron Church from Carsville to Holland, and for that reason he was just a little more welcome in our midst.

Miss Eldredge and Dr. H. Shelton Smith remained over the afternoon Conference, adjourned and met with the board of the Holland Sunday School in an advisory capacity. Before leaving, they presented plans for the reorganization of the school which were adopted by the school Sunday, November 11th. The reorganization will go into effect the first of the year, and includes grading throughout and the use in all departments except the adult of the International Graded Lessons.

In the death of Mrs. Anna Mary Harrell, the Holland Church loses one of its oldest members. Mrs. Harrell was a member of the old Hebron Church, and when the transfer of the Church was made, she came to Holland with it and had been a member here since. On Friday night, November 2nd, Mrs. Harrell had the misfortune to fall off the porch of her home and break her hip. Though every effort was made in her behalf, she died at the Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Tuesday night, the 6th. The funeral services were held at the Holland Church Thursday, conducted by the pastor, with Rev. Geo. D. Eastes and Rev. L. F. Paulette assisting.

The Holland pastor and Deacon E. T. Holland, of the Holy Neck Church, were companion travelers to Raleigh, N. C., Friday the 9th, to attend the meeting of the Board of Religious Education.

Monday, December the 3rd, has been designated "Church-Debt Drive Day," and an effort is going to be made to clean up the debt. If the members of the Holland Church rally to this as they did to the plans and tasks of the Conference entertainment, the debt will be met.

The Loyalist says: "No pastor, superintendent or president should make social, business or Church plans that will interfere with his attendance on his Conference, Convention and the Chautauqua at Elon." REPORTER.

If any nation wants power or trade, the best way to get it is to dismiss fear. If France and Germany fear each other, it is because they say past history makes them entertain fear. But it goes without saying that their mutual fear so far has led to nothing but misery and death on both sides.

The Sunday School Times, the best all-round Sunday School paper published in this country, gave its issue of November 24th to "Books and Reading." It is not a bad idea, since so many of its readers need to be guided in the choice of books for reading at home.

THANKSGIVING A RELIGIOUS ACT.

"We are coming near to Thanksgiving Day." What do we mean by that? We mean that Christian men and women, in acknowledgment of God's goodness to the children of men, have a special day for giving special thanks unto God for His many blessings during the year. Then it also means the thanksgiving spirit for any day and for all days. Here we refer to the special day for Thanksgiving, as is our custom for each year in the end of harvest time. It is a sort of retrospect, when we take a view of God's goodness to the people for all the blessings of the year—when the people come together to unite their praise and thanksgiving unto God because He has dealt so graciously with us during the year as we have broken the soil, as we have planted, as we have cultivated and as we have gathered in from the fields of that which He has given to us. It is, therefore, essentially a religious act on the part of the people as they assemble in their Churches and places of worship to give thanks unto Almighty God for His lavish dealing with us through the years as we have labored to gain for ourselves and our families a living. Yes, that is a religious act, and it ought to be the forerunner of great spiritual sacrifices unto the Lord. Because He has dealt so graciously with us in our temporal affairs, we wish to return unto Him acts of thanksgiving as an expression of our appreciation for all His goodness to us. This is the natural order to us, and this order is nothing new, for in the days of Hezekiah the thought prevailed. In 2 Chron. 29:27, we read:

> "And when the burnt offering began,
> The song of the Lord began."

That is, when the burnt offerings began, then the song of the Lord began. In other words, as soon as there was a real burnt offering given by the people, just then were there hearts so filled with the joy of the Lord that they began to sing His praise, began to send forth the wonderful music of the songs of gratitude, as expressive of the high appreciation of the people who had received in their crops and in the labors of their hands such a lavish expression of all the good that God had sent to them. How beautiful was their spirit and their praise!

Let the people begin their sacrifice to the Lord and then the songs of praise would begin to flow. In other words, when the people made a sacrifice, the Lord so filled their hearts with praise that they involuntarily began to send forth praise unto His name. How beautiful!

Thanksgiving in those days did not mean a big feast for the stomach of the worshiper, but a big feast for the heart in the worship of God, and this in a very real sense was the strength of the people. They did not hold a thanksgiving as the occasion of a big dance, or a gay card party. Oh, no! It was an occasion of humiliation, because of their sins, and then an occasion of rejoicing because of the favor of the Lord. They did not in those days have a big ball on Thanksgiving Day, nor a big hunt, nor an annual frolic. It was a genuine recognition of the hand of God in dealing with them in their individual, home and national life. God had spoken to the people of His love for them, and because of this expression of His love, they gave forth thanks unto His holy name, and great blessings followed upon the people of Israel. How beautiful was it all, as showing forth God's goodness and mercy and then as an acknowledgment of the same on the part of the people. The Bible tells us that they sang forth the praises of God, not of themselves, nor of their own greatness, but they sang unto the Lord, and it marked a great period of development in Israel.

This song of praise, then, meant a confession of sin and an acknowledgment of their dependence upon God. And, of course, this all meant the beginning of a real revival of the true spirit of godliness. How blessed it all is! Let us begin by making true and real sacrifices unto God, and then so much of His fullness will flow out to us, as His people, as to bring to our midst a real revival of religion. This resulted in the binding of the people unto God by the cords of everlasting love. The true worship of God's people meant a genuine consecration of life and means to God. It consisted as acts of worship in—

1. Confession of and turning away from sin.

2. It meant a cleansing of the sanctuary—cleaning of the house of the Lord. And that means a cleansing of the heart of the believer, for the believer is the temple of the Holy Ghost.

3. It also meant a renewal of the covenant God had made with them. That covenant needed renewing because the people had broken it, and this was the coming back unto God that individual lives and their national existence might be renewed and given unto God in deeper significance, a fuller giving of the life unto God. You see this act of consecration meant much for the life of the individual who was making the consecration. In 2 Chron. 29:31, we read:

"Now, ye have consecrated yourselves unto the Lord, come near and bring sacrifices and thank-offerings into the house of the Lord. And the congregations brought in sacrifices and thank-offerings: and as many as were of a free heart, burnt-offerings."

The outgrowth of this sort of life appears in the life of the true believer in three forms:

1. In self-consecration to God and His service.

2. In heart-gladness. This was in evidence in the days of old when all the congregation worshipped and sang the songs of praise to God.

3. In real liberality unto the cause of God in the world. Whenever there is a real development of rich Christian experiences, almost immediately the people begin to give expressions of praise unto God. As we have freely received, even so freely should we give unto God.

Thanksgiving means a great deal to the life and service of men and women and children who are really the Lord's and who are seeking, diligently seeking, to render a service unto God. Let us make this Thanksgiving the best we have yet had, and we believe it will mean so much more to the people of God!

Remember, a big feast is not necessarily any service rendered unto God. Remember, if we make Thanksgiving an occasion of mere jollity, of frolicking and frivolity, that does not contribute to the building of strong life in Christ. Do not put in as a plea for the fun and frivolity on such occasion that God does not call for long-faced Christians. That may be true, if used in the right sense, but neither does He call for the frivolous in heart and mind. He wants men and women and children who know Him and who have not long faces because of a lack of frivolity, but He does wish for men and women who worship Him because of their real love and devotion to Him—because they love Him. Make the offering, and the song will begin.

NOT AN ALARMIST, BUT LET US FACE THE FACTS.

Because we do what we can, as it seems to us, to combat the flood of error which is trying and trying hard to sweep over our fair land, we have sometimes been regarded as an alarmist, but we make bold to say that when this writer becomes much alarmed over a situation, you may safely conclude that where there is so much smoke there must be some fire, and where there is fire, attention should be quickly given, or it may quickly get beyond control, and then being alarmed will not put the fire out or save from destruction that which it has seized. The following is from a recent issue of the Biblical Recorder, and gives us some idea of a certain kind of work that is being carried on at this time, and if we understand it there is hardly any more dangerous work among the people of God today than this. We ask that our men and women who think, will take this matter to heart enough to give it careful attention, and if possible solve the question as to where such work will lead our boys and girls. Notice how few of our teachers in this country are Christian men and women. Some one has raised a rumpus because a Roman Catholic priest says our public schools are godless. Before we censure him, let us make sure that he is wrong. This eminent educationalist declares that after he has made a careful investigation, that not but nineteen and four-tenths per cent of our teachers are Christian. If that is not alarming, we should like to ask what can be more so, for such a country as ours. The fact which is just the opposite of what we have just given is this, for which this same Dr. Leuba is responsible. He says that fifty-nine and three-tenths per cent of our teachers do not believe in God at all, while twenty-four and eight-tenths of our teachers are agnostics, and an agnostic is a first cousin to one who does not believe in God at all. Shall we go on and pay our taxes to have our children taught the ways of death through our public school teachers? They refuse to allow us to have the Bible read or taught in many of the public schools of this country, on the grounds that the Bible is not acceptable to all, and therefore it should not be taught. But stop, if we cannot have the Bible taught in our schools because there are parents who object to it, we should like to know, in the name of common sense, why infidels, agnostics and unbelievers generally are allowed to teach infidelity, agnosticism and the hatred of God to the children of Christian parents? We wish you to read the following from the pen of Dr. Leuba, one of the leading educationalists of the country, and say to us: Is it not time for the Christian people to begin a serious look into the matter of the faith, or may be more correctly the *un*faith, or the lack of faith of the teachers who are shaping the thoughts of the rising generation of the American people? We think it is time to awake out of our sleep and see that this effort to make our children infidels, agnostics and unbelievers in God and His truth generally is put to a stop. The longer we let it go, the harder it will be to put a stop to it, and much harder to rescue our children from the clutches of unbelief. Read as follows:

Some Distressing Facts.

I am sending you these clippings from a great speech made by President Weaver, of Mercer University, Georgia. He quotes from the findings made by an eminent educational authority, Prof. Leuba, of the class of psychology of Bryn Mawr. These facts are distressing beyond measure, but should be known by our leaders.

The entire speech of Dr. Weaver will repay reading, published in the Baptist Educational Bulletin, Birmingham, Ala.—F. P. Hobgood.

"One of the foremost scholars in the North,

Dr. J. H. Leuba, professor of psychology in Bryn Mawr, has made a thorough scientific study of the religious attitude of the leading professors in our American universities and reaches the conclusion that the beliefs in a personal God and in personal immortality are disappearing in the thinking of those who are recognized as America's greatest teachers. In conclusion, he says: 'The essential problem facing organized Christianity is constituted by the widespread rejection of its two fundamental dogmas—a rejection apparently destined to extend parallel with the diffusion of knowledge and the moral quality which makes for eminence in scholarly pursuits.' He finds that skepticism and pronounced unbelief increase as one passes upward from class to class in college.

"As the investigation passed from the students to professors, the results became more disturbing. He groups these teachers under two heads—'the lesser' and 'the greater,' including only those whose names in 'America's Men of Science,' a book in which there is listed the scientists of the United States, are indicated as being eminent authorities in their chosen field of science. There is much more skepticism and unbelief among the greater than among those of lesser standing. Limiting the summary of his report to the class of university professors described as 'the greater,' the following percentages are given: Only thirty-four and eight-tenths per cent of these eminent men of science who teach physics believe in God; sixty-five and two-tenths per cent of them are either agnostics or disbelievers; only sixteen and nine-tenths per cent of the biological scientists believe in God; twenty-four and eight-tenths per cent are agnostics and doubters, while fifty-nine and three-tenths per cent do not believe in God at all; thirty-two and nine-tenths per cent of the professors of history believe in a personal God and the remainder are either doubters or disbelievers. The sociologists are undertaking in a scientific way to solve the problems of human society. Nineteen and four-tenths of these representatives and eminent teachers believe in God, while nearly three-fourths of them disbelieve altogether in the personality and the sovereignty of God. The psychologists are today recognized as exerting the greatest influence in the domain of education. Every one who is preparing to teach is expected to study thoroughly this science. The reports which Dr. Leuba secured as the result of his questions addressed to the psychologists are the most disturbing of all. He found only five of these men out of thirty-eight eminent psychologists to whom he addressed his inquiries believed in a personal God, and only three who declared a belief either in conditional or unconditional immortality."

A VISIT TO THE NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

On Tuesday, November 20th, we left Elon College, N. C., for the North Carolina Conference. At Burlington, just four miles from Elon, I was permitted to take a seat in the automobile of Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., and found, besides himself, Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., and Mrs. Carroll. It is some sixty miles from Burlington to Wake Chapel, where the Conference was to convene at 7:30 P. M. the same evening. We made the trip in good time to get supper and then repair to the Church for the opening session. We drove up just at supper time to the home of Bro. K. B. Johnson, but found them already for us and a good supper was awaiting us.

After a little feast, Dr. Lankford took us out to the Church. Here we met our first surprise of this trip. We found a handsome Church edifice just erected, constructed of brick. It looked like some city Church, lighted by electricity and out in the country. What a fine place for such a work! The Church looks as if they must ordinarily have big congregations, and I think they do, for the building is not only handsome and comfortable, but it is a large building. We heard a man ask Mr. J. W. Stout, who is building Elon College buildings at this time, what he thought such a building ought to cost. He said he had not had a chance to look it over carefully, but he guessed thirty thousand dollars, and at best not less than twenty-five thousand dollars. This was our own pastoral charge in the year 1882, where we served as a preacher. It does not look like the same place. There is still one thing unusual about this pastorate, viz: the present pastor is a member of the Church and has been pastor now for many years. It is not often that we see a minister serve the Church of his boyhood days for as much as ten years at a time, and he is likely to stay yet many years, unless some of our big and strong Churches should induce him to leave them, and we do not believe there is much chance for a thing of that sort to happen; besides, as we understand it, another part of his field has called him for life. The pastor is Rev. J. Lee Johnson, and he is one of the best Gospel preachers we have heard.

But I must tell some Conference news. The Conference was opened, with Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D., in the chair. After devotional services, Rev. H. Russell Clem, of the Greensboro First Church, preached the annual sermon, and we must say he did it well. He preached on the "Mission of the Christian Church," and it was a very strong effort. Though we have known Bro. Clem for many years, we had not been privileged to hear him preach prior to this time. His effort was not only fine, as it presented the principles of the Christian Church, but as we estimated it, it was a fine effort from the standpoint of the orator.

Wednesday morning, Conference came together at about 9 o'clock, with President Wicker in the chair and Bro. Stanley C. Harrell at the secretary's desk. After opening, Bro. H. W. Johnson, a son of Hon. K. B. Johnson, delivered the address of welcome, and he did it well. We have rarely ever heard an address of welcome that was so faultless in every way. His manner was modesty personified, and his thought was fitting and beautifully expressed. It was not too long and seemed to mean just what was said. Rev. Stanley C. Harrell gave the response in well-chosen words, showing the high appreciation of himself and the Conference for the kind and brotherly hospitality extended the body. The organization was effected by the election of Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D., as president, and Bro. Harrell as secretary. Mr. W. J. Ballentine is treasurer. Quite a discussion arose over the legality of the present Conference, or rather over the legality of the election of delegates. The point made against its legality was that the delegates had been chosen not by the local Churches as the law requires, but by unauthorized Conferences. After some considerable discussion, the matter was left to stand without immediate interruption.

The report on home missions called out a good bit of interest, as did also the report on foreign missions. The financial interests of the Conference seemed to be pretty good, but with a view to larger results hereafter, it was decided to put in place of the apportionment a budget committee, so that hereafter the Churches will be asked to raise their money for Conference purposes under the budget system.

Wednesday night was given to four addresses, as follows: "How to Reach Our Young People," by Miss Pattie Coghill; "Women and the Kingdom," by Mrs. W. C. Carroll, of Burlington; and by Mr. Joe W. Stout, on the "Kingdom and its Building," and by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, on the "Kingdom and Missions." All of the speakers did well. Bro. Joe W. Stout, of Sanford, was unknown to the Conference as a speaker, and so they were not prepared to expect such a fine address as he gave. It was well conceived, well delivered and well received by the people.

Thursday was the closing day. Much of the work was routine, but as there was no program (the programs were not delivered, though ordered), and about two o'clock the Conference adjourned. The closing service was a consecration service, conducted by Dr. G. O. Lankford, of Burlington.

COMMUNION WITH GOD.

Here is something worth your time and your thinking. Do you have a definite time for communion with God? That is just what every Christian should have, for we lose largely and often far more than we think when we neglect to seek to have communion with God. A recent writer says:

Communion of Spirit is Central Idea.

The filial attitude is what God most desires in all His children, and prayer is the chief means of promoting it. God wants us to talk to Him. We may tell Him freely of ourselves and of others. We may present our needs and ask His help. We may discourse, if we wish, on our present blessings, showing our gratitude and affection. To shut up prayer within narrow limits is to discourage the soul. Just as a father is interested in the slightest detail of a child's living, so our Heavenly Father delights in the full confidence we repose in Him.

Allow God to Speak to Us.

The highest type of fellowship is where two souls mutually express themselves. One must not do all the talking to the exclusion of the other. Some people never give God a chance to speak to them. Prayer is not only our address to God, but God's reply in our own souls. To listen is fully as important as to speak.

Enter the Inner Closet.

That famous word of Scripture concerning the entrance into the inner closet and of shutting the door has too often been limited to a physical interpretation—like locking a door to a private room in the home. Jesus perhaps had a deeper meaning attached to these words. May He not have had in mind the entering of the soul into the inner recesses of its selfhood? Our lives are lived objectively most of the time. Prayer should mean the closing of the door to the world of sense, and entering into the world of motives, ideals, purposes. There you will meet God. What you pray for in that world will come to pass surely; your reward will be manifested openly.

Jesus Communed with God.

Jesus thanked God for hiding certain things from the wise and revealing them unto babes. He communed with God, as recorded in the marvelous prayer of John's seventeenth chapter. Think of Gethsemane's prayer. These will be forever the standard toward which every Christian should strive.

As editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, we can but feel gratified that the people are so well pleased with their Church paper, as has been shown in the various Conference meetings this fall. Such estimates but stimulates us to do our best for the cause we all love.

CONTRIBUTIONS

ELON LETTER.

Every now and then I chance to fall into conversation with some big business man of our Church relative to more consistent planning of the program of our Church. Recently, I had such a pleasure, and but for his modesty I would print his name. The best I can do under the circumstances is to give publicity to his ideas. It is needless to say I most heartily agree with him. He is a prince in our Church. I sometimes wonder if it would not be a good idea to elect such a man business manager of our denomination. I do not know that he would consider it, but the idea is sound, and the results would be astonishing, I am confident.

"It is clear," he said, "that we have not sat around the directors' table and deliberately planned our work. There is every evidence of ill-considered efforts at money-getting." And then he roasted the writer for trying to get an extra offering taken in Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies for the Board of Christian Education. I could never satisfy him that I was right except as an emergency matter, though he said he would contribute to the offering when it came to his Church, because he is loyal and no knocker.

When I inquired what he meant by the "directors" in the Christian Church, he laughed and said: "You have them under another name, or several names in fact, such as field secretaries, superintendent of the orphanage, college presidents, Convention and Conference officers, committee or board chairmen. Now, my idea is that these directors, or leaders, should get together for a week, if neecssary, and plan their work just like we do in a success, and then work your plan. You wrote something like this about a year ago in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and I thought every leader would immediately fall for the idea, but so far as I can see, the whole idea was still born. Why don't you keep stirring things till you get some action?"

Well, we talked a long time and discussed matters pro and con, but our conferences are now over and the same old methods obsess us. What this intelligent man of business wants us to do is to adopt a financial budget, coupled with an intelligent method of education, so that as we give through the budget we will know for what we give and why. I have a letter from him today insisting that this is our only financial hope.

Then he is for our educational program. He favors the correlation plans we have projected, and has read them, making notes as he read. He says we are working along the right lines there, though our method of financial support is "punk" for this great work—yes, that is the word he used.

And he wants our literature read. "You can't get far without THE CHRISTIAN SUN in the South," he said. I inquired if he liked our publications, and he said he did. I think he would like anything just so he was sure our Church had put it out. In a low tone, he suggested that perhaps we could, in the directors' meeting, plan a little more constructive program for our periodicals, with perhaps a little less emphasis on the money side.

"Do you think," I inquired, "our people should write more books?" "That is it," he replied; "we have never done enough along that line." And then he told me the books he owned written by our people, some of them by "yours truly." Now, you can understand why I think he is a great man.

But, laying all pleasantries aside, why don't we do something to make the ideas of such a man effective in our Church organization? Or do we think he is wrong? Why not do a little writing on this theme in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and why not discuss such a plan fully at the coming session of the Southern Christian Convention?

W. A. HARPER.

FROM BRO. EASTIS.

MY DEAR DR. BARRETT:

Many of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN are friends of mine, and because I believe they are interested in me I am sending this rather personal note for publication. I am happy to say that, after many months of critical illness, from which there seemed no hope of recovery, the tide apparently turned in my favor, and now for a period of two months or more I have been gradually regaining lost ground. Although far from well, as yet, I have improved sufficiently that, on the advice of the "one" young specialist, Dr. Devine, of Norfolk, who alone held on to my case while all others dismissed me with the "death sentence," I have taken the pastorate of the Holy Neck Church. I may never again be rugged enough to return to the strain and exaction of the evangelistic field, but I am happy to think that, without question, judging from present indications, I will be able to be of some service to my Master and these splendid people here in the country where the program of services is not so heavy. The people here have received me in such a fine spirit. Their kindness and consideration for me in helping to make the work just as easy as possible, that I might have a chance to regain my health more rapidly, is appreciated beyond my power of expression. I can't thank them enough, and I am praying that I may have the opportunity to show my gratitude. The Holy Neck congregation is great in Christian spirit, as well as in every other way.

I wish here also to thank my friends all over the country who have been so kind in their expressions of sympathetic interest and assurance of earnest prayers in my behalf during the year of illness. Sickness is not without its blessings, and one of these blessings surely is the revelation of real friendships. My heart has been cheered scores of times by letters, flowers and other means of expression from various parts of the country. I wish I could show my appreciation in a more tangible way.

But most of all do I appreciate the prayers of faith that have been offered for my recovery. There have been thousands of prayers sent to the throne for me, and scores and scores of people in various parts of the country where I have conducted meetings, as well as elsewhere, have assured me that they were praying definitely for my restoration by divine intervention, if not otherwise. I am happy to register my belief that this has been the chief source of my upgrade. God heals today when conditions are met, and His will is not violated in the healing. "Man's extremity is God's opportunity," and sometimes when medical science fails He steps in and does the work. So, of course, above all and everything, I am thankful to Him for the promise of the future as well as the benefits of the past. All good things come from Him.

Coveting the continued prayers of my friends, and again with assurance of my heartfelt gratitude, I am, Sincerely,

GEO. D. EASTES.

IS IT WORTH TRYING?

The Church paper seems to be a problem with all peoples. It is hard to make it pay—we mean to make it pay its actual expenses. Various plans have been proposed, but not many of them have worked well enough to command attention for any great while. The Western Recorder tells of an instance when a certain plan worked well, but it was not kept up; it was allowed to drop out. The Recorder says:

"The following paragraph from the Baptist Advance is worthy of some thought: 'One of the strong Churches in the State a few years ago had the Baptist Advance in its budget and going to every family represented in its membership, and then for some reason failed to renew it. A few days ago the pastor of this Church said that he thought the Church had lost not less than $2,000 by failing to have the paper going to all its members. Putting the paper in the budget is a paying proposition.'"

We should like to see that plan worked long enough to test it out and see whether it will work or not. If it could not be worked in a Church, where instead of knocking the idea, good earnest and consistent help should be given, we believe the Church which had the courage to test it out in full would reap a large reward, for we believe it would much increase the steady and solid character of the people who now take but little interest in the Church. If the Church is what it ought to be, we believe great gain would come to the Church which stood by the idea. If the paying part of the Church furnishes preaching for all the members, why should they not do so by the Church paper? Let us try it!

We hear a rumor to the effect that the Church composing Rev. J. L. Foster's field, have gotten together and given him a new Ford auto. That is fine, and we are glad his people were so moved to act. Pastors are getting such consideration frequently nowadays, but the editor does not hear any such music coming his way, and yet we do not know but that it would be easier to give the editor a car than it is to give the pastor one, and for the reason that the editor has a much larger number of parishioners than does any one of our pastors, but the pastor's friends can easily get together and talk it up, whereas the editor's friends cannot get together and make such a move. It is all right to let it be so, for if either must be left out, it should be the editor, not that he has not needs in this class, but the pastor's work is more active and he needs a way to travel. We rejoice with you, Bro. Foster, and your people as well. They have done a fine thing, and Bro. Foster has gotten a good thing. Let other Churches do likewise, for there are many needy pastors—pastors who need a car but do not feel able to make such a purchase.

Let not the secretaries of the several conferences who have not yet sent in the minutes of their respective Conferences remember the order of the Convention at Henderson—that the minutes must be in the hands of the publisher by December 1, 1923. Now, if this request of the Convention is to be complied with, not much time can be spared. December 1st is now close at hand. Send the minutes of your Conference to the editor of this paper, at Elon College, N. C., and do so as promptly as possible, as the publisher will need them at the earliest moment he can possibly have them. So far, only three Conferences have sent in their minutes. If the annual is delayed, we shall have to show cause for delay. Will the cause point its finger to you?

Questions and Answers.

Question.—Why is it that the people of our country pay so much more for the support of the government than they do for the support of the Church and its missions and enterprises?—Mary.

Well, as it seems to us, it is because the government requires the payment of so much, while the Church asks for our gifts as a free-will offering, and not as a tax. It seems to us that we ought to be as liberal, and even more so with the Church than with the government. Here is a very thoughtful article from the Presbyterian of the South, setting forth certain facts along this line: "Battleships have often been said to be one of the great causes of war. This was the reason that led President Harding to call the Washington conference on limitation of armament. Under the agreement reached by that conference and signed by the four leading naval powers of the world, no more new battleships can be built by these powers until 1931, but each nation was allowed to complete a few ships, which had already been begun. One of these ships which the United States was allowed to complete was the Colorado, which has just been finished and turned over to the government. It is said to be the most powerful fighting machine that was ever built. One of the reasons that the people of this country ought to rejoice in the fact that the building of such ships has come to an end is the tremendous cost of building them. This latest monster of the deep cost the people of the United States $27,000,000. If the mad race for building warships had not been stopped, this country would, no doubt, soon have been building such ships by the score. Of course the cost of these ships and of their maintenance must be provided for by the people. Very few people make any serious complaint about the taxes imposed by the government. We sometimes wonder how much would be paid for the support of the government if it had to be done voluntarily, as is the cast in raising money for the support of the Church and its work. It is very probable that the part of the support of the United States navy paid each year by the members of the Southern Presbyterian Church equals at least the cost of the Colorado. It is interesting to see what the cost of this ship would amount to in our foreign mission work. We now have in the field nearly 500 missionaries. It is estimated that it will take $3,000,000 to give them the equipment that they need. Suppose we allow $15,000,000 for equipment for a largely increased force, there would be enough left to support 5,000 missionaries for a year. Which will bring peace to the world quickest, a great battleship like the Colorado or 5,000 fully equipped missionaries working for the establishment of the kingdom of the Prince of Peace? Suppose these missionaries could be sent into war-torn Europe to aid the oppressed people of God on that great continent! Could they accomplish as much in bringing about peace as will be accomplished by any fear that may be caused by the Colorado, the greatest engine of destruction ever devised by man? If it is well for this country to spend hundreds of millions of dollars for its navy, in the hope that it may thereby maintain peace, is it not part of wisdom, even from a worldly point of view, to spend at least as much in gaining the good will of other nations by giving them the religion of Jesus Christ, the principles of which will bring peace not only to individuals, but to nations as well?"

Question.—What is the unpardonable sin, or the sin against the Holy Ghost, which has never forgiveness, neither in this world nor in the world to come?—Sarah.

Matthew 12:31, 32 reads: "Wherefore I say unto you all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men; but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men. And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come."

The occasion for these words was the charge which the Pharisees brought against Jesus that he was casting out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of devils. Jesus said that He was casting them out by the Spirit of God. Now, as He was casting out devils by the Spirit of God, the Pharisees said He was casting the devils out by the power of Beelzebub, the prince of devils. Now, can you not see that these Pharisees were sinning against the Holy Ghost when they were attributing the power by which Jesus cast out devils to Beelzebub, the prince of the devils; and as we see it, this is the sin that can never have forgiveness, neither in this world, neither in the world to come. From these facts it seems, as I think, quite clear that we sin against the Holy Spirit when we attribute the power by which God's work is done to devils, rather than to the Holy Ghost. To illustrate: a man is holding a series of meetings in a community and many are being saved. Another man comes along and declares that this work is being done by the devil, and we believe he would in so saying be sinning against the Holy Ghost.

Question.—In 1 Thess. 5:23, we read of spirit, soul and body. Is there any distinction between these three? If so, what is the distinction.—Jasper.

The spirit of man is that part of our being by which we have communion with God. We are to worship Him in spirit and in truth, for He seeks only such to worship Him. The soul is that part of man through which, by means of the bodily senses, we have contact with the world. The body of man is the tabernacle in which he dwells till death sets him free. The difference between the body alive and the body dead is simply the presence of life, that most mysterious of God's gifts, and the absence of life, which we call death.

Question.—How many comings of Christ are spoken of in the Bible?—J. T. B.

There are only two comings mentioned in the Bible, so far as I have seen. His first coming was mentioned in Prophecy. See Isa. 7:14. In that passage you get a proof of the doctrine of the virgin birth of Christ—the prophet said He should be born of a virgin. He came first in humiliation and sorrow. His second coming is mentioned many times in the Bible. See Acts 1:11. His second coming will be a coming in great glory and honor.

Question.—If a man or a woman be truly born of the Spirit, can he or she be lost finally?—Thomas.

If a man and his wife have a son born to them, can he ever get to be not a son? How could he "un-son" himself? In John 10:28, we read: "And I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand. My Father which gave them me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand." You see, if a man has eternal life given to him, it would seem quite impossible to take from him a thing that was to last forever. Then Jesus Himself said that as many as received eternal life should never perish, and He also said that no man should ever pluck them out of His hand. No, you may not agree with this position, but if you do not, then go to Jesus and settle it with Him. Do not come back to me with it, for I would have no other authority than that which I now have. See John 10:28.

Question.—Do you think children dying in infancy are lost, and without water baptism?—James.

No, I do not. Water baptism is an ordinance in the Church and I believe in it, but I do not think a child dying without water baptism is lost because he was not baptized or received into the membership of the Church. It is true, the infant has inherited a sinful nature, and as soon as it reaches the period of responsibility, the child will need the regeneration which the Spirit gives to every true child of God, but if it should die before it reaches that period, then the atonement of Christ is sufficient to cover the child's need and to be saved from sin.

WHY NOT DOUBLE TRACK IT, DR. PITT?

Dr. R. H. Pitt, the versatile editor of the Religious Herald, is quoted as having said a mighty good thing recently. We must let our readers see it, as they deserve good things just as surely as our Baptist brethren do. Dr. Pitt Says: "Tasks that could not be accomplished by people working singly are easy when many pull together. Many of us have heard the story of the elephant that stampeded because of a swarm of gnats. The elephant did not mind a few gnats around him, but when a large swarm descended upon him and began attacking his eyes and every vulnerable point, something had to move, and something did move."

The Presbyterian of the South caught up that statement and made some fine comments on the same, as follows: "When the members of any Church unite heartily in undertaking any work, no matter how great it may seem to be, something is going to be accomplished. The difficulty in most Churches is that only a small part of the membership will work for the advancement of the interests of the kingdom of God. If all of the members are united under their leaders and will work earnestly and persistently, they can rout any enemy that may be found, no matter though it be the devil himself. In the same way, any work can be accomplished, even to the building up or the removal of what may seem to be mountains. The work of the Church is God-given, and He never gives any Church anything to do which it cannot do under His guidance and with His help. Faith in God, earnest and persistent effort and united work will accomplish wonders."

But we are not quite ready to let Dr. Pitt off. We want him to tell us why his argument for the co-operation among the Baptists would not be just as good if applied to the various denominations. Why not double-track the idea, and so have the same applied to the united effort of all, including all of the Protestant denomination in this fair land of ours. If his idea is good for the Baptists of the country, why would it not be just as good if applied to the union of the denominations? Speak out, Dr. Pitt, and tell us all you know about it, please.

The temptation is pretty strong. Editors are liable to get where they feel like speaking on any subject, and when they have spoken, at least in some instances, they are too apt to think that all has been said that is worth saying. It may be true, but we are standing in some doubt.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

A GREAT CONFERENCE.

The annual session of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference at Bethlehem Church, Alamance County, N. C., last week was indeed and in truth a great Conference. It was harmonious from beginning to end, and breathed the very spirit of Christian fellowship and co-operation. There was not a discordant note struck, and every one present seemed bent upon entering into the Master's service in the most fraternal manner. There were four great and outstanding messages delivered to the Conference. The first was that of Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, N. C., who at the initial session of the Conference preached the opening sermon on "Christian Church Goals." Bro. Harrell was just out of an evangelistic campaign at Durham, and his whole sermon breathed the spirit of evangelism and proclaimed the evangelical call and challenge to the Church. The speaker said the Christian Church could have but one goal, and that was to win souls to Jesus Christ and to build up the kingdom of the Lord in the hearts and the lives of men. Unless the Church had a message that would reach poor lost sinners and call them to repentance, then the Church had no message and no goal worth while. This message moved the Conference mightily, and its helpful influence and impression will tell for good during the Conference year that is to follow.

Dr. P. H. Fleming, president of the Conference, delivered the annual sermon on the second day of the Conference to a large audience, and set forth to the delight of all the necessity of following the old paths versus to indulging recklessly in the spirit of liberalism. This sermon was unanimously requested by the Conference to be published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and when so published will have wide reading and wholesome influence.

Mr. Hermon Eldredge, field worker for field education, stirred the Conference greatly in outlining the program of Christian education and in his interpretation of what Christian education stands for and is trying to do. Bro. Eldredge is an inspirational speaker and never spoke to better effect or with more power than on this occasion. He showed to the satisfaction of all who heard him that Christian education was not abolishing evangelism, but was the true handmaid of every right-thinking evangelist, and its chief aim was to bring youth to a point of conscious decision for Christ, a personal acceptance of Christ as Saviour, and then training and instruction for living in keeping with the program of Christ. Christian education, according to Bro. Eldredge, does not eliminate the evangelist, but makes all Christian workers, Christian teachers, and Christian leaders evangelists in preparing the child for the day and hour of the child's conscious acceptance of Jesus as Lord and Master, and then to direct the child's life in keeping with the spirit and life of the Man of Galilee. Bro. Eldredge is working along the right line, and has a great message which not only appeals to the head, but reaches the hearts and evokes the approval of his hearers.

A similar, and likewise a great message of Christian education was delivered by Rev. J. A. Ledbetter, of Reidsville, N. C., on the closing day of Conference. Bro. Ledbetter did not go over the ground that Bro. Eldredge had covered, but contented himself in dealing with the foundation on which Mr. Eldredge was seeking to build. Bro. Ledbetter said the emphasis through the years had been on adult evangelism, whereas the whole teaching of the Bible showed that the emphasis should be on child evangelism. Abraham was called as a man, but the covenant with Abraham looked immediately to children. Moses was called as a man, but he refused to leave Egypt until the children were included in the call of promise and redemption from bondage. Jesus dealt with men, but He pointed them to children as their models and said: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." The Holy Spirit dealt with an adult, but it was Lydia's household and the jailer's household who were pointed to and emphasized immediately. Child evangelism is God's way; adult evangelism man's way. This is shown in the fact that the great majority of those who are reached for the Church and brought into the kingdom are children, and after the age of twenty-five is past, there is an ever increasing ratio of those who are not reached at all for kingdom service. In old age, very few at all are reached. God's way is the natural way, and the children should be dedicated to God and reached for God and brought to a conscious acceptance and knowledge of God in earlier years. If this were done, there would be an ever increasing number of those who would say, as Christ said at the age of twelve, "Wist ye not that I must be about My Father's business."

There were many other splendid messages and helpful utterances, but these four were noteworthy and will not be forgotten and would serve to make any Conference of Christian workers great. There were forward-looking steps taken by the Conference. Among these was a decision that every Church in the Conference adopt the budget plan and have the every-member canvass at an early date. If this shall be carried out, it will make this the most memorable session in the history of this Conference or any other Conference for many, many years.

A deplorable fact was brought out in the Conference to the effect that this Conference had not produced and sent out to the foreign field a single missionary in all its long history. True, our first missionary to go out, Rev. D. F. Jones, was a member of this Conference when the General Board sent him to Japan, but he was not a child of the Conference, but came to its membership from England. Can any Conference of Christian workers lay claim to greatness or to any real achievement and show that it has made genuine progress until it has obeyed our Lord's great commission, "Go ye into all the world"? There will come a brighter day after a while in our Christian Conferences, and that day will be when there shall be read to the Conferences, or proclaimed in the Conferences, deeds and achievements of missionaries on the foreign field who have been sent out from the Conferences. The battle line for any Christian Conference is a far-flung one, and we cannot be said to be fighting a battle bravely, heroicly, and triumphantly until we have courageous souls out on the front lines for us.

The Conference was beautifully and bountifully entertained by Bethlehem Christian Church, its membership and its friends. It was indeed great to be there. J. O. ATKINSON.

AN ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

The mission secretary stated at the annual session of the Woman's Conference of Eastern Virginia, at Wakefield, in October, that some lamps were needed for our present Church and school building at Fancy Gap, Va., and if any Church or society could furnish same they would be very much appreciated. In response to this request, our Wakefield Church got busy and very graciously donated some lamps. Same were sent to Rev. M. T. Sorrell, Fancy Gap, Va., shipping 17th, Mrs. J. E. Harris, of our Bethlehem Church, point Mt. Airy, N. C. Under date of November Nansemond County, Va., advises that Bethlehem had donated eight lamps to be used in our mountain work, and the same had been properly shipped. We are very grateful indeed to Wakefield and to Bethlehem for their prompt and generous action in supplying this real need. If there are more lamps in the two shipments than are required for the present building, those left over will be kept for the building to be erected at an early date. Very gratefully,

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

BY WM. THORNTON WHITSETT.

Thanksgiving Day in the United States originated with the Pilgrim settlers who came over in 1620. William Bradford, their second Governor, wrote the first Thanksgiving proclamation, and in it used these words: "Our fathers were Englishmen which came over this great ocean, and were ready to perish in this wilderness; but they cried unto ye Lord and He heard their voice, and looked on their adversity. Let them, therefore, praise the Lord, because He is good, and His mercies endure forever." Some would trace Thanksgiving all the way back to the Mosaic law, but this would be straining history; although National and local festivals are of ancient origin, the Hebrews did celebrate their plenteous harvests. but it remained for America to designate a national Thanksgiving Day for each year, so it may be justly claimed as an American custom. Holland's "Harvest Home" is an annual affair, and with other nations special occasions have been set apart as worthy of special thanksgiving. The Pilgrims designated the last Thursday in November, and President Lincoln designated the same day in 1864, and it has been kept up since by each following President annually. Presidents Washington and Madison had asked for special days of thanks for special blessings in 1789 and 1812. The Governor of New York did so in 1817, but really the honor of the institution of the day belongs to the Pilgrim fathers of 1620, whose observance of the day began with Governor Bradford in 1621.

It may, then, be rightly regarded as a peculiar American festival. From New England it spread until, by 1858, it was requested by the Governors of twenty-five States, and it has since been adopted by all our States. More and more each year the spirit of gratitude enters into its observance, and together with this a strong religious element. The Anglo-Saxon verb for thank is thancgian, coming from thencan, meaning "to think." So "think" and "thank" are closely allied, and to be thankful is really to be thinkful of blessings received; unthankfulness really means unthoughtfulness, or means that we are unmindful of blessings and benefits. Thoughtful persons ought always to be thankful persons, and usually are such. Most Protestant Churches now observe the day, and, since 1888, the Roman Catholic Church has had on this day prayers for the State and the nation.

Oh, that men would praise the Lord for His goodness, and for His wonderful works to the children of men!—Bible.

Some hae meat that canna eat,
And some would eat that want it;
But we hae ment, and we can eat,
So let the Lord be thankit.

—Robert Burns.

Let never day nor night unhallowed pass,
But still remember what the Lord hath done.
—Shakespeare.

Gratitude is the fairest blossom which springs from the soul; and the heart of man knoweth nothing more fragrant.—Ballou's Sermons.

I've heard of hearts unkind; kind deeds
With coldness still returning;
Alas! the gratitude of man
Hath often left me mourning.
—Wordsworth.

There is not a more pleasing exercise of the mind than gratitude. If gratitude is due from man to man, how much more from man to his Maker! Every blessing we enjoy, by what means soever it may come to us, is the gift of Him who is the Author of good and the Father of mercies.—Joseph Addison.

If you think how many diseases and how much poverty there is in the world, you will fall down upon your knees with gratitude for so many blessings received at the hand of God.—Sir William Temple.

I know not where His islands lift
Their frended palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care.

WHAT HAS THE COMING OF CHRIST ADDED TO CHRISTIAN TEACHING?

By Mrs. W. D. Foster.

With the earliest history of man, Satan started his work of sin and destruction. Adam and Eve were perfectly satisfied in the garden until Satan came with deception, tempting them with the thought of the forbidden fruit.

He told them they would be as gods, knowing good from evil. If Eve had not raised an argument with Satan, she would have been safe, as we believe, but she ventured to parley with the wicked one, and as a consequence she fell from her life of innocence and purity. Sin followed, bringing trouble to the hearts of men and women everywhere.

Did Eve find Satan's promises true? She did not, but declared as a penalty for his sin that man should live by the sweat of his brow and return to the dust whence he was taken. "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return."

Adam could not transmit to posterity what he did not himself possess. Therefore, there could have been no hope for the fallen race had not God come to the help of the helpless through the sacrifice of His own Son. Thereby He brought within their reach immortality, even though death had passed upon all men, for all had sinned.

Christ brought immortality to light through the Gospel, and it is now true that only through Christ can man have immortality. Jesus said: "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not shall not see life."

Every man may come into possession of this priceless gift, if he will comply with the conditions imposed—continue patient in well doing, seeking by a right life to glorfy God and to honor His Son will get the priceless gift of eternal life.

The divine sentence has gone forth from God—the soul that sinneth it shall die, but through the sacrifice of Jesus, as the Son of God, the sentence has been changed to mean that though a soul sin, yet through repentance and faith it shall live; it shall not die. Therefore, the coming of Christ has changed the awful sentence of death into life eternal.

Liberty, Vance County, N. C.

SOMETIMES IT IS NECESSITY.

Many dear, good people dislike controversy, but what on earth would become of the truth in the hands of men but for the fact that there are men and women who dare to stand for scriptural teachings, no matter what the cost may be? These dear people do not mean that they wish the Church to give up the truth as it is in Christ, but rather than engage in controversy they will give in to let error have its way, and then for the moment at least away goes the truth.

It is not always pleasant to take a bold stand for the truth, but, pleasant or unpleasant, the truth must be maintained, and never was that more true than today, as we see it. We recall an incident in the Ecumenical Conference, which met in New York more than twenty years ago. We were present and was an eye witness to the facts. Some man in the conference called in question some statement of the Bible. Immediately Dr. Arthur T. Pierson arose and disputed the implication and asserted the truth. We heard nothing further in that conference in the way of disputing or calling in question any statement of the Bible. A prompt challenge had put a quietus on the effort. As we understand it, the Lord has made His people the custodians of His truth. If we will not stand for it, then He will call some one else to take our place and put us in the background where we may stand for nothing. If the Lord has given a truth to any one, or a dozen of His people, and they will not defend it when it is assailed, then most surely He has good cause to put us in the background and to entrust the same to another who will take care of it to the best of his ability.

There are some controversialists abroad today who seemingly do everything they can to put the truth at a disadvantage. They even go so far as to make it appear that the men and women who do not agree with them are ignorant, and so not worthy to be credited with sufficient intellect or culture to maintain the truth. That method is unworthy of a man, to say nothing of a Christian, for be it known that some, and a good many, too, of the greatest scholars of the present century stand for the Bible as the revealed will of God. This insinuating and hinting at a lack of scholarship as a reason for not listening to what certain men say as to the truth, we must say we are ashamed of the men and women who do that sort of work.

The Presbyterian of the South has a strong word on this same matter. That our readers may know that the editor of this paper does not stand alone in the present situation, we print what the Presbyterian has to say along a similar line, as follows:

"Modernists have queer ideas of propriety. They advance their views before the public on every possible occasion and are engaged in a most extensive and intensive campaign to spread their doctrines. Their propaganda is the most persistent that is now before the religious world in this country. But, if those who hold to the old doctrine of the religion of Jesus Christ make any statement of their beliefs or make any argument to support their positions, the modernists raise the cry that they are narrow, that they are persecuting those who do not agree with them, and that they are disturbing the peace of the Church. Can any one imagine the Apostle Paul keeping silence when he found that another claiming to be a Christian was preaching 'another gospel?' It may be that Peter thought Paul was narrow and that he was disturbing the peace of the Church, when Paul called him to account at Antioch, because he 'walked not uprightly according to the truth of the gospel.' More Pauls are needed today, that the truth may be maintained and error may be overthrown, regardless of the opinion of heretics."

The Suffolk News of a recent date brings us the following interesting news from the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, recently in session at Holland, Va.: "As chairman of the home mission committee of the Eastern Virginia Conference of the Christian Church, Col. J. E. West said this morning that last year was probably the best in the history of the Conference, which has just closed its one hundred and third session. As chairman of the important committee on home missions, Col. West was in position to note the rapid strides made and the extent of the work. Thousands of dollars are being spent in this Conference district for new Church plants, notably in Norfolk and Dover, Del. One of the first to be completed was the Church at Bethlehem, costing approximately $15,000. The handsome new Church in Richmond, recently dedicated, was erected at a cost of $85,000. Probably the most costly and consequently the handsomest Church of the denomination in the district is the Christian Temple at Norfolk, which is ninety per cent completed. It will cost $250,000 and will be one of the most modern and expensive Church plants in the State. The People's Church, Dover, Del., occupies a unique position in the way of financing. Eldrige R. Johnston, president of the Victor Talking Machine Company, and whose home is in Dover, hearing of the plans to enlarge and improve the Christian Church in that city, suggested that he would be glad to assist if the Church would erect an edifice along right lines. When the plans were drawn meeting his ideas, he donated $70,000 of the $115,000 this construction will cost. It proposes repairs and enlargements to the present Church, the addition of a Sunday School room and a community house, with equipments in keeping. The Conference is steadily enlarging the scope of its work, and the Virginia district is one of the strongest of the denomination."

MONDAY.

PUTTING GOD IN THE LIFE.

"Prove all things. Hold fast to that which is good."—1 Thess. 5:21.

This is a good motto for the week. Try it out each day. I saw an advertisement in a street car once which said, "Hold fast to that which is good. It has stood the test of more than an hundred years.—Johnson's Liniment." These folks were putting life in the sale of their liniment, and selling it upon the merits of the test of years.

Let every one put this acid test to everything, and hold fast to the good, letting go of that which is not. Do not forget that the dear old Bible has stood the test of two thousand years, and that test has proved that it is suited to all people in all their experiences. It is God that makes goodness and righteousness, and justice, and peace, etc., and that has stood the test of two thousand years; and Paul put God in his life by the habit of living these things and reminding others of the way they might do it. Therefore, he said, "Whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things." In other words, we become like what we think about. This has stood the test of the ages. Has any one the right to despise them and say, "I don't believe?"

Prayer.—Dear Heavenly Father, Thou whom none can follow except they hate the evil, and Thou who hast given us a Saviour, redeemed us by His life, and shown us how to follow and have eternal life ourselves; redeem us from evil and from sin day by day by giving us the will to let go that which is not good, and the power to hold on to that which is good. Come, Thou, between us and sin and let the virtue of Thy passion save us. Guide us by this motto this week. This we ask for Jesus' Sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

TAKING A HIGH SEAT.

"Not to think more highly of himself than he ought to think."—Rom. 12:3.

The Pharisee said: "I thank God I am not as other men are," and the only thing left of him is a mental picture of a proud, boastful spirit—a snob, whom we despise. The rich man reviewed his goods and position in life, and said: "I will live fat the balance of my days," and all we know of him is the agony of his hell fire. Christ said that the Publican, who bowed down and cried, "Lord have mercy on me," was far more acceptable than any of these. It is with inspiration we recall his humility which accords with the true type of our Christ and of the Christian.

Christ said, "Follow me," which meant, "Do what I do," and he said, "Greater things than these shall ye do." He never asked any one to do the impossible. His whole preaching was that all things wrong can be righted, and that such is the task of His children. This cannot be done through exalting ourselves, or in a self-centered service. It can be done only by contact with life. Take note how many wrongs you find, and how many of them you may right yourself. When you do so, you will find yourself putting right first, and not position; duty first, and not pleasure; the good of others first and not your own; exercising power without self-assertion or violence; manliness without boasting; heroism without bluster; criticism without venom; helpfulness without wounds; happiness, and not misery; thinking purely without the strain of conscience; patient and gentle in all things, and saying, "I am trying to live in harmony with the life above."

Prayer.—Our Father, Thou who hast promised to dwell in man forever, come Thou and dwell within us. Enlighten and sanctify our hearts and minds, we beseech Thee, by Thy Spirit, that we may reflect it among others, and that Thy kingdom may come to all. Forbid that we shall think more of ourselves than we ought, but soberly as Christ has given unto us the measure of faith and good will. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE GOD OF FEAR.

At the heart of the muddle in Europe and whatever human muddle there is anywhere in the god of fear. France is afraid of Germany. England is afraid of losing trade. The little nations fear the big ones. One political party is afraid the other will get the patronage. Old people fear young people and do not dare oppose their lawlessness. Young people are afraid of being independent in matter of dress or speech. The militarist is afraid his job will be gone if war is wiped off the map, and every one is afraid of poverty, many to such an extent that their one ambition is to make money and make it regardless of ethics or spiritual honesty.

What causes this black cloud of fear to hang over nations and individuals?

The god of fear is a demon. And there is no escape from his awful clutch on the heart of mankind except that "perfect love which casts out fear." When that time comes, man will be freed from his worst tyrant.—Christian Herald.

Prayer.—Dear Father, the Fountain of love and the Giver of peace, pour into our souls all that Thou hast, and enable us at any time to stand positive against sin, fearing nothing but God, whom to fear is love, devotion and eternal life. Amen.

THURSDAY.

LOVING THE MASSES.

How many men or women do you know who ever weep over a city because of its people's spiritual need?

Jesus wept over Jerusalem.

How many persons do you know who really have a genuine love of the multitude?

Jesus had compassion on the multitude.

How many people, even in the Churches, do you know who can say out of their hearts as they look at a crowd, "O how I love these people!"

"But God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son—"

It is easy to say that Jesus, on account of His divine personality, could love the masses and that we are unable. The fact remains that if we are Christians we must imitate Christ and have His "mind."

It is also a fact that love of the multitude is one of the rarest of human virtues.—Christian Herald.

Prayer.—Dear Father, help us to love those whom Thou lovest, with the love that Thou givest, to the end that we all shall be like Thee. Help us to think and speak of others most tenderly, and thus may all grow in Thy love, and dwell in Thee forever. Amen.

FRIDAY.

OBEYING JESUS.

"To whom ye yield to obey, his servant ye are."—Rom. 6:16.

The whole universe obeys God—sun, moon, stars, the circuit of the heavens, moving waters in the priestly task of earth's ablutions; only man disobeys and thinks it is alright.

The consequences of such a course are: man loses his sense of sin. He says that everything is good and thereby he degrades himself to the slavery of things; he breaks communion with God, for in it God hides His face; he excludes heaven from his soul, for he knows that no unrighteousness can inherit the kingdom of God; it unfits him for the task of meeting temptations which life thrusts upon him, for he weakens in their presence; he finally says, "I know, and, therefore, I do not need." This defies the laws of God, rebels against religion, breaks down morals, and decay sets in. Decay means rot.

Pray today that the Lord may have mercy upon us, and ask God to keep the conscience whetted and the soul in tune with the Infinite.

SATURDAY.

GOD'S CARE FOR OUR NEEDS.

"If it were not so, I would have told you."—John 14:1-6.

Jesus was speaking of the many mansions for us hereafter. He wished us to be sure; we can trust Him to do the best for us. But this kindness is for us, not only hereafter, but now. He is ever waiting for our recognition and acceptance of His good will, so that His care and help may be to us every day and in all things. "Your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need." He understands and sympathizes with us. "In everything, let your request be made known unto God." We ourselves are poor judges of what is best for us. He is wise. He knows and can do what is best. And He does all things needful for those who believe in Him and trust Him.

Enoch walked with God, communed with God, obeyed Him and trusted Him. Walking with God is open to every one who loves God's company. And God can attend to the little needs of His friends as well as the big affairs. He can direct all the time, as well as in crises. "Trust Jehovah with all thy heart, and lean not upon thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths."—J. H. Mills.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SUNDAY.

THE SABBATH AND MAN.

God's Church calls us today. What are we going to do about it? The Church is the greatest force of the world. Use it, man of God, use it. It shows us the difference between God's judgment of things and that of our own, and we need this. It contrasts God's standards with our own, and calls us to the better. It shows us the value of heart-life and the worthlessness of things without it. It clarifies the conscience and reveals the eternal. It makes man aware of his own nature and sensitive to the divine voice. It fosters trust and love, and brings joy and gladness. It faces troubles with hope and saves us from sin. Don't neglect Sabbath duties.

Prayer.—Our Father, Thou who hast charged the apostles to preach the Gospel and redeem the world from evil, endow us with Thy spirit today, and prosper, we pray Thee, Thy Church, and impel us on, that we may be a part of it all. Send forth laborers and endow them for the work. "Grant them wisdom in all difficulties, help in all troubles * * * success in all their labors, that Thy holy name may be glorified. Amen."—Stewardship.

SHORT NOTES ON THE BOOKS OF THE BIBLE.

No. 9—Samuel, the End of the Theocracy.

Samuel was a prophet and the last of the judges. The book of Samuel presents a history of Samuel and his times. It gives an account of the moral failure of the priesthood under Eli and of the judges. It also gives an account of Samuel's effort to make the office of judge hereditary. He made his own sons judges of Israel when he grew old, but it was not of God, and so his attempt to make the office hereditary from father to son failed. There seems to have been many failures in his life and work, but he was very faithful as a prophet. With him began the line of prophets. After his time the prophet, and not the priest, was prominent in the life and work of Israel. The theocracy ends with near this time.

We are now approaching a crisis in the history of Israel. A change in the form of government is at hand. The events of the near future are to move rapidly about the persons of Samuel, Saul and David, three of the great characters in Israel. The change of the form of government is epochal. A new regime is coming into existence. The kingdom of Israel is soon to be established and Saul was to be the first king of the new nation. Everybody was on the quivive—on the lookout for the dawning of a new day nationally. The transfer from the judges to Saul and his great promise as the King of Israel, together with his signal failure as king, made this period a notable one. No doubt, those were perilous times that tried the hearts of men. David, under most embarrassing conditions, succeeds to the throne, and Saul goes down in disgrace. David already had won a great place in the affections of the people. Of course, the transfer of the government from one king to another raised no little excitement. For a time, the government did not seem to be very steady, but at length David did master the situation and became the real ruler of the land. Then the new day dawned and a new nationalism, as we would call it today, came to the people. But even this was not permitted to stand unmolested but for a short time, for Absalom, a son of David, undertook to wrest the government from his father's hands, but failed.

Although it failed, it greatly disturbed the country as well as the government. David, though a fine man and a great ruler, made some grevious mistakes, the chief of which was in the matter of Uriah, when for the sake of securing Uriah's wife to be his wife, he put Uriah in the front line of battle, in the thick of the fight, in the hope that he might be killed, so making an opportunity for David to take her to be his wife. This was indeed a great mistake, and it was seemingly the beginning of the troubles in the life of the king and his kingdom. Let us learn here a lesson that would do us good to the end of life. No man, no matter if it be the king on his throne, can carry his points by scheming, contrary to the will of God. God has a plan for each life, and when one of His servants tries to circumvent the purposes of God by scheming to gain his ends, he may be sure of failure, for God will not approve such work. You may gain your point, but you will lose a life and its aims by thus going contrary to the plan of God. When David undertook to have things go as he wished them by scheming, it was the beginning of David's downfall. His sin not only put a blot in his life, but it shook his kingdom till it looked as if it all would go down in ruin. That is what sin costs men—it costs them success and the downfall of their biggest plans. Oh, David, what you might have been if you had only been content to go God's way and rule the kingdom only for His glory! How many of the rest of us have contributed to our own downfall by our attempts to carry our points in life contrary to God's will. And in every instance of that kind, we have been permitted to see our plans come to an untimely end, as we believe, just because we could not commit our ways to God's keeping and allow Him to make our plans for us. In God's way and working, under His plans, the greatest difficulties have been overcome and great victories gained.

In the days when Samuel was living, anarchy reigned in some large measure. The strong man will find his hands full in the time of anarchy. Samuel was now growing old and feeble and found it very difficult to control the situation. Eli, who was a high priest and judge, was also now old and weak—too weak to curb and control his own sons. They had become vile by their evil practices and were exerting a bad influence among the people. Eli was doomed, doomed by the sins of his life and especially the life of his sons. This ought to be a lesson for every parent to take good care to see that his or her children are controlled in their early days as a fit forerunner for the responsibilities which are sure to come later in life. In Samuel's life, both as a judge and a seer, he emphasized obedience and offerings. He wished the people to be right and to do right toward God. In the main, he had been a fine man, but he did not train his children so as to have them ready to be his successors. But when it came to a matter of personal righteousness, he was a great man. He challenged Israel to find in his conduct as a judge and a prophet a single breach of piety and honor. That was a heroic thing to do, but the old man stood before the people and called for the man who could find these failures in his life to do so.

If his boys had been properly trained to succeed him, then the change in the form of government might not have been called for, but as things were going wrong in Samuel's old age, the people seeing the worthless character of his boys, knew that something else must be done, and so they began to clamor for a king. Finally God yielded to their demands for a king, not because that was necessarily best for them, but because they were so persistent in their demands to have a king—they desired to be like other nations having a king of their own, and so he gave them a king, and from that time till this there have been reigning kings in the world, and yet it is manifested that God did not wish kings to rule over His people, but he permitted it because, like many people, they could not be satisfied with anything unless it was of their own choosing.

After Saul's rejection, David was chosen his successor, and was three times anointed king—first at Bethlehem, privately; then at Hebron, and finally at Jerusalem over all Israel.

The book falls into five divisions: 1 Sam. 1-7. Samuel the prophet—Judge 2:1; Sam. 8-31. The book is supposed to cover 115 years. The book is full to overflowing with great lessons.

Do not forget to help the orphanage at this Thanksgiving season. They are very needy. It takes a good deal of clothing and many pairs of shoes, as well as goods, to meet the wants of so many dear little fatherless or motherless children. Let us help, for help must come from somewhere, and soon, for winter is now upon us and we must take care of the orphans.

The Herald of Gospel Liberty reports a case of divine healing in the field of Rev. DeK. Judy. That ought to be a common item of field news.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

December 9, 1923.

Subject: The outreach of the early Church.—Acts 8:1-15:35.

Golden Text: "Ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."—Acts 1:8.

Devotional Reading: Ps. 96:1-8.

Expanding Missionary Vision and Activity.

The beginnings of any movement are always interesting. Especially is this so when the movement has had a profound influence upon human life. And among the forces uplifting human society, none is more powerful and significant than the Christian Church. That power given by God and working in men is the theme of the book of acts. The power of the early Church was expressed in the lives of individuals, and resulted in a great expanding of missionary activity, because it gave a missionary vison.

The eight chapters which make up the Scripture lesson for this week give snapshots here and there showing this activity. The chapters can be read through in about one-half hour, and a thoughtful, prayerful reading of them is one of the best preparations for the lesson hour. Here we have the picture of Stephen, the first man of that early Church to suffer martyrdom for the cause. We see the unholy Simon who wished to purchase with money the gift of the Holy Spirit, and received Peter's rebuke and counsel to repent of his wickedness. Philip, the evangelist, obediently went southward, and won to Christianity the Ethiopian. Saul, the bitter enemy and persecutor of the early Church became its most mighty preacher when he received a vision. Peter's outlook was broadened by a divine message, and he preached to Cornelius and his company, "In every nation, he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." All of these incidents, and others, the writer of the acts uses to tell of the great work of the early Church in obedience to the last command of the Master. The record is missionary from first to last. The program of the early Church was one of personal testimony, built upon personal devotion, and intimate fellowship. The apostles and their associates lived so close to God that they heard distinctly His commands, and their substance always was: "Go—tell" somebody the story of the life and death of Jesus Christ. From place to place they went, each "according to his ability," preaching and teaching and healing. One missionary errand completed successfully, they were inspired to go on another, and another, and another.

The missionary advance of the early Church was made through individuals, and often individuals who had been sorely persecuted. They were scattered abroad, and then they went everywhere preaching the word. Persecution was one step forward toward their victory. It is the difficult task which challenges the best endeavor, and brings the most satisfaction. The Christian missionary still has to face difficulties. There are still many "untried doors." There are still many to "make havoc," though few are called upon today to meet the martyr's fate. The destructive earthquake in Japan is a challenge, which, if met in "early Church fashion," will mean a greater missionary vision and a larger missionary advance. The "charm of the impossible," as expresed by Miss Margaret Slattery in her suggestive little book of that title, pleads for men and women who are willing to undertake the so-called impossible for God. Such men and women must carry on the missionary work of the Church, for it calls for the greatest heroes and the bravest heroines. No endeavor in all the world has a greater appeal to one who genuinely desires to make his life count in the world, and to attain this is willing to sacrifice some things for the sake of the ultimate goal—the winning of the world to Jesus Christ. And this goal can only be reached through such heroic Christians. That was the Christ-plan for the saving of the world when He left for His heavenly home, and it will always be God's plan. Are you brave enough to witness for Him at home, and to work with Him afar? Are you so full of His love that you want others to share its blessing?

"True-hearted, whole-hearted, faithful and loyal,
King of our lives, by the grace, we will be,
Under the standard exalted and loyal,
Strong in Thy strength, we will battle for Thee."

This was the spirit of the early Church.

"The people, with one accord, gave heed." This was true in the first century, as it is true on foreign fields today. The eagerness of the people of India and China and Africa "with one accord" to know the story, is a reproach to those of us who have heard it from babyhood, but have never appreciated its real and blessed significance in our lives. When the Church of Christian nations, "with one accord," sets out to be thoroughly missionary, it will not take long to win the world to Jesus Christ. Then in all the earth, as in the city of Samaria when Philip preached there, there will be great joy, joy which shall never end. Read again those eight chapters of our lesson, with the thoughts constantly in mind: "What suggestion has this early Church, this group with which our great Church of today began, for us? Can our Church grow strong, numerically or spiritually, before we are willing, through preaching and teaching, and personal testimony continually, to reach out to others? Can any Church grow and serve, without a missionary vision?"

Has not the early Church, whose leaders were so close to Jesus Christ, a very pointed message, a missionary bidding, for us?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic: What makes a successful worker?—Prov. 6:5-11.

Thoughts on the Topic.

The industry of the little ant furnishes an example to the one who wishes to be a successful worker. The ant provides for its needs by unceasing endeavor, and never forgets that time is his to use and not to waste. What he does without thought could certainly be carried out in the life of man. Verses 6-7-8.

"Lost, somewhere between sunrise and sunset,
Sixty golden minutes, each set with sixty diamond seconds;
No reward is offered, as they are gone forever."

There is a time for preparation for work which must be used. As the ant gathers food in summer, the man prepares for lifework in youth. Then is the time of his opportunity. The opportunities we use to the best advantage will open the door to a bigger usefulness tomorrow, as the carefully planted seed prepares for a great harvest. Verse 8.

"The best verse hasn't been rhymed yet,
The best house hasn't been planned,
The highest peak hasn't been climbed yet,
The mightiest rivers aren't spanned;
Don't worry and fret, faint-hearted,
The chances have just begun,
For the best jobs haven't been started,
The best work hasn't been done."

There is a chance for the worker to accomplish much. There is a demand for workers who have—

Loyalty to Jesus Christ and His Church. Loyalty to the highest welfare of men. Loyalty to a good cause is one of the essentials of a successful worker.

Consecration of powers and talents. To be successful in any line, the worker must give to it a whole-hearted interest and work.

Unselfishness of character. The selfish man or woman fails to give the best to life, and to know the highest joy.

Thorough preparation. Consecration, fortified by knowledge, is a strong combination.

Patience. "Patience is one of the purest and most precious of all the Christian graces. Patience puts aside our own preferences. Patience waives its own rights and permits the good of others to hold a higher place than our own wishes. But in doing this, patience brings to the soul a blessing unsought and undreamed. In short, patience is love at its best."

Poem for the meeting:

Faith.

It is faith that bridges the land of breath
To the realms of the souls departed;
That comforts the living in days of death,
And strengthens the heavy-hearted.
It is faith in his dreams that keeps a man
Face front to the odds about him,
And he shall conquer who thinks he can—
In spite of the throngs who doubt him.

Each must stand in the court of life
And pass through the hours of trial;
He shall tested be by the rules of strife,
And tried for his self-denial.
Time shall bruise his soul with the loss of friends,
And frighten him with disaster,
But he shall find when the anguish ends
That of all things faith is master.

So keep your faith in the God above,
And faith in the righteous truth;
It shall bring you back to the absent love,
And the joys of a vanished youth.
You shall smile once more when your tears are dried,
Meet trouble and swiftly rout it,
For faith is the strength of the soul inside,
And lost is the man without it.

—Edgar A. Guest.

Plans for the Meeting.

Have this meeting announced in Sunday School or, better, through a bulletin-board which all will see. Every member of the young people's department of your Sunday School should be an active Christian Endeavorer. Successful workers are needed throughout the Church, and all young people will find this topic and its discussion suggestive.

At the Christian Endeavor meeting, call attention to the topic for next Sunday "Bible passages we should memorize and why," with the request that each member shall memorize one passage for a Scripture lesson. Urge that this be chosen today and learned thoroughly during the week before the meeting.

Questions for discussion in this meeting: What is success? What are the essentials which a young person must seek to secure real success? What may hinder success? Does Christian Endeavor suggest any helps toward success? Does the Christian Endeavor pledge require anything which should not be demanded of one leading a successful Christian life? What part has religion in the successful life? Health? Intelligence?

SUGGESTED HYMNS: "True Hearted, Whole Hearted," "Give of Your Best to the Master," "My Life, My Love I Give to Thee," "More About Jesus," "The Victory May Depend Upon You."

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

DECEMBER 9, 1923.

TOPIC: What are the real pleasures?—Luke 8:14, 15; Phil. 4:4.

"Rejoice in the Lord Alway; and Again I Say, Rejoice."

Did you ever read "Pollyanna," and try to play her "Glad Game?" She played that game of finding something always to be glad about, because her father had told her that the Bible contained over three hundred verses, like the one which is our lesson today, telling folks to "rejoice," which means to be glad. Surely, the Heavenly Father meant for His children to be happy, for He gave to us such a beautiful world, such very kind friends, and so many, many good things, which we thought about very especially at Thanksgiving time. He meant for Christian people to be the happiest kind of people. But surely He did not mean for them to try to find pleasure in things which would harm them or other people. In a great meeting, the boys and girls had this for a cheer, to give together, or to say as they met:

"Say, my chum, have you seen
2 Timothy 2:15?
1 Thessalonians 5:22
Will tell you exactly what to do."

Look up these verses, and see if the second one does not give you a rule for deciding whether pleasures are helpful or harmful. Then, because Junior Christian Endeavor stands for happy Christian boys and girls, sing:

"Halleluiah, I'm a Junior!
Halleluiah, amen.
Halleluiah, I'm a Junior,
I'm a Junior C. E.!"

DEEP THOUGHTS FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS AND TEACHERS.

Your work in the school counts for two worlds whether it is well or poorly done. Not to strive for the highest and best results is to deserve the penalty of failure when failure might have been avoided.

It has been said that it is a sin for a Sunday School to be smaller than it might be. If so, it is not a greater sin for it to be less interesting, less efficient, less successful than it can be?

If your Sunday School is in your heart, and your heart is in your Sunday School, you will welcome all suggestions, and even not grudge an occasional postage stamp in seeking for the kind of helps which will give you most help in your work.—Selected.

CHILDREN'S HOUR AT THE REIDSVILLE CHURCH.

The Reidsville Church holds a children's hour on Tuesday afternoons, which is a missionary society doing double work. The children from six to fourteen years of age meet and have a few songs, then divide into groups, according to ages, and meet in separate Sunday School rooms for a story-telling period. Stories from the Bible, missionary, hero, and other good stories are told. Just before the Woman's Conference, they had a mite-box opening and a public service, with songs, stories and recitations. They saved during the year in the mite-boxes about $6.00, which was given to the mountain work. The pastor, Rev. Ledbetter, Mrs. Ballard, Mrs. Mitchell and Mrs. Wilkins have assisted in the work and are proud of the work which is being done.

This is a splendid plan to reach the children, as stories have an appeal for them that nothing else has. We pass this suggestion along, and hope that other Churches will try the story period, or children's hour. PATTIE COGHILL.

CARDINAL PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

HOLY NECK.

The work at this Church is moving along with good interest in all departments. Dr. and Mrs. Jay, who were with us for several years, are much missed, but the new pastor, Rev. George D. Eastes, and his family, are with us and have been received most cordially by the entire membership of the Church. The outlook for the new Conference year is most hopeful and encouraging.

The congregation has been carrying for a few years a debt on its parsonage to the amount of something over $1,800. Shortly after the arrival of the new pastor, the board of deacons and finance committee had a meeting, and it was suggested by a member of the board that this debt be liquidated at the earliest possible date. Consequently, the time limit was set at December 1st, and the matter was delegated to Deacon E. T. Holland to be carried out.

Accordingly, Bro. Holland, without previous announcement, presented the matter to the congregation on the fourth Sunday in September, and in a few minutes the amount was nearly all secured from those present. The balance is assured by those who are interested, but who were absent on that day. Nearly all the amount secured was placed on the table in cash. The remainder will be paid on or before December 1st, and the Church will have no more debt. The liberality and the spirit of co-operation manifested in this congregation are an inspiration.

The congregation suffered a distinct loss in the death of Mrs. John Eley. She had been a member of the Church since childhood and had given her highest devotion to the Master and her Church. She leaves to mourn her departure her husband, four sons and a daughter, all members of the Holy Neck Church. Besides these, are three brothers and three sisters, among whom is Bro. E. T. Holland, known to so many of our people. The funeral was conducted on November 11th by the pastor, assisted by the Revs. J. H. Lightbourne and L. F. Paulette. The Church was packed to the doors by her many friends who had come to pay her the last tribute.

CORRESPONDENT.

"DE 'CIETIES! DAT AM DE TROUBLE."

The following story told by Dr. Cyler (Cuyler) is reproduced from the Watchman-Examiner and is well worth repeating here. Though the story reflects the views of an old colored man, these views are nevertheless needed to be considered in this way when many believe there is something wrong with the Church. Can it be, after all, that to an old colored man is given the privilege by his little story to tell the white folks just what is the matter with the Church? Dr. Cyler says:

"I asked an old colored preacher how his Church was getting on, and his answer was: 'Mighty poor, mighty poor, brudder.' I ventured to ask the trouble, and he replied: 'De 'cieties, de 'cieties. Dey is just drawin' all the fatness and marrow outen the body and bone of the blessed Lord's body. We can't do nuffin' without de 'ciety. Dar is the Lincum 'Ciety, wid Sister Jones and Brudder Brown to run it. Sister Williams mus' march right in front of de Daughters of Rabekah; den dar is de Dorcases, de Marthas, de Daughters of Ham, and de Liberian Ladies.' 'Well, you have your brethren to help in Church,' I suggested. 'No, sah, dar am de Masons, de Odd Fellows, de Sons of Ham, and de Oklahoma Promis' Land Pilgrims. Why, brudder, by de time de brudders an' sisters pay all the dues, an' tend all de meetings, dere is nuffin' left for Mt. Pisgah Church but jist de cob. De co'n has all been shelled off and frowed to de speckled chickens.' "

Now, brethren, what about the old negro's "speckled" chickens? Can it be true that there are many in the Church who are throwing away the corn to the speckled chickens? If so, no wonder that there is something wrong, not with the Church of Christ, but with the people who compose the professional Church. If the speckled chickens eat up what ought to be given to the Church, we shall not wonder at the conclusions of the old negro.

As we see it, brethren, the Church of Christ is first, not second, not third, not fourth—but first! If the members of the Church were to stop feeding "speckled" chickens and give to the Lord, as He has directed them to do, we believe we should see that there is no occasion to complain that the Church is not serving its God-given purpose. We believe the old negro was right. At least, let us think it over seriously.

JONAH AND THE WHALE.

BY HOWARD W. POPE.

When you're cast down, recall the tale
(For it is very bright),
The tale of Jonah and the whale,
For he came out all right.

The prophet Jonah ran away
One day when he was sent
To Ninevah to preach and say,
The people must repent.

He did not relish that hard task,
So disobeyed the Lord.
A storm arose, and he did ask
To be thrown overboard.

And when the whale began to sup
On Jonah, whom he found,
The whale grew sick and threw him up;
He landed on dry ground.

The prophet then obeyed the Lord,
Which endeth this sad tale,
This truthful tale which we record,
Of Jonah and the whale.

How Shivar Mineral Water Relieves Rheumatism

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate, and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism, it is, therefore, necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable conditions due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred, on the average, report no benefit.

Shivar Springs,
Box 16-B, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

SAMPSON.

Mrs. Mary Anne Sampson was born February 20, 1841, and died October 16, 1923. Her age was 82 years 7 months and 26 days. Sister Sampson was a faithful member of the Reformed Church. Death occurred at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Maggie Life, near McGaheysville. She had been a great sufferer for many years before her death. It was my privilege to be in the home occasionally in years gone by, and I always found her fully resigned to the Lord's will, and ready to go to meet Him at any time. Funeral services were held at the home October 18, 1923, conducted by the writer, assisted by her pastor, Rev. W. R. Causey, and interment was made in the cemetery at McGaheysville.

A. W. ANDES.

In the course of his lecture, Mr. Zangwill, the Englishman, announced that America lacks the honor, justice, dignity and efficiency that exist in England. "He discovers also that Americans lack humor, and have no shame, but on the whole are amusing" and worth the price of admission.

When the followers of Christ get to quarreling over preferment, the devils get busy in the Church.

WOLFORD.

Mrs. Maggie Wolford was born January 20, 1878, and died of diphtheria November 8, 1923, aged 45 years 9 months and 18 days. Deceased was a member of the Christian Church at Palmyra. She is survived by an afflicted husband and several children, some of whom are small. Much sympathy is felt for the unfortunate family. A brief service was held at the grave November 9, 1923.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

For your own protection—

The peril of the road crossing has become a national problem with the multiplication of automobiles.

The Southern Railway System has eliminated 584 grade crossings, and is eliminating more every year, but 7,000 remain to be separated on this system alone. The total cost to complete the work is a stupendous sum—probably half as much as the cost to build the railroads.

Even if the money were available, and the public willing to pay the increased freight and passenger rates necessary to provide a fair return on it, many years would be required to do the work.

Protection from the peril for the present generation at least must be found in some other way. Trains cannot stop at every crossing if they are to be run at the sustained speed expected by the public and required to carry the commerce of the country. The train crosses a highway about every mile. The motorist encounters a railroad only occasionally.

It is necessary, therefore, for the automobile driver to stop in order to avoid risk. No one who did this was ever killed. In North Carolina, where the law now requires such a stop, the number of road crossing accidents on our lines has been reduced one-half.

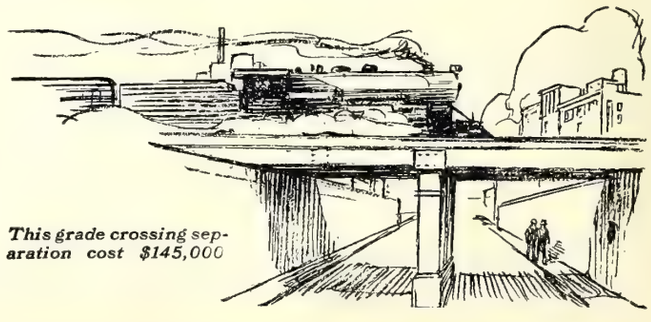
Grade crossing accidents can be prevented if you will approach the zone of danger determined to exercise caution For Your Own Protection.

It is better business to save a life than to save a minute.

Personal Responsibility

(Reprinted from the Saturday Evening Post)

Final dependence for a reduction in the number of railroad grade-crossing disasters must be placed upon the individual's sense of responsibility. If when approaching and crossing a railroad at grade the traveler will think of that crossing as a zone of danger to him, and regard himself and those with him as in imminent danger until the crossing is completed, the chances of accidents will be automatically reduced to the minimum.



This grade crossing separation cost $145,000

LISKEY—RHINEHART.

Mr. J. Floyd Liskey and Miss Vada M. Rhinehart motored to my home on November 7, 1923, and, in the presence of a few intimate friends and relatives, were united in matrimony. The groom is a son of Mr. J. R. Liskey, of near Harrisonburg, Va. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Rhinehart, of Linville, Va. Both are popular young people, and well deserving of the good wishes of their many friends.

No Weakening on the Volstead Act.—

William Jennings Bryan said recently, when told that the claim is being made that the country has changed its sentiments on the Volstead act: "No such change is to be found in this country, as was shown by the last election."

Mr. Bryan is absolutely correct in his opinion. We find no disposition whatever to give up, to let lawless crooks, traitors, nullificationists, and money-mad capitalists wreck the Constitution.

A Serum for Tuberculosis.—

Every announcement that a successful treatment for tuberculosis has been found arouses the keenest interest at once. Incredulity and hope struggle in the heart. But we have no doubt that a cure will be discovered. It is announced that a Dr. Apshlinger, of Geneva, Switzerland, has discovered a serum which is efficacious in seventy to eighty per cent of the cases and that the permanency of re-established health is said to be a feature of the results. Dr. Spahlinger has been using the treatment for ten years and is satisfied that it does good, but owing to financial limitations and the prejudice of doctors, his discovery has hitherto gained little attention. But he is now getting attention, and favorable attention at that. Prejudice is a terrible barrier to progress, and it seems especially unreasonable in scientific men. In the meantime, let us all encourage the men and women who are trying to cure the ills of life and of society.—Ex.

How the President Observes Thanksgiving.—

Officials in Washington, most of the government employees who work under them, and the other residents of the capital, gathered "in their homes and their usual places of worship" for their annual observance of Thanksgiving and did justice, as they saw fit, to the traditional turkey dinner.

President and Mrs. Coolidge observed the day strictly in accord with the spirit of simple Thanksgiving suggested by the President in his proclamation. They had invited several personal friends to be their guests at dinner after their attendance at special services in the First Congregational Church, of which they are members, and planned to spend the remainder of the day quietly. They purchased their own turkey, having decided not to accept the usual gifts of choice birds; but their pumpkin pie, two and one-half feet in diameter, was presented to them by an admiring local chef who was aware of Mr. Coolidge's liking for such pastry.

Should We Forgive Our Debtors?—

We mean by this question the nations that are indebted to us. The total amount due America by the allied nations is something like $11,000,000,000. Many have believed that the shortest way to restoration would be for America to forgive her debtors and let the money be used for rehabilitation purposes.

We were talking with a very intelligent gentleman the other day, who took the opposite view. He says that to forgive these nations would simply be to further enrich the bankers who grew immensely wealthy during the war. These notes, he says, are being carried by the banks, and if we should relinquish our claims the common people, who are ground down by the burden of taxation, would not be benefited. He says the bankers are for the most part Jews, and that Jews have always encouraged war because they prosper during war.

In the opinion of our friend, if we forgave them this debt it would cause them to begin at once the agitation for another war. He thinks we ought to give them ample time to pay this debt, but to hold it over them as a safeguard against future wars. He thinks if we could have it so arranged that the amount we forgive would go to the masses of the people, who are now bearing the burden of taxation, it would be well. But as there is no probability of such an arrangement, he believes we should use this to maintain the peace of the world.

The position taken by this gentleman presented the case in a new aspect that is well worth thinking about.—Biblical Recorder.

New Wrinkle for Priming Cartridges.—

One of the drawbacks in the use of explosives in cold weather, especially with the cap-and-fuse method of priming, is the difficulty and bother of tying the fuse securely to the dynamite cartridge so that it cannot pull out.

Careless priming is responsible for a large proportion of the unsatisfactory results that farmers, especially, have with dynamite. Even some miners who should know better merely lace the fuse through the dynamite cartridge and then complain if they have burned up charges and misfires. The fuse with the cap attached must be securely fastened to the dynamite cartridge in such a way that the side spit of the fuse cannot ignite the dynamite.

This new wrinkle in priming consists of the standard method of priming in the side of the cartridge near the top and fastening the fuse with a tarred string. A piece of tarred string fifteen inches long and about as thick as the twine used by hardware dealers for tying up about a five-pound package of nails does away with tying knots.

After the cap with fuse attached is inserted in the dynamite cartridge, two or three turns are taken with the tarred string around the fuse, about an inch from the cap, then two turns are taken around the dynamite cartridge and fuse, finishing up with as many more turns around the fuse as will use up the string.

This makes a tight, firm operation, which, if properly done, will positively hold the cap in place and prevent it from pulling out.—Alfred Mathedson.

The Output of Books.—

An examination of publishers' lists enables us to note the comparative number of the different classes of books published this year. As might be guessed, fiction is first, but only a little above the more serious books of history and biography. This indicates that readers are most interested in people, in action and in the unusual. Novels deal with imaginary people, or with composite characters, while history and biography relate the deeds of actual folks.

Next to these, in the number issued, come essays, poetry and drama. Not many books of essays have been published, and fewer poems than last year. One of the best volumes of verse is by Thomas C. Clark, of Chicago. He has become one of the world's most popular lyrists, and his songs are always true to the highest things we know.

Scientific writers have not been idle. A goodly number of books on sociology and economics have appeared, and there is a sprinkling of philosophy and a few books on business. Many new editions of old favorites greet us. Some of these will be entirely new to the present generations.

A liberal number of religious books have been issued. The Church has reason to feel that her scholars and thinkers have not failed to bear a fruitful testimony to the visions and ideals of the faith. Among the religious output we notice a large number of sermons. Many of them are sermons of the first order. The pulpit has become steadied after the peculiar and trying strain put upon it by the world war. The preachers have passed with credit and triumph over into the new era, and they know how to apply Christ's teachings to the questions of the times. It is encouraging that so many sermons are being printed. It shows a greater appreciation of religion on the part of the people, and it shows also that the pulpit is holding up to its old, grand prophetic position of light and leading in a world that sorely needs divine guidance.

The books people read are a gauge of their mental states, and judged thus, we may say that the march of mind today is encouraging.—Selected.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. Jno. G. Truitt, of the First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va., preached the Thanksgiving sermon for the different Churches of Berkley, and it was pronounced to be very good—and we got this report from one who heard it.

The Missionary Association of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference held its annual session last Tuesday, December 4th, with the Christian Temple, of Norfolk, Va. That has been a most useful agency in the work of the Church. It has had a long and useful career, having been in action for about forty years.

Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., Franklinton, N. C., is planning to leave for his winter home in Florida about the middle of December and will be away two or three months. He will, as far as possible, have his appointments filled during his absence. How delightful must be the sensation of the thought of a winter in Florida! We wish you a pleasant season, Dr. Long, and a safe return to your field of labor.

Bro. A. H. Spivey, writing from Wakefield, Va., under date of November 26, 1923, says: "We have secured the services of Bro. G. C. Crutchfield as our pastor for the coming Conference year. He will serve three Churches—Wakefield, Burton's Grove, and Barrett's. We think he is just fine, and we believe he is the man for our Churches, and we are looking forward to the coming year for great things in the Lord's work." We rejoice with our brethren, represented by Bro. Spivey, in the fine outlook they have for the year just now ahead of them.

In a recent issue of the Friendly Visitor, the local paper of the Muncie, Ind., Christian Church, the pastor, Rev. M. W. Butler, says: "We never carry personalities, even if we had them, into our pulpit, or into the columns of the Visitor. But we are anxious to declare the truth of God in both. Are we willing to face facts, and be honest with ourselves and with God? That is a wise decision and a holy purpose, as we believe. Personalities of any kind, and especially of an unpleasant nature, should never be given a place in the pulpit, nor in the paper. If you have something personal to say to any one, say it to him alone, face to face, and not behind his face.

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago has inaugurated a new course in religious education, which will comply with the international standards for leadership training in religious education. The course will cover 100 weeks (1,465 hours). Its object is to prepare specialists in teaching and departmental superintending, and in particular, directors of religious education. The aim is especially to train men and women of executive ability who do not feel called to the pastorate or the mission field, but may desire to devote their lives to organizing and directing religious education in Churches where the pastor lacks the time or the training to supervise this important work. M. B. T.

In a letter from Mr. Geo. H. Bellamy, State chairman for North Carolina of the Near East Relief, he says: "According to cable advices received in this office, only the Near East is standing between these unfortunates and starvation and disease. No doubt, you have heard of the plight of Christian sufferers in the Near East since the newspapers announced the signing of the infamous treaty of Lausanne. The full fruits of this treaty, so far realized, are 1,000,000 Christian refugees, driven from their homes and lands, and now destitute on the shores of the Black Sea. In many cases, food stocks for orphanages have been temporarily depleted in the faith that the American people will respond. We now have no such stimulus as last year, when the murder of 150,000 people kept our cause on the front pages of newspapers for weeks. Unless the Churches of North Carolina rally to our State committee this winter, the Mohammedans will win another big victory—hundreds of thousands of Christians will starve to death—and much of our work and your work of the last five years will have been in vain. Our work is, of course, among the Christian orphans. The average American citizen, who forgets the news from abroad almost as soon as he reads it, cannot understand why we should have to feed these people year after year. The Lausanne treaty meant little to them—they do not realize that children four years old could not support themselves, even though these Christian countries were rehabilitated. Unless the Churches arouse themselves to real interest in their respective communities, Christianity will be at its lowest ebb in the Near East this winter. A bigger problem is the rural Churches which our volunteer committees cannot reach. If you are in a community where an active campaign was not held last year, will you not organize a committee in your Church and set aside a day to take an offering for this cause—for the suffering children of the Near East? May we not hear from you on this matter at your earliest convenience? All checks should be made payable to Mr. John M. Scott, 300 North Tryon Street, Charlotte, N. C. When in Charlotte, N. C., visit us at our new quarters."

FROM "TOSHIO."

From Utsunomiya, Japan, under date of October 28th, Mrs. Toshio Kato (formerly Miss Toshio Sato) writes personally:

The first of September was the day of the great calamity which killed millions of people and disturbed the capital cities and places of this country. The day and the days following were the darkest and saddest days to us. I can never tell you how awful it was in Yokohama, Tokyo, Yokasuka and the other places, but when I went to the station here to meet those trains coming up from Tokyo and saw and heard those people who barely escaped from death, I had to realize that it was beyond human power to picture the awfulness of those few days.

In the papers and the magazines we read much about the great sacrifice your country made in order to save our starving, burned-out and homeless people. We certainly are grateful, yet cannot tell it out, for our hearts are full of it.

Coming back to myself, I think Mrs. Fry has already told you, through the Christian Missionary, about my baby boy that was born on the fifteenth of July. I am a very busy mother now, but we both are very well and happy.

I am sure you have been wondering what I have been doing and why I did not wirte about my work. As soon as the spring term was over, I moved from the dormitory to begin light housekeeping near Mrs. Fry's. When the new term began, there was no one to fill the vacancy, so I decided to continue the work, doing the best under the circumstances. So, really I did not lose any time, and still am at the work, though the baby, too, requires much time. Of course, I cannot do as much work as before, but I feel that God means for me not to stop on account of that, but to work on as long as I can. I am glad I am still able to do some service, and hope I shall always be. My baby is 106 days old today; just as big and heavy and strong as I could hope him to be. He goes to school with me and helps to cheer up the girls there. Hope he shall grow up to be a God-fearing man who faithfully follows the footsteps of the Lord, and spends his life in glorifying the name of the Father.

HOLY NECK.

Two of our splendid young men have entered the matrimonial relations during the past week. Brother Lee Worrell found his bride in the person of Miss Zola Greene, of Gates, N. C. They were married on Saturday night, the 24th. Mr. Worrell is a son of Mr. and Mrs. George Worrell, of near Holland. The other young man referred to is Brother Howard Holland, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lum Holland. The bride is Miss Ina Smith, of Whaleyville, Va. The marriage took place Wednesday afternoon, November 28th, in Suffolk, Va., Dr. I. W. Johnson officiating.

The Ladies' Missionary Aid Society rendered a splendid Thanksgiving program at the Church on last Sunday night. The annual thankoffering was received. It amounted to about $20 and will go to foreign missions.

Holy Neck congregation participated in a fine, spirited union Thanksgiving service with the Holland Churches on Thanksgiving morning. The offering goes to Near East Relief.

Next Sunday will be observed as "Golden Rule Sunday," as outlined by the Near East Relief Committee. The congregation is planning to enter into the plan heartily. The pastor will preach a special sermon.

Special plans are being executed at this time in an effort to secure payment of Men and Millions pledges. CORRESPONDENT.

A REMINDER.

TO THE MEMBERS OF MY CHURCHES:

Dear Friends,—You treated me during the past years, as your minister, better than I deserved. In answer to your unanimous calls, I have agreed, if nothing happens to prevent, to be with you, as usual, another year. You have always given me good attention. Listen: verily, verily, I say unto you, we have not all paid our pledges in full for Men and Millions. Dr. Atkinson's face has almost turned into an interrogation point, begging us to do our duty. A few are not able to pay on account of sickness and death in the family; others because of serious financial reverses. Nearly all, by making sacrifices, can and will eventually pay every dollar.

Beloved friends, if you really knew how our Zion was suffering now for lack of prompt assistance, you would make a special effort to advance the kingdom. The hard-earned crops are selling for fair prices. Do not wait for complaints and reminders. Send Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C., your check today. Your sleep will be sweet tonight and your conscience will be clear forever. D. A. LONG.

NOTICE TO PASTORLESS CHURCHES.

The Conferences of the year are now over, and if there are in North Carolina or Virginia any Churches without pastors I shall be most happy to send the names of available pastors on request. If the Church secretary, or interested member of the Church without pastor is interested in securing a pastor, I will appreciate the information and will gladly supply the list I have and such information as may be desired, provided it is in my possession. Respectfully,

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

INTEREST ON MONEY IN BANK NOT COLLECTED.

"And He brought us out from thence, that He might bring us in, to give us the land which He sware unto our fathers."—Deut. 6:23.

"There remaineth yet very much land to be possessed."—John 13:1.

"How long are ye slack to go to possess the land, which the Lord God of your fathers hath given you?"—Josh. 18:3.

There are people who are practically always fearing God will not keep His promises, and generally these people are they who never have a word to say of their own failures to obey God, to honor Him with their trust, or to serve Him in hope. Our text has a finger of rebuke pointing directly at this class of professing Christians. God has offered them great things by His promises, but they have never trusted Him sufficiently to claim them, the things thus offered, and yet they are unable to trust God for their daily needs or for the rich spiritual blessings with which He is lavish in offering to them.

There is scarcely another combination of three texts in the Bible which present to us such striking significance the delinquencies of the everyday life of so large a number of professing Christians? The bringing of the children of Israel out of Egyptian bondage and their entrance into the promised land, and the beneficent purpose of God in thus delivering them from the hand of their enemies and their failure to profit fully in these experiences are forcefully set forth in the texts given above. We are thus face to face with certain striking thoughts of God concerning His people.

1. The deliverance of Israel from the bondage of Egypt was based upon the purpose of God to put them into the land of promise.

He led them out that He might lead them in—into the land of freedom, a country which it was said was flowing with milk and honey. Notwithstanding this great and loving purpose of God to make them a mighty people and a gracious blessing to the world, they met God with an unwillingness on the part of the very people He was seeking to establish in the earth as His chosen people. What a queer trait in Israelitish character! Under the leadership of Moses, the great and benificent purpose of God had been accomplished to the extent of leading them out of Egyptian bondage. Strange as it may seem, after they had been led out of this bondage it required more time and, if possible, greater effort to lead them into the land of liberty and plenty. They had left Egypt, had crossed the Red Sea and were safely marching toward the land of "milk and honey," when they were suddenly diverted from the true way. Then began their wanderings from which they did not recover in forty long and trying years.

While in bondage, they suffered from cruel task-masters, but now delivered from this bondage they had a desire to return to the flesh-pots of that country whence they came, and not only so, but that they might have full control over themselves to do as they pleased; they wished their own independence. It is always so when the Christian seeks to usurp the authority of God by having his own way and doing as he may please. When we are in trouble we cry for help, but as soon as we gain our independence we forget Him on whose bounty we were fed and kept in the time of our helplessness.

2. Having delivered Israel from Egyptian bondage, God patiently awaited their onward movement to the land of milk and honey.

They were afraid to move, afraid of imaginary evils, as against the power and goodness of God. Fearing they would never reach the land of freedom, they wished they were back in the brickyards of Egypt. How short-sighted are the eyes of unbelief! It is now forty-five years since they left their cruel task-masters behind and started to find a land of plenty, but forty of these years have been spent in wilderness, wandering, and five of them had been spent in entering the promised land, but they had done so little in really occupying that land as the Lord had told them to do that He now calls Joshua to the fact that, though they had entered the land, they had done very little toward actually occupying it. How sluggish are these half-way Christians in any effort to take all that the Lord is offering them!

Briefly, let us take a glimpse at the whole land, as God had given it to them, and then at that part of it which they had occupied, and we shall get some conception of the enormous failure they had made.

3. Facing their failure, Joshua turned upon them and asked: "How long shall we wait before we possess the land?"

With their failure heavily upon them, Joshua asks for three men of each tribe who might go out and lay off the land, that each tribe might readily take possession of its part of it till the whole land should be truly occupied, fully occupied by them for whom it was planned, and yet they did not reach it fully—much of the territory that God had given them was never occupied by them, and they never reaped its fruits. But what may that mean to us as Christians? It is evidently meant that Israel's failure to go in and possess the land God had given them should teach us, away out here in the twentieth century, a great lesson as to the Christian life and our failure to enter into it in its fullness. The land God had given them was a type of the many thousands of promises He had given us, but, like the Israel of old, we have never taken up these promises and used them, as He meant we should. The great Bible is full of promises. It is like a tree, hanging, loaded with the most delicious and beautiful fruit, but having so many other things before us, we have turned to the perishing things of earth, and in doing so we have turned away from God and His great budget of promises and have never entered into their fruitage. What a pity that we have such a poor estimate of the riches of God's grace? Looking at His manifold promises, He says: "I have given them to you," but we stand around and look on as if indifferent, as if we had no idea of the real value of these promises, and then we expect God to come to our help and make our victory for ourselves complete, even though our sluggishness has kept Him out of the great victory for His truth which He had justly expected at our hands; and what shall the harvest be?

Let us learn:

1. That He takes us out of the old life of sin that He may put us into the great field of truth and bring forth much rich fruit to His glory. He has promised us as His people great bounties, and upon these promises He is looking for a great harvest in spiritual values.

2. He declares that very much of what He has given us remains untaken. There it lies before us, no fruit, a waste wilderness that ought to have been blooming as the Rose of Sharon.

3. Taking in the situation as it relates to Christians of today, He asks of us, as He did of the Israelites of old, How long will you remain slack, rather than go in and possess the land which God gave not only to us, but to our fathers before us? How long will you wait to claim the truth God has given to you. These treasures were given to us through our fathers, and still we have not been careful to gather in these treasures for the life we are seeking to live. We are, therefore, poor as Christians, not because God has so ordered it, but because we have been too idle, too indifferent, to reach up and grasp them. How long shall this sort of thing go on? Presently life will end, and if the promises of God are still untaken and unused, poor indeed will life be without them.

I WILL NOT FEAR.

I will not fear,
Though storm clouds gather fast,
Though kingdoms fall and mountains crumble into dust,
When every ship comes home with broken mast,
And every doubt of earth and hell assail my trust;
Then whether heaven be dark or clear,
My anchor chain will hold—
I will not fear.

I will not fear:
When dearest friends turn back,
And earthly ties are snapped by unexpected strain;
When those once dear follow in my track
And rend me, then, though bleeding, I will not complain,
I shall expect my Lord will then appear
To shield His trusting child—
I will not fear.

I will not fear,
Though wrong ascends the throne,
And innocence, with broken scepter, stands aghast,
The right shall not forever stand alone.
Justice will wear the royal robe and reign at last.
Haman shall hang on gallows he did rear;
God's people shall be free—
I will not fear.

I will not fear.
When everything goes wrong;
When losses, crosses, pains and sorrows overwhelm;
When days are dreary, nights are dark and long,
And storm blasts hide from view the Master at the helm,
I see Him not, but while His voice I hear,
Unfalteringly I'll wait—
I will not fear.

LECTURES ON COMMUNITY LIFE.

"A Christian Program for the Rural Community," by Kenyon L. Butterfield, A. M., LL. D., is composed of lectures on community life and offer a constructive program for special study, leadership and method in presenting the Christian message in rural sections. There is an informing and suggestive discussion of the economic and ethical phases of the problem in their bearing on the common welfare of the community. A practical textbook for theological seminaries and training institutes. Of particular value to ministers in country districts, in that it reveals opportunities and indicates definite and effective lines of approach to a successful meeting of difficult conditions.

A GOOD BRIEF CONFESSION OF THE CHRISTIAN FAITH.

We find the following brief statement of the Christian faith in one of our exchanges; if we mistake not, it was clipped from the Presbyterian Standard. It may be of help as showing how nearly all evangelical Christians are together on the vitals of Christianity, and beside it may help some reader to grasp the truths which are ordinarily regarded as vital to the faith of a true Christian. Much more might be added, but for a brief statement of the Christian faith, we regard it as very good.

God.—God is a Spirit, infinite, eternal and unchangeable in all His glorious, attributes. He is merciful and gracious, and not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance and divine fellowship. He exists in three persons—Father, Son and Holy Ghost—who are one God, same in substance, equal in power and glory.

The Bible.—The Scriptures of the Old and New Testament were written by holy men of God as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, and are the Word of God. It is the only infallible rule of faith and life.

God's Purpose.—The eternal purpose of God includes all events; it is holy and wise, and does not deprive man of freedom, nor make God the author of sin.

Creation.—God created the world and all things therein; He made man after His own image with an immortal soul, endowed with knowledge, righteousness and holiness.

Sin and the Fall.—Sin is the violation of God's law, either by omission or commission. Our first parents, being tempted by Satan, disobeyed God's command, and so by their own choice fell from their original state of innocence and communion with God, and all men being their descendants are born with sinful natures.

Salvation.—God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son to be the Saviour of sinners. His salvation is sufficient for all, but is efficient only for those who accept Christ as their Redeemer.

Election.—God the Father chose unto Himself in Christ a people that should be holy and without blame before Him. Those who come to years of discretion receive salvation only through faith in Christ; those who die in infancy, and others who are incapable of exercising choice, are saved by the electing love of Christ; His grace has peopled heaven with multitudes and has never sent one soul to hell.

Christ the Redeemer.—The Lord Jesus Christ being the eternal Son of God, became man, being conceived by the Holy Ghost and born of the Virgin Mary, yet without sin. By Him alone we can come to the Father because His perfect obedience and sacrificial death made a perfect atonement for all sinners who receive Him. He rose from the dead and ascended into heaven, where He makes continued intercession for us. He will come again to receive and reward His people, and to judge the world.

The Holy Spirit.—The Holy Spirit is the third person of the Godhead, who persuades and enables men to obey the call of the Gospel, and applies the redemption purchased by Christ. He continually dwells in every believer to restrain, comfort and bless him.

Justification by Faith.—Every one who humbly relies upon Christ for salvation, and in repentance confesses and forsakes sin, is pardoned and accepted of God on the ground of Christ's obedience and sacrifice.

The Christian Life.—The Holy Spirit imparts spiritual life to all believers. He purifies them more and more from sin until at last they stand perfect before Him in glory. Believers may, at times, backslide, yet God does not cast them off, but chastens them and restores them through repentance to His loving fellowship.

The Church.—The visible Church is composed of all who profess faith in Christ, together with their children, and it is the duty of all believers to openly profess their faith by uniting with the Church. The visible Church consists only of those who truly live the Christian life.

The Sacraments.—There are but two sacraments—baptism, which symbolizes the work of the Holy Spirit; and the Lord's Supper, which symbolizes the sacrificial death of Christ.

Death and Resurrection.—The souls of Christians are at their death made perfect in holiness, and do immediately pass into glory; and their bodies do rest in their graves till the resurrection, at which time they shall be raised up, acquitted in the day of judgment and made perfectly blessed through all eternity; but the wicked shall go away into everlasting punishment.

The Final State.—The eternal home of believers is heaven, while the abode of the impenitent is perdition. Man retains his identity after death, and there will be recognition in the future life. We believe in the ultimate and complete triumph of the Saviour's kingdom.

THE INCARNATE CHRIST.

John tells us that the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us. That is what we call the incarnation, the divine Christ being given a human body. Surely that is a mystery to mortals, but so are many other things. There are persons who refuse to believe anything they cannot understand. Then that limits them to a narrow, very narrow, sphere in which to exercise faith. If we believe only what we can understand, then we shall live a dried-up life, for in fact there are very few things that the human mind can understand in its fullness. Most of the things in this life we have to take by faith and be content to know that certain things are true, although we do not understand them. For instance, we eat food to give us strength for the body and the mind, but we cannot tell just how the process brings about the desired results. We know that water slakes the thirst of man, but we cannot be sure that we understand how it is done. The soil gives life and growth to vegetable matter, but we do not understand it. We know that the soil which gives life and growth to the flowers also colors them in a beautiful variegation, but we do not understand how it is done. The green grass comes to maturity from the soil, and it seems to be all alike, but it must be different, and this we know because it is eaten by the sheep and wool grows from its nutriment; the goose eats the same kind of grass, and it makes feathers; the cow eats from the vegetable matter and it makes hair on the cow. Now, will any man be so silly as to refuse to believe these things just because he cannot understand them?

It is even so in the greater matters of the kingdom of God. We do not understand how the death of Christ saves the believer, but it does it. We cannot see how the blood of Christ can make an atonement for sin, but it does, and to deny it is only to make ourselves ridiculous. Dean Inge, regarded as one of the keenest minds in England, says some things about the incarnation of Christ. We may not understand it all. Most likely Dean Inge did not understand all of it, but we may believe it and just as surely get the benefit of it, as we do get the benefit of the food we eat. We do not understand it, but we know we get strength from eating food, and that is the best proof we need—it shows up in a sort of demonstration that we cannot deny. Even so, we who receive the Christ and are made to grow in grace and in the wisdom of God, and we know that is true, although we do not understand it at all.

Dean Inge says:

"The incarnation and the cross are the central doctrines of Christianity. The divine Logos, through whom the worlds were made and who sustains them in being, is not exhausted in His creation, but remains transcendent as well as immanent in it. * * * Neither natural law nor the beauty of the world suffices to manifest or call forth the love which binds together man and his Creator. Nor would any display of almighty power for our sakes evoke it. So far as I can see, nothing but a personal incarnation, and the self-sacrifice of the incarnate, could either adequately reveal the love of God for man or call forth the love of man to God. No doubt the incarnation is also a revelation of universal spiritual law. The 'whole process of Christ' is and was meant to be a dramatic representation of the normal progress of the soul. So St. Paul felt it to be. As Christ died and rose again, so we, as members of His mystical body, are to die to our old selves, and to rise again clothed with 'the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness.' This being the law of redemption, it might be supposed that the revelation could be made to the human spirit as a discovery, and that a personal, objective incarnation was unnecessary. But it does not seem to me that any diffused, impersonal revelation could take the place of the Word made flesh and tabernacling among us. Such a revelation would merely mark a new stage in the growth of racial experience, a fuller understanding of life and its meaning; it would not give us an assurance that God is love, nor would it reveal the supreme law of gain through pain, of victory through defeat—the offense and the glory of the cross. We needed a demonstration that in spiritual creation, as in physical creation, birth comes through travail pangs. The cross, as I understand it, is not so much an atonement for the past as the opening of a gate into the future. Plato had already divined that 'we cannot get rid of evil without suffering'; but vicarious suffering—the suffering of the sinless for the sinful—remained a stumbling-block for the non-Christian world; and it is only in this doctrine that the sting of the world's sorrow and injustice is really drawn. Redemption means admission to redemptive work; and our redemptive work is accomplished not only by what we do: we are also called to 'fill up, on our part, what was lacking in the afflictions of Christ, for His body's sake.'"

SHORT NOTES ON BOOKS OF THE BIBLE.

The Kingdom Lost and Recovered.

1 and 2 Samuel.

All the books of the Bible present remarkable facts in history, prophecy and moral and religious truth, as revealed to man by his Creator. The first book of Samuel presents the personal side of the last of the judges, the moral failure of the priesthood under Eli, and also the failure of Samuel's attempt to make the office of judge hereditary. Samuel was the first of the writing prophets. It was as a prophet that Samuel showed to the best advantage, for it was as a prophet, and not as a priest, that Samuel played such an important role.

In this first book of Samuel we have an account of the end of the theocracy, as administered by the judges. Then begins, with Saul, the rule of the kings. A king was given to Israel because nothing else would satisfy them; but the Lord told them what the outcome of a king would be. He said to them through Samuel: "This will be the manner of the king that shall reign over you: He will take your sons and appoint them for himself, for his chariots, and to be the horsemen; and some shall run before his chariots. And he will appoint him captains over thousands and captains over fifties; and he will set them to ear his ground, and to reap his harvests, and to make his instruments of war, and instruments of his chariots. And he shall take your daughters to be confectionaries, and to be cooks, and to be bakers. And he (the new king) will take your fields and your vineyards, and your olive yards, even the best of them, and give them to his servants. And he will take the tenth of your seed, and of your vineyards, and give to his officers, and to his servants. And he will take your menservants, and your maid-servants, and your goodliest young men, and your asses, and put them to his work. He will take the tenth of your sheep; and ye shall be his servants. And ye shall cry out in that day which ye have chosen you; and the Lord will not hear you in that day."

Notwithstanding this message from the Lord to the people of Israel, they would not heed His warning. They refused to obey the voice of Samuel, and they said: "Nay, but we will have a king over us; that we may be like all the nations; and that our king may judge us, and go out before us to fight our battles." Then Samuel went and told the Lord what Israel said in answer to His message, and the Lord said to Samuel: "Hearken unto their voice and make them a king." This was the beginning of kings among the people of God. Never was there a more stubborn instance of refusal to listen to God, and the world has had to pay for it in many a hard task as a tribute to the kings of the world.

Human nature changes little till the grace of God changes it. They refused to listen to God, and declared that they wished to, like other nations, have a king. That has been the downfall not only of Israel, but of the people of God, not being satisfied with God's way and plan—they must be like other nations. How many in the Church today are not satisfied to obey God and do His work in His way, but, desiring to be like the people of the world, they go and do God's work in their own way and like the world, and then they have to pay for their folly in an unfaithful and an unfruitful Church. God pity His recalcitrant people—they love to be like the world rather than to be Christ-like.

There is but one book of Samuel in the Hebrew, but when it was put into English it was divided into two. The history of Samuel covers about 120 years, so says Archbishop Usher. It moves chiefly about three persons—Samuel, Saul and David. The new kingdom is the dominant thought. The matter, the manner, the renewal and the rending of that kingdom constitute the subjects of discussion together with its translation from Saul, the apostate, its deliverance from Absalom, the usurper, and its establishment in the hands of David, the servant of the Lord.

The times of which the book of Samuel tells us were times of trial and hardship. It was practical anarchy. Eli, the high priest and judge, had been a strong man, but he is now old and unable to rule with authority. Even his own children paid little attention to his authority. His house was doomed. He was a judge as well as a seer. There was no flaw in the moral character of Eli. He was simply old and weak and could not fill his high office in any acceptable way. He could not even rule his own sons. They went far astray, and we are told that Eli restrained them not. This seems to have been the last straw, and it broke the camel's back, and disaster followed quickly. It was the inefficiency of Eli's administration of justice and right more likely than anything else that prompted Israel to ask for a king, making it plain that one sin begets another.

Saul, the first king of Israel, was a fine fellow, good-looking and good-natured in a general way, certainly when he first became king. He was so smooth and genteel that he won even his enemies over to be his friends. But this view of his life soon disappeared, and Saul began to go wrong. He fell from his high position as a stalwart for God and His people, and then his downfall was rapid. Saul's first step in the wrong direction was when he began to dissemble in order to get some human advantage which the Lord had not given him, then he began to go down and down. He did go down, too. When any man will lie and take advantage of situations contrary to God's Word, then He may expect a downfall in fact—destruction is quick and unexpected and terrible on the man who has deliberately turned against God in the work He has given him to do.

When Saul was rejected for his sins, he tried to stand, notwithstanding his wrong-doing. He hunted David as if he had been a bird, seeking his destruction, but God took care of David and let Saul hasten on to his own destruction. In his distress, he turned to the Witch of Endor for comfort and wisdom, but it all failed, so far as any relief for Saul was concerned, and he came to his end in great bitterness. It was the outgrowth of his own intrigue, deception and lying in an effort to gain some advantage which was greatly to his discredit.

David was his successor and was three times anointed for his high and noble office. He was anointed first at Bethlehem, privately; they at Hebron, as King of Judah, and lastly as over all Israel. Then, as now, there were conflicts and difficulties. Abner, Saul's captain, proclaimed Ishbosheth, a son of Saul, as king; so that for seven and one-half years David was king over Judah only. But judgment seemed against both Abner and Ishbosheth. Abner was slain by Joab, and Ishbosheth was assassinated. Then, by common consent, David became king over all Israel. These were tragic times, and all as the result of disobedience to God. Let us learn a lesson.

IS THERE ANY OTHER WAY TO HEAVEN THAN JESUS?

It seems in all time since Jesus came, there have been men and women who have desired to take the royal diadem off the brow of Jesus. The world seems reluctant to permit any honor to come to Jesus. Even today, doubtless, there are many who are studying to find some way they can do without Jesus but that is vain. Jesus Himself has said: "No man cometh unto the Father but by Me." It is Jesus as a divine Saviour, or it is darkness forever. If there be no Christ, then there can be no salvation, and if no salvation, it is eternity in sin.

We must yet learn that there is no other way but Jesus and the cross. It is life in Him or it is death without Him. Man has a hard head and a hard heart. It has been so from the beginning. All men would likely desire to be saved, if they could be saved in their own way, but they are not willing to abandon all hope of self-salvation and take Jesus as the Saviour of the lost.

It was just that way in the days of Jesus, for He said that climbing up some other way would not do, that the man who undertook going to heaven by some other way is a thief and a robber. Mr. Moody, the late great evangelist, said on one occasion:

"A man dreamt that he built a ladder from earth to heaven, and when he did a good deed up went his ladder a few feet. When he did a very good deed, his ladder went higher, and when he gave away large sums of money to the poor, up it went farther still. By and by it went out of sight, and as years rolled on, it went up, he thought, past the clouds, clear into heaven. When he died he thought he would step off his ladder into heaven, but he heard a voice roll out from paradise:

" 'He that climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber.'

"Down he came, ladder and all, and he awoke. He said if he wanted to get salvation he must get it in another way than by good deeds, and he took the other way, which is by Jesus Christ."

HOW THE MAN CURED HIMSELF.

Some of us are close-fisted, no matter how much we are ashamed of it. In that event, perhaps, the most important thing for us to do, and do at once, is to cure ourselves of this awful malady. The greatest way to cure oneself is to let Jesus do it. So far as we know, He has many ways of curing people who have moral defects in their make-up. Some of these defects are of a serious nature, greatly marring the life and service of the man or the woman who has them. What we need is to be cured, and cured permanently.

The National Republican gives an instance of the way one man cured himself, as follows:

"If you find yourself getting close-fisted, remarked a Pennsylvania congressman, "it is time to begin to emulate the example of a wealthy old farmer in my State. He was noted for years as an old miser, but was converted during protracted meeting. Shortly afterward, a poor man who had been burned out and had nothing for his family to eat, came to him for help. The farmer thought he would be liberal and give the man a ham from his smokehouse. On his way to get it, the tempter whispered to him:

" 'Give him the smallest one you have.'

"He had a struggle with himself as to whether he should give him a large or a small one, but finally he took down the largest one he could find.

" 'You are a fool,' the tempter whispered to him.

" 'If you don't keep your mouth shut,' the farmer snarled at him, 'I will give him every ham I have in the smokehouse.' "

The plea for union is strong, and well it may be, for union is the tie that binds Jesus and His people together. However, we do not believe that Jesus would open the door to error. Now, do not jump to the conclusion that here is another writer who wishes every one to bow to his ipse dixit of doctrine and accept all he believes as the sure way to union. We cannot stand for such a position, either for self or for others, but we do stand for essential truth as the basis of Christian union. We stand for truth as the basis of union. This does not mean a basis after our own judgment; it rather means truth as the great Teacher taught it. Error cannot be the basis of union between God's people, for then they would be led away from Christ and that would mean the overthrow of the Church. But so long as truth is used as a basis of union we shall be safe—we mean the Church will be safe—for while standing on truth as the basis of union, the gates of hell cannot destroy it. Let us have the union of God's people, but let us have it on the truth as Jesus taught it as a basis, and then the cause of Christ will always be safe.

ELON LETTER.

The North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference has adopted the budget plan for Conference benevolences. This is a forward step, provided stewardship obligations to the kingdom are recognized by the membership of the Churches and biblical methods of applying these obligations are employed. No financial system will work itself. Somebody somewhere must put life and enthusiasm into the system to be employed, which is a lifeless corpse otherwise.

This fact was realized by the Conference, and so it asked the mission secretary of the Southern Christian Convention to aid the Churches in planning for and conducting their every-member canvasses to raise the budget, with insistence on payment as often as there are preaching services at the particular Church and with special effort to secure pledged tithers in every congregation.

The budget system will raise more money than the hit-and-miss method to which most of our Churches are accustomed, but there must go along with it a persistent and definite plan of education in the enterprises of the Church as well as in Christian stewardship. I recall recently being in a congregation using the budget system for all Church purposes, local as well as general, benevolence as well as current expenses. The pastor, just before receiving the offering of the hour, said words to this effect: "Today we make an offering through our Church budget with our minds focussed on home missions." Then he told some of the big things that were being done by the denomination in home missions. His mission secretary had sent him the facts, he told me afterwards, and not to him only, but to all the pastors, since this was home missions' period. Two months a year are given to this period, and the remainder of the year is parceled out to the other boards of the Church for their educational work. Then the preacher led in prayer, and the plates were passed, returning filled with envelopes in two colors.

The two colors, I was informed later, were one for active members of the Church and the other for the children of the constituency not yet members; but learning in their youth to be intelligent and systematic supporters of all the enterprises of the Church. Children not remaining for Church made their offerings with a brief giving service in their Sunday School classes, their teachers placing their envelopes in the Church offering plates for them.

Here at Elon we use the same method, though without the educational features. We see that we must incorporate these, too, in our plan, or our giving will be mechanical only. We are raising more money here by the budget system than we formerly did, though we are not raising enough to care for some of the things we earnestly desire to support. Our original plan was to include in the budget at least $50 a year for the orphanage through our Sunday School, and the same amount for missions through the Sunday School. The increase of our Church expenses has absorbed these amounts, and recently the Citizens' Sunday School has begun giving special offerings for these purposes. It is a question whether an effort to increase the systematic offerings through the budget might not have been the wiser step. This we have certainly learned, that the best system of Church financing in the world will not work itself and that a forward-looking Church like ours here will not be satisfied not to support every enterprise of the denomination. A poor system worked is better than the best system shirked.

In this connection, I wish to quote a paragraph from a book by F. Harvey Morse, which Dr. Luther A. Weigle, of Yale, declares to be the best book on adult class work yet written. Mr. Morse, in a very helpful chapter on Church finance, comes to this conclusion: "In the more progressive Churches, the class budget is made part of the general Sunday School budget, which in turn becomes part of the budget of the entire Church. Then, instead of a member contributing to the Church and separately to his class, he makes but one annual pledge and but one weekly offering. This plan makes it convenient for members, and unifies the Church program. Adult class treasurers will contribute greatly toward Church progress by starting movements in their local Churches for the adoption of this plan."

A man of means in one of our Churches recently objected to this plan on these two grounds: it makes those pay who do not attend Church and Sunday School as well as those who do and so get the benefit, and it enables people to know exactly how much a man is giving, whereas we are not to let our left hand know what our right hand is doing. Perhaps his reasons influence more than we suspect the action of Churches in their failure to adopt and consistently support a budget system of finance for the kingdom's enterprises.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

I regret that this letter has been lacking for so long a time. This has been the case not because of the lack of material, but because of lack of time to do the material justice. I have decided, however, that a few lines hastily written would be better than silence.

I am sorry to state that we are still in temporary quarters. The construction of the building has been delayed a number of times for various reasons, but now the work is progressing nicely and the building is nearing completion. We are hoping that we may move into the building in the near future.

We are using part of the building now as a dormitory, but have been unable to hold classes in the building because the heating plant is not yet finished. An oil stove serves us for cooking purposes, and oil heaters furnish us warmth in the dormitory rooms. Most of the rooms we are using are on the south side of the building. Little or no heat is necessary in these south rooms when the sun shines brightly. So we are doubly thankful for the many bright days we have had this fall.

I am well pleased with the excellent co-operation of the faculty and student body. The faculty members are very much interested in their work, and do not criticise or complain because of inconveniences. The students seem anxious to learn and take advantage of every opportunity.

Our only drawbacks are due to the lack of sufficient finance to push the work along and pay the necessary bills.

A good many have already responded generously to our various appeals for financial aid, but the need is still great. If you have not given anything yet, don't put it off any longer, send us a check for any amount you feel moved to give. If you have already given something, we thank you. You have made a good start, you have made an investment in a great, good cause, but don't stop there. Keep up the good work. To have done a kind deed yesterday is fine, but that is no excuse for not doing another kindness today.

We have asked individuals or organizations to pay $50.00 to furnish a room in the dormitory—the room furnished to be named for the donor. The following is a list of those who have paid and those who have promised to pay for furnishing one room each:

Paid ($50.00)—Mrs. A. M. Johnson, Mr. A. S. Peak, Dr. and Mrs. W. A. Harper.

Promised ($50.00)—Rock Stand Christian Church, Antioch Christian Church, Beulah Christian Church, Class No. 2 Wadley Christian Sunday School, the Philologian Literary Society of Elon College, N. C.

If I have omitted any names from this I would be glad to make the correction. Help this list grow. I would like to see it at least doubled by Christmas time. Don't wait for a personal invitation. Bethlehem is your college. Are you doing all you can to help support her?

THE THEISTIC EVOLUTIONIST.

Some of our brethren are in a strait betwixt two, whether to hold with the scientific evolutionist, and thus "save their faces," as intellectuals, or to reject evolution and take their stand among the non-scientific ministry.

They have finally found what the Latins used to call a "tertium quid," whereby they can be both scientific and orthodox. They have revived an old view of evolution, which they call theistic evolution, thinking that by admitting the divine workmanship before man is pronounced ready for his part in the drama of life, they can recognize God in creation and yet admit the testimony of science.

By this time we ought to be accustomed to new names. We hear of the new age, the new woman, the new thought, and the preacher of the new religion. Under these circumstances, courtesy demands that we receive this newcomer into the sphere of religious thought, who appears under the name of theistic evolution.

Before, however, taking it at its face value, we would like to examine its claims.

Some of our own beloved brethren, we understand, style themselves as believers in this theory—which to us appears to be a contradiction in terms.

As far as we are able to understand the evolution theory, man began with the protoplasm countless ages ago and by a process of natural selection, he passed from one grade to another, each time rising in the scale, and eventually passing from the ape to man, who has since grown from the lower grade of man to the man as described in Genesis who God pronounced to be very good.

If we understand the theory of the theistic evolutionist, just when this evoluting creation reached the physical man, God stepped in, breathed into this physical body the breath of life, and he became a living soul.

Thus they recognize natural law, and at the same time they think that they give a place for God as the Creator of the spiritual part of man.

This may satisfy some minds, but not ours, which would have to be made over in order to accept such a theory.

The old doctrine taught us that this man, the product of theistic evolution, was the federal head of the race.

God pronounced him good, and then in order to confirm His will in holiness, He put him to a test—and let him stand as the federal head of his race, so that if he stood the test, his posterity would share in the benefit of his victory.

If it had been the other way, so that each of his posterity would have to stand the test alone, then the result would have been ruin for the race, without any hope of success.

The further they went on in sin, the more certain would have been the fall of each generation, because each generation would inherit the tendency to sin of the preceding generations. Under God's plan, the first man who was without sin in himself and had no sinful inheritance, came to the test with everything in his favor.

But when we consider this evolutionary man, who had developed from the lowest form of life to the fully developed animal nature, whose appetites had never been controlled, but who had all through this long process of development yielded to that appetite, there was no possible escape from yielding when the proper inducement was presented to that appetite.

Picture, if you can, this animal monster, devoid of any spiritual nature, then given that spiritual nature and put to the test.

Under the old plan, there was some hope for Adam's posterity; but under this theistic evolution theory, there was no hope whatever.

Instead, then, of the federal headship of Adam being an example of the justice and mercy of God, it was a cruel act of injustice to make our future depend upon the test of a spiritual nature, joined to an animal nature, developed through countless ages, with no control over the appetites. We prefer to believe that the first man, Adam, was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit.

When we read that Adam was "the figure of him that was to come," we love to picture that Adam as God's direct creation, coming fresh from His hands, a fit type of Him who, amidst the sins of an immoral age, was able to say, "Which of you convinceth me of sin?" We could never believe that the animal man of evolution, suddenly joined to a spiritual nature is a fit type of Him who was "holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens."

Let us have the matter clearly before us. Under the Scripture theory of man's creation and fall, our federal head whose success or failure was to determine the weal or woe of our race, for all time, was a perfect man, framed by the hand of God, both physically and spiritually, made in His image, with no bias to either good or evil.

On the other hand, according to this new theory, the blind forces of nature develop the animal man from the lowest order of life to the perfections of physical manhood. Then when he had reached the height of physical nature, God steps in, gives him a spiritual nature, and then selects this new combination to stand as the head of our race.

As the head of our race, we are responsible for him. If he wins in the test, we are to share the fruits of his victory, but if he fails, we also pay the penalty of failure. The test is an appeal to appetite, and when we remember that his progress from the lowest order to the height of the animal kingdom has been made by the yielding to blind appetite, then we realize how certain failure on his part was.

According to the Scripture theory, God made man in His own image, with a will in equilibrium, biased neither to good or evil, which gave mankind more than an equal chance to win.

One theory is that of science falsely so-called, while the other is that taught by God in His Word. When we balance one over against another, we say with Paul, "Let God be true, but every man a liar."—Presbyterian Standard.

UNIQUE CUSTOM AT ST. PAUL'S.

Remarkable services were held at St. Paul's Church Sunday night, the climax coming in a statement by the rector, Rev. B. D. Tucker, Jr., D. D., that as soon as the new chapel and the community house now in course of construction are completed, the Church will be thrown open to any group of Christians, where their exercises and their worship may be held according to their own forms and their own liturgies and in their own language, and that the Church will be open every day with the welcome sign out, so that any man or any woman may enter and partake of the spiritual hospitality there freely offered to all.

The services last Sunday night were unique and in the nature of a joint meeting of the Greek Orthodox Church and the Episcopal Church. Part of the program was in the orthodox Greek and part in English, and the congregation was made up of a large number of Greek citizens who shared pews with regular commuicants of the Church and who were scattered throughout the Church, occupying no specific section. It was a real commingling of adherents of the two Churches. The scene was, indeed, inspiring.

Dr. Tucker, in a short address, gave welcome to the visitors. He took as his topic the twentieth and twenty-first verses of the twelfth chapter of St. John, and his ext, "The hour has come that the Son of Man be glorified." He said the meeting was in a sense a realization of the prophecy —that not one nation, but all, would gather under the Christian banner. Dr. Tucker pointed out that in the early days the Greek language was that universally spoken, and that the Christian faith could therefore the better be spread among the nations.

"It gives me great pleasure," said the preacher, "to welcome the people who come from other nations. The doors of this old historic Church are open to all people; not only to the members of St. John, and his text, "The hour has come that and faith from every land. I invite all groups of Christians who may be without a house of worship to come here and worship according to their own ideas, their own liturgies, their own forms and in their own languages, provided they are of the Christian faith, for they are all seeking the light, they all love Jesus Christ. They may see Him in different ways and through different eyes, but they all love and venerate Him.

"I hope that when our new chapel is completed and our community house is ready, we may see services going on in every part of the Church at the same time, whether in Greek, Armenian, Chinese, Syrian, Italian or English—or any other language. And this will have the tendency of bringing all nations into the glorious fold of Christendom."

Greek Pastor Responds.

Rev. Philemon Sevastiades, rector of St. Constantine Greek Church, of Richmond, who came here several months ago, responded to the greeting of Dr. Tucker in kind. His remarks were in the Greek language. They were interpreted by Rev. S. S. Spathey, native Greek, assistant rector of St. Paul's, who also translated Dr. Tucker's sermon into Greek for the benefit of the Greeks present. His translations were presented most feelingly and freely, impressing the congregation to a degree.

The rector of St. Constantine said that since his coming to Richmond three months ago he had looked forward to just such an occasion, when he could exchange the Christian salutation with his brothers of the Church. "We may not understand each other," he said, "but we serve the same Master. We bring greetings from our Church as a whole to other Churches as a whole, and we hope this night may prove an inspiration to those who may feel that the Church of Christ is divided, and that it may line up all side by side in the fight for Christ, our common Leader. We extend greetings of love, and may we all go forward with renewed vigor in the great drive for united Christendom."

Before the services began, young Greek men assisted the Church's regular ushers in seating the congregation, which was a large one. The Greek choir of male voices sang with St. Paul's surpliced choir, and it also sang alone. Rev. P. Sevastiades read, in Greek, Psalm 104 and the seventeenth chapter of St. John. The Greek choir rendered the offertory, "O Magnify My Soul," and chanted, "Lord, I Call Upon Thee" (Psalm 112), and also sang "Give Me a Sense of Sin." The Church choir sang as the processional, "How Firm a Foundation," and as the recessional, "Ancient of Days Who Sitteth Throned in Glory." The choir and congregation sang, "Rise, Crowned With Light."

During the delivery of his prayer, Dr. Tucker called upon divine aid and mercy in settling the many differences now existing between the nations of the world, and asked guidance to those who are striving to avert further wars.—Reported in Richmond Times-Dispatch.

HOLLAND ITEMS.

The Mrs. M. T. Jordan Circle of the Woman's Missionary Society gave an oyster supper in the Sunday School auditorium last Friday night, and in all, forty dollars was cleared.

The Young Woman's Missionary Society is meeting on alternate Monday nights to study the home mission book, "The Child and America's Future."

The pastor will teach the lessons on the mission book for the Woman's Missionary Society.

Mrs. Joe G. Holland, the efficient teacher of the Second Bible Class, is ill with tonsilitis at the home of a sister in Norfolk.

Changes.—Of the ministers holding pastorates in the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference when the Holland pastor came to the Conference in May, 1920, only ten are now holding pastorates in the Conference, and two of the ten have made changes in the interim. They are H. H. Butler, I. W. Johnson, O. D. Poythress, R. S. Stephens, W. C. Moore, W. H. Garman, L. E. Smith, J. M. Roberts, and the two who have made changes, W. D. Harward and W. B. Fuller.

Six holding pastorates then have gone to other fields: E. T. Cotten, H. W. Dowding, G. O. Lankford, J. F. Morgan, W. M. Jay. One has become a pastor-emeritus: W. W. Staley, and another is about to leave us: C. H. Rowland.

Nine have held pastorates in the Conference and left: C. J. Felton, W. C. Hook, E. B. Flory, T. Fred Wright, Elisha Bradshaw, A. R. Flowers, J. P. Barrett, E. H. Rainey, and H. Shelton Smith, the two last named doing only vacation work. Ten have come to take charge of pastorates: R. C. Helfenstein, B. J. Earp, W. L. Wells, J. G. Truitt, B. F. Black, H. S. Hardcastle, Geo. D. Eastes, T. E. White, W. T. Walters, and J. B. Chadwick.

Four presidents have shepherded the Conference—Rowland, Lankford, Jay and Harward.

Twenty-seven changes in so short a while! A bishop could hardly do better with so small a group in so brief a time.

The loyalist says: "Above all, be loyal to the Master."

CORRESPONDENT.

Holland, Va.

Don't forget that now is a good time to put THE CHRISTIAN SUN into five new families of your Church. Five new names and $7.50 sent in at one time will do that. Ten new names and $15.00 will put THE SUN in ten new families and give an extra copy to any one designated. This for December.

The centennial celebration of the promulgation of the Monroe Doctrine this week in the city of Richmond closed yesterday. William Jennings Bryant was the first principal speaker on the program.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

CONFERENCE PUTS ON BUDGET SYSTEM.

A most unusual step was taken by the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference in its recent annual session. The apportionment committee are the sponsors. This committee brought in the following, which the Conference unanimously adopted:

"We recommend that this committee be known in the future as the 'Budget Committee.' Our thought is that the apportionments are in no sense an assessment, but suggestions to the Churches as to what is needed as a minimum to carry on the work of the Conference and its enterprises.

"We recommend that each Church be asked at once to adopt this suggested amount as part of its local budget, and that the secretary of the Conference so notify the secretary of each Church in writing.

"We recommend that each Church take steps at once to raise its local budget, including the Conference budget, by an every-member canvass, using the envelope system of payment, weekly or monthly or semi-monthly, as the Church has preaching-services."

This was discussed at length and unanimously adopted with the request that the mission secretary of the Southern Christian Convention be asked to aid our Churches in making this plan effective. In explaining why the committee brought in this recommendation, this paragraph was included in the report:

"We regret to report that some two or three Churches have asked for a reduction in their part of the Conference Budget, alleging in every case that it is too much. These Churches are honestly mistaken. The trouble is not that the Churches are asked to raise too much money, but with our lack of system and biblical methods in raising it. We say it deliberately—our Churches can pay to the Conference budget ten times what we are now paying if we will use the every-member canvass and tithe our incomes."

In the discussion of this vital report by members of the committee and others, it was brought out that what was desired was that the idea of an assessment or an apportionment should be eliminated from our thinking, and instead of this we set a goal and seek with an honest and consecrated heart and effort not only to reach this goal, but to go beyond it in our undertaking for the Lord.

The total goal for the Conference the coming year was fixed at $4,435. Now, every Church in the Conference is asked, by an earnest every-member canvass, to send up as large a part of this total goal as possible. In order, however, that each Church may have not merely the total goal of the Conference, but a goal for itself as a minimum in making its every-member canvass, each Church of the Conference was asked to set before itself a suggested budget as printed in last week's SUN.

Many of the pastors and delegates pledged to go home and put on the every-member canvass at the earliest possible date. As this canvass is made in the various Churches and reports are sent in, there will be printed in THE CHRISTIAN SUN the result of the canvass made in each Church.

This is an honest attempt on the part of this Conference to do two things: First, eliminate superficial and high-pressure methods to collect at the end of the Conference year from the faithful few what is known as Conference apportionment; secondly, to get every member in every Church not only to have a part in contributing to the Conference needs, but to let each individual feel that he, instead of being something of a burden or a tax, he is helping his Church reach a goal and do a great work in kingdom service. We should certainly regard that which Conference asks us to raise, not as an assessment, nor even as an apportionment, but as an ideal to be striven for and a goal to be reached. If the North Carolina and Virginia Conference shall succeed in this worthy undertaking it will certainly blaze the way for a better day and greater achievements in the Southern Convention.

J. O. ATKINSON.

WHY?

At the recent session of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference a member asked this question: "Can the chairman of the committee on foreign missions tell why this Conference, in all its long history, has never produced and sent out one missionary to the foreign field?" The chairman replied that one former member of this Conference—Rev. D. F. Jones—had gone out from the Conference, but had formerly come to the Conference from England; but he could not tell why the Conference had never produced and then sent out one missionary in all its long history. And then followed in the Conference several other interesting "whys," one of which was propounded by President Harper, of Elon: "Can any one tell us why no one of the four student volunteers for the foreign field, members of the Christian Church, who have graduated from Elon in recent years, has gone out to the foreign field, after attending theological seminary elsewhere, though at the time of graduation from Elon all intended and expected to go? And then can anybody tell us why two student volunteers of another denomination who likewise graduated from Elon, after going to seminary, are now on the foreign field, one in India and one in Japan?" And so many of us are wondering—wondering why, why, why? Why has the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, in all its ancient and honored history, never reared up and sent out one from all its homes and Churches to the foreign field as an ambassador for Christ? And then why do student volunteers in Elon College, members of our Church, fail us in going out to the foreign field, but Elon volunteers of other denominations do not fail their Church, but go out as they had volunteered to do?

If we only knew why!

J. O. ATKINSON.

MEN AND MILLIONS.

The mission secretary sometimes wonders if others than himself receive strange letters. He, at any rate, has a letter now and then, the tenor of which he cannot comprehend. One of our most loyal brothers, in sending a very liberal check on his Men and Millions, wrote as follows:

"I believe, if you had some one in our Church to look after the Men and Millions work that a good deal of the amount pledged could be collected now while there is a little money in the country. Last Sunday I made the announcement that I was going to pay mine, and would be glad to send in any amount that any one else wished to pay, and a good brother stepped up and gave me his check for $10, which I enclose with my own."

Think of suggesting some one to look after Men and Millions when we are pleading, have pled, and purpose to keep on pleading with every captain in every Church, and with every four-minute speaker, and every woman leader in every Church to please look after Men and Millions in their Churches and do all they can to collect the pledges and to keep the matter alive and before the people. From pulpit, and pew, and platform we are endeavoring to present the plea in every Church and to all who have pledged, that now is the time to meet the pledges and to pay up Men and Millions. If the pastors will not help look after this important matter, if the captain, the four-minute speaker, the women leader, the Sunday School superintendent, the deacon in the Church, or some interested soul will not help look after Men and Millions in every Church—how may we ever hope to do the great work which circumstance and a gracious Providence have committed to us? Will not every brother and sister in every Church in all THE CHRISTIAN SUN family who may chance to see these lines, or to hear of them, please, for the sake of the Church they love and the Christ they would serve, and the God they would worship, please, please, help look after collecting the pledges of our Men and Millions Movement, the holiest and the most helpful movement that we, as a Church, have ever undertaken?

Recently we have sent helpful literature to every four-minute speaker in all the Churches, and we have personally written every captain in all the Churches, and the women leaders in all the Churches, to please call attention to the necessity of paying now the Men and Millions pledges. We must now either pay these pledges or, to a very large degree, lose the effect and fail of the award promised in this great undertaking for our dear Church.

FROM NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN SUN:

Dear Brother,—I would like to have a little space in THE SUN, provided I may be free to write at random some things that are on my mind. I surely do like THE CHRISTIAN SUN. You and Prof. Kernodle are giving us a good paper. I especially enjoyed your editorial of November 8th. That must have been a great spiritual experience and tonic to your very soul to go back to Norfolk and live again amid the musical melodies made by lips never to be forgotten. I for one was so glad that you and Uncle Wellons were at our Conference. While you have not passed the number of mile-posts that Uncle Wellons has, yet you were a man and he considered as being in years before the writer of this piece ever entered the ministry. I was brought up and taught that I should read everything you wrote. I have not done so, but my father tried, as far as possible, to do so as long as he lived. Uncle Wellons was present when I confessed that I was called to preach, and asked for a special prayer. I can never forget it. I believe I have felt the effect of his prayers in my behalf many times. I am afraid that many times in this busy rushing age we "youngsters" do not take the time to express our appreciation of men like you and our Bro. Wellons, who have stood as beacon lights for truth and the Christian Church. My parents have both long since gone on to their reward, but in my Thanksgiving prayer I shall thank God for the three men that my father loved so well, namely: W. W. Staley and his "Suffolk Letter," J. Pressley Barrett and his faithful pen, and the prayers offered by Uncle Jimmy Wellons. May God abundantly reward these faithful saints!

A Trip to Greene County, Va.

On Monday after our Conference closed, I left Newport News, as had been previously arranged, and, in company with Rev. A. R. Flowers, a very fine, sweet-spirited minister of the Gospel, we made our way, via Richmond and Charlottesville, to Greene County, Va. Bro. Snow was kind enough to meet us, and carried us to his kind and hospitable home. On Tuesday night, November 6th, we began a revival at Mt. Olivet, Dyke, Va. It was a real treat to go back to this Church and meet with our people of the Christian Church at this place. The fact that we were permitted to serve these kind people a few months; over two years ago as their pastor, made this visit all the richer in experience.

I preached three times while there, and was then called home by a telegram from my wife, but in the meantime my Bro. Flowers had visited the schools and preached, to the very pleasant acceptance of the people there. I felt as I left for Newport News that God was going to use Bro. Flowers as an instrument to do a great work in that community, and He did. I understand that Bro. Flowers is to serve Mt. Olivet for the rest of the Conference year. The meeting lasted about ten days, and there were twenty-eight members added on profession of faith, with a probability of others to join at the next appointment. Truly, Bro. Flowers did a great work in this community for the kingdom of God.

Sincerely,

B. J. Earp.

FAMILY CIRCLE READING.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

Earth holds no dearer spot than where parents and children meet daily in the home. There, impressions are made that time can never destroy. The home affords opportunities for influences that no other spot can have. Wise, indeed, are those who realize these possibilities and seek to use them for the highest aims and ends. The meeting of the family around the table for meals; the gathering of the members in the sacred precincts of the family circle; the constant association of those who dwell under the same roof; who can estimate the permanent values that may be given to such daily contact. Children, with their impressionable natures and their rapidly forming characters, may here be reached as in no other place. A home well supplied with the proper reading material of papers, magazines, and books —what a field for the cultivation of all that is highest and best in mental, moral, and spiritual development! Added to this, there is the unmatched influence of father and mother with all the wealth of wisdom that they may have gathered from all their contact with life, richly available for the younger members of the family.

Parents long for the best for their children; they are willing to make any reasonable sacrifice for their children's betterment. What a mistake they may make by failing to cultivate this rich field for the child's uplift! Never are there any books read that make the appeal that those make which are read in the family circle by mother, or by father, and that have the added comment of parental suggestion and discussion, in addition to what the printed page conveys. A thousand charms are added to that volume that becomes the familiar possession of those who daily gather around some common board, and who pass to each other the ideas suggested by what the book may contain. It is a fact that the average person does not read a great many books during even an entire lifetime. It does not take a very large library, or a very great expenditure, to supply a family with all the reading matter that it can use and digest. All the more reason for seeing that this matter is neglected by no family. Parents make a great mistake if they never find time, and never make time, for reading in the circle of the home. It is there that the great names of literature should be often spoken of, and the great books of the ages made as familiar friends for each and every member. The pleasure that comes through this channel, if it is properly cultivated, becomes one of the keenest pleasures of an entire lifetime. Long after the boys have wandered away and set up homes of their own; long after the daughters are firmly fixed in other circles, the days of early home-life will move as a mighty force in life. The books there read in those early formative years will be the books that stand out most clearly, and that do most to guide and inspire. The choice gems of literature there so easily learned and fixed in memory will blaze like stars, and there will result a permanent culture and refinement of taste that can be gotten in no other way so easily.

Mind brightens by contact with mind, and when discussion follows reading, there results a permanence of impression possible in no other way. Every home longs to add to itself all that may enlarge its happiness, and here opens up a field that nothing else can displace. Pages that carry with them the added music of a mother's voice, and the memory of days long since dead are pages with which no others may be compared. A father will long speak when his voice has become silent if his voice is associated with his reading and comment of books that still stand upon the library shelves. Then, too, there is such a splendid opportunity for training and guidance in the suggestions that may accompany family reading, and the words that may be dropped here and there by way of approval or disapproval of the author's style of writing, his scope of thought, his views of character, and his estimate of nature and life.

Modern life has become more and more hurried and pressing. A thousand things knock at our doors for a hearing. Time must be guarded or it will often be wasted. The things of greatest value must be known and preserved; but we can surely do nothing wiser than to give a portion of our time and attention to what we may term the reading of the family circle.

In this connection, the well-known lines of Henry W. Longfellow come to mind, in his poem, "The Day is Done," from which we quote the last verses:

Come, read to me some poem,
Some simple and heartfelt lay,
That shall soothe this restless feeling
And banish the thoughts of day.

Not from the grand old masters,
Not from the bards sublime,
Whose distant footsteps echo
Through the corridors of time.

For, like strains of martial music,
Their mighty thoughts suggest
Life's endless toil and endeavor;
And tonight I long for rest.

Read from some humbler poet,
Whose songs gushed from his heart
As showers from the clouds of summer
Or tears from the eyelids start;

Who, through long days of labor
And nights devoid of ease,
Still heard in his soul the music
Of wonderful melodies.

Such songs have power to quiet
The restless pulse of care,
And come like the benediction
That follows after prayer.

Then read from the treasured volume
The poem of thy choice,
And lend to the rhyme of the poet
The beauty of thy voice.

And the night shall be filled with music,
And the cares that infest the day
Shall fold their tents like the Arabs,
And as silently stead away.

—Henry W. Longfellow.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

By Rev. J. P. Holm.

Police and other courts bring out many a sad story, true pictures from real life. Some time ago a young girl, Dorothy Bates by name, was held by Chattanooga police for violating a juvenile court parole in Washington, D. C. While waiting in the police station to be returned to Washington, she gave way to the following lamentations:

"I blame my mother for everything that has happened to me, and I'll never forgive her for letting me grow up in unprotected innocence, for insisting that I go with those whose fathers were moneyed men, and who never in all my life took the trouble to know and understand me. I grew up in loneliness, so lonely for the right sort of feeling other girls I knew had toward their mothers. Somehow there seemed to be a gulf between my mother and me, and I could never cross it. When I had done wrong, when I needed her the most, she told me that if my father did not drive me from home she would. I thought of my baby sister, six years younger than I am, opened the door and went away. I did not care where. I blame my mother; perhaps God will blame her, too."

God pity such girls. How sad, yea, fatal a home! A mother rearing children and not a Christian. Some of the saddest reports from German soldiers who died on the battlefields wrote: "Oh, mother, why did you never teach us how to pray?" How sad—awful, never learned to pray!

Dorothy is not herself blameless; she saw other girls had a friend in mother. She knew of God, and God will likely blame Dorothy and her foolish, neglectful mother.

And He will blame many other foolish mothers for the same offense against their daughters, the neglect of their moral and religious training and failure to warn them of the evils that seek their ruin. Silly mothers often thrust their daughters, like Dorothy, poor child, into the greatest of perils, and then when disaster comes they even blame Providence, and sometimes are hard-hearted enough, as this mother seems to have been, to turn their own flesh and blood from their home and shut the door against the hope of returning. There is but one way, one hope left for such as Dorothy. For all such there is a promise: "When my father and my mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up." He understands. He is willing. He is trustworthy. He is able and will save to the uttermost. Go to Him in all penitence and sincerity. He will not turn any away, but with sympathy and healing He will say: "Go in peace, and sin no more."

Mothers, I beseech you that you tell your daughters of the perils, pitfalls, and snares of Satan; tell them of sexual dangers, of sins as you see it. Then teach them how to pray. Then they'll bless mother. The responsibility is great. God Almighty, help us all to live so that in the great day of reckoning we can bring our dear ones with us. "What a gathering that shall be."—Wesleyan Methodist.

Deep at the heart of all our pain,
In loss as surely as in gain,
His love abideth still.
Let come what will, my feet shall stand
On this firm rock, at his right hand—
"Father, it is Thy will."

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

REASONS FOR FAMILY WORSHIP.

1. The family is the smallest, the most compact, and the most intimate social group. If there is to be any social worship of God, if persons are to express their adoration, love and trust toward God by social groups, then it is most natural and necessary that they should do so by families.

2. A family exists for the nurture of children. The chief responsibility and the chief joy of the Christian family is the Christian nurture of its children. How can this Christian nurture proceed if it does not have in it the essential element of worship?

3. Family worship as a source, and as the consummation of a Christian family life tends to perpetuate itself. A goodly heritage is precious not only in itself but also because it perpetuates itself through many generations.

4. Life in the family is a preparation and a training for life in the larger social groups. The virtues which the children learn in the Christian family are the virtues which, when practiced in the larger social groups, will further the kingdom of God.

5. It would also help start some boys toward the ministry.—Harold McA. Robinson.

TUESDAY.

"Well done, thou good and faithful servant." —Matt. 25:21.

The greatest need of humanity, and, therefore, the greatest need of ourselves, is: our job well done. First, in order to do this, we need the power to stop everything that produces evil. Things will never be right until every one learns that to do his job well is the most important thing to his life. The carpenter who fills up his bad joints with putty, the plumber who covers up his faulty connections with lead, the farmer who puts water in his cotton, the dealer who covers the faulty barrel with the best apples, render no service to other folks—it can produce nothing but more misery and wretchedness and condemnation. This is selfishness, and selfishness means dissater.

The primary and supreme object of our everyday work should be to produce the best article and render the best service possible. Only that which serves others is of highest good. A physician is not judged by the money he gets, but by his patients. An artist is not judged by his possessions, but by his art. A minister is not judged by his salary, but by the soul life of his adherents. This is as it ought to be—the test of success by the service rendered. In business it doesn't seem to be so. Men's business success is judged by the money they can make. I do not forget that the making of money and the product go hand in hand, but saying that the great business world is not judged as the professional, art or religious world is. To do our job is supreme.

A man said to another once (jibing him a little), "I remember when you blacked my father's shoes." He replied, "Sir, did I not black them well?" The test of heaven is going to be character of our stewardship.

Prayer.—Dear Father, forbid that we shall forget the truth that service to others is Thy command and the elements of true greatness. Enable us to make this paramount in our lives.

WEDNESDAY.

WHO IS JESUS?

"Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."—Matt. 16:16.

Do we know Jesus well enough to know who He is? And can we tell others who He is? We know our friends that well. Is there not enough of the human about Him who, from a few followers, established the Church of God, for Him to be intelligent to us?

And how do we know our friends? By the father, and the family and what they do. Saying nothing about the witness of the spirit within, we may know Him in much the same way. He came from God. He declared it. The apostles understood it and always referred to him as such, and Jesus Himself was always in communion with a heavenly individual whom He called His Father. He was constantly at work for that Father, and pointing the world to Him. Following Him in our every-day work brings us close to Him, takes away our pride, breaks down obstinacy, shames our indifference, forgives and takes away our guilt of sin, and bows us in adoring love. This surpasses the understanding of men. Do you know Him this way?

Prayer.—Dear Father, we desire Thy companionship in our homes, at our work, in our gardens and fields; we desire to fellowship Thee in all our experiences. Grant us Thy life in Jesus, and all Thy saving grace, this day and forever. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE DECAYING SENSE OF SIN.

Gladstone said a long time ago, "The most striking fact of the age is the decaying sense of sin." In this he meant to say, "It seems that the present age feels that it has passed from a cloud into sunshine, and that everything is alright." Things used to be either black or white. Now they are blue and so mixed and shaken together that they are neither black nor white, but there is enough of the white in the black to make the latter tolerable. It does often seem that we have drifted from the positive belief that some things are good and others are sin to that of believing that there is a little bit of good in everything bad, and therefore we will patronize it all. Let us mediate and judge how far we have got from God's Word in this.

Prayer.—Let each member of the family be silent for a few minutes, during which time let each think over his own standard of good and bad, and pray for God's to come. Finish with the Lord's Prayer in unison.

FRIDAY.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH.

"As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith."—Gal. 6:7-10.

It is a striking figure that Paul uses here. The household of faith! How close we would come to the true purpose if in very truth the Church were a household of faith, with all that the figure implies! The Church must be more than a hotel which gives protection and provides nourishment for individuals. Those within the Church must be bound together as those in a household. There must be a common interest. There must be confidence one in the other. That confidence must be based back on sympathy, understanding, forbearance. The members of a household do not expect perfection from one another, yet they are confident that those mistakes are of the head, and not of the heart. No more can the Church exist without this confidence than can the household.

The Church must demand of her members cooperation just as the household must. No one person can make a household. It is as each takes his place in the institution, doing with a will that which falls to his lot that there is peace and happiness, and the household is what God would have it be. Hangers-on, those who enter not into the duties and the privileges of the Church, are but parasites, valueless to themselves and to the Church. The Church must be built on love, even as must the household. Unless the whole institution is thoroughly permeated with that spirit of brotherly love which is the mark of a Christian institution, it is not living up to the ideal. Here is an ideal! Let us work toward it!—Rev. John A. McAfee.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer; all the circle joining.

SATURDAY.

"Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Gal. 6:7.

To reap what we sow is an unchangeable natural law. That is what we expect in our gardens and farms. These same natural laws apply to our moral and spiritual life. Sow to the mind and reap mentally; sow to the flesh and reap physically; sow disobedience and reap rebellion; sow selfishness and reap unkindness; sow neglect and reap forgetfulness; sow impatience and reap rudeness; sow teasing and reap temper; sow sin and reap decay of soul life.

The reason so many persist in sin is because they do not reap immediately. Penalty for moral and spiritual transgression is not speedily executed. The eating of too much meat may not effect us soon, but in the latter years of life we reap an impaired digestion and autointoxication and early death. Isaiah says: "Because sentence for an evil work is not speedily executed, therefore the hearts of men are set to do evil." And also we are in the habit of feeling that variation of time and circumstances, which brought ruin to others, gives us a security, and the thing that happened to others will not happen to us. We take the chance, and we, too, lose.

"The Lord keeps those that trust in Him."

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God * * * and all these things shall be added unto you."

"He that heareth the Word of God and doeth it shall be likened to a house built on a rock."

Prayer.—Let the head of the family lead in prayer today.

SUNDAY.

THE SABBATH AND MAN.

A day in the house of the Lord! What do you think about it?

The ancient temple was different from our own Church, in that it was open all the time. The services in those days, we are told, were in the form of an open forum, and all the people went early in the morning to hear instruction, worship and learn of Him.

Jesus is still Lord of the Sabbath, though so many do not recognize that fact and spend it unhallowedly. But He is waiting there just the same to teach us His truths—the things that are enduring and everlasting. We need the enduring and everlasting things very badly. Work harrasses us, for often it seems to amount to nothing; righteousness is challenged, for often we have to look for it to find it; the world is shaken and upset, institutions are falling, kings and rulers pass, kingdoms are blotted out, everything is passing away, and even we ourselves know not what tomorrow will bring forth. But there are some things that do not pass away—love, friendship, righteousness, justice, peace—and Jesus is in His temple to give all of these to us. Let us pray for it, and do all we can to improve our soul-life in His temple.

A secular paper today (November 15th) said: "One who associates habitually with the Church on Sunday, with all its faults, does not go very far wrong during the week."

Prayer.—Dear Father, mercifully look upon us and save us from the failure to use the Sabbath as Thou hast intended we should, and enable us to take advantage of every opportunity to learn of Thee. May we dwell in Thy temple, and love Thee to the end. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

FROM THE ORPHANAGE.

DEAR FRIENDS:

Our Thanksgiving offering is starting off very nicely. From the goals other orphanages have set in North Carolina, I feel that I would be very modest in asking our Church to make the Thanksgiving offering at least ten thousand dollars. I notice one orphanage in North Carolina that has three hundred children is asking for one hundred thousand dollars as a thankoffering. Another orphanage in North Carolina that has about three hundred children is putting on a building program that will amount to more than three hundren and fifty thousand dollars. Other orphanages in the State are putting on big programs. They feel that the future depends upon the training of the children. The fatherless are worthy of the best we can give.

The Christian Orphanage covers the States of North Carolina, Virginia, Georgia and Alabama, and has in its care 105 children, with more than sixty on the waiting list. Do we love our fatherless children less than other denominations love theirs? If we love ours as well, let us show our love by our deeds. At this Thanksgiving season will be a good time to show how much we love them by our Thanksgiving contributions.

We had seven applications last week, five from one family. Five healthy, bright and as pretty children as you ever see. Mother died the last of October, a member of the Christian Church, and her request was that they be kept together. The father appealed to us to take them here, where they could be cared for and trained. We have room, if we had sufficient funds. May God give our people a greater vision of the great service they can render to Him by helping these little ones.

The following has been contributed since our last report: Mrs. R. L. Ingram, Ingram, Va., 1 coat for girl; Ladies' Aid Society, First Church, Winchester, Va., 3 pairs pillow cases, 1 piece of romper cloth, 4 towels, 2 double cotton blankets, 18 pairs hose, 1 dozen card buttons; Mrs. T. U. Savage and a number of other good ladies from her Church, 4 dozen half-gallon fruit, 1 bag dried apples; Mrs. L. D. Kernodle, Jr., Philathia class, Berea Christian Church, N. C., 11 dresses, 4 pair hose, 2 suits underwear; John A. Wyatt, 1 side fresh meat; Ladies' Aid Society, Berea Christian Church, Va., 142 yards gongham, dresses, soap and stockings; Minneola Cotton Mills, Gibsonville, N. C., 100 yards outing; Pamona Cotton Mills, Greensboro, N. C., 150 yards gingham; Revolution Cotton Mills, Greensboro, N. C., 300 yards outing; Proximity Manufacturing Company, Greensboro, N. C., 471 yards denim; Virginia Cotton Mills, 64 yards gingham; Dry Run Sunday School, Valley of Virginia, 10 yards of gingham, 3 pair socks, 8 dresses, sweater, 2 caps; Ladies' Aid Society, Chapel Hill Christian Church, 3 hats, cloth, clothing, canned goods; Vitus Holt, Burlington, N. RELIGIOUS EDUCATION DOINGS.

Martha's Chapel Christian Church has recently organized a Christian Endeavor Society, with Cecil Morgan as president, Hettie Mae Jenkins as vice-president, and Estus Morgan as secretary.

Bethel Church, near New Hill, N. C., is now laying plans for the second session of its daily vacation Bible school next summer. On December 16th, the joint committee from that Church and the Collin's Grove Baptist Church holds its first meeting looking forward to next summer's session.

The field secretary, with Miss Pattie Coghill, visited a number of Churches during November. On Friday night, November 23rd, a meeting was held at New Hope Christian Church, Eastern North Carolina Conference. A representative from the new Christian Endeavor Society at Beulah also took part in the meeting, and plans for future work were made. Mr. W. F. Edwards is president and leader of the New Hope society. On the following night, an inspiring session of the Oak Level Christian Endeavor Society was held, with Mr. Wade White, the president, as leader.

Henderson Christian Church has a fine junior society. Thirty juniors were present Sunday afternoon, November 25th, and most took part in the meeting. Mrs. W. O. Cunningham is both junior superintendent and teacher of the juniors in the Sunday School, and has a group of boys and girls who are working hard.

Mr. R. C. Osborne is the new president of the Liberty (Vance) Christian Endeavor Society. This society has a large membership, and, although only about one year old, has already assisted in the organization of three new societies.

Hines' Chapel and Fuller's Chapel Sunday Schools were visited recently and found doing good work.

Elon Chautauqua comes July 28th to August 3rd in 1924, and many workers are already talking about it. Plan to be at Elon for Chautauqua week.

MISSION BOARD TO THE RESCUE.

Owing to the fact that the Workers' Home at Fancy Gap, Va., was nearing completion and Mr. and Mrs. Sorrell and Miss Margaret Morey are very anxious to move into the new house and get settled before cold weather comes on, the Mission Board was compelled to purchase the necessary furniture for the house, sufficient to furnish two bed rooms, living-room and kitchen. This step was taken, relying upon the faith the Mission Board has in the Woman's Missionary Societies to secure the funds to pay for the furniture.

A number of societies in the Eastern Virginia and North Carolina Conferences signified a desire to have a part in this project, so we are writing to earnestly request thatt he checks be mailed to Mrs. M. L. Bryant, treasurer of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Mission Board, Berkley, Va., and Mrs. W. R. Sellars, treasurer North Carolina Woman's Mission Board, at Burlington, N. C., just as early as possible, in order that Dr. J. O. Atkinson, who has the matter in charge, may settle the bills for the furniture.

President W. M. Board, S. C. C.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

December 16, 1923.

Subject: "World-Wide Missions."—Acts 16:1-28:31; Romans 15:18-21; Ephesians 3:2-9.

Golden Text: I am not ashamed of the Gospel, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.—Rom. 1:16.

Devotional Reading: Rom. 10:8-15.

A World Vision and a World Task.

There is an old, old tale which tells that in a great forest there once lived a band of brave knights. These knights were known as the "Knights of the Silver Shield," because each received, when he attained knighthood, a dull-silver shield. Bravely these knights went wherever they were needed. Sometimes they stormed castles, and sometimes they were called upon to defend helpless women and children. Again, they had to fight wild beasts or perform other hazardous tasks. Of one thing only were these knights afraid—that their shields might remain dull. Such a shield would proclaim to the world "This knight has done no noble deed." Each unselfish, brave deed made the shield grow brighter and brighter, and the knight who did the bravest and highest service would find a golden star in the heart of his shining shield. But that was a tale of the long ago. Knights with bright shields are not among us today, but in their trail is a host of heroes with like strength and courage. These are the knights of Jesus Christ. Some of these are those who started out, but whose shields are still very dull. Others who can see more clearly and are willing to do deeds of unselfishness and courage are winning their shining shield, with the "star" of a deed well done. And the very bravest of these Christian knights have been those men and women with a world vision, who have been glad to give their prayers, their money, and even their very lives in an endeavor to win the world, the whole wide world, to the ranks of their Leader and Lord, Jesus Christ. No other task demands more heroism than world-wide missions. No other task so challenges the consecration and devotion and faith of a youth.

A century ago there were few Christians who were willing and prepared to accept any responsibility for any part of the unevangelized world. When William Carey proposed to a meeting of Baptist ministers in England a discussion of the question, "The duty of Christians to attempt the spread of the Gospel among heathen nations," he was called "a miserable enthusiast." When, in 1606, that little group of students at Williams College prayed in the shelter of a haystack, and rose convinced that the obligation to give Christ to the non-Christians of their generation rested upon them and their fellow-Christians who were then living, they were under no delusion that this conviction would meet with a general favorable response from their Churches. But the vision is spreading. Opposition is dying, and indifference is being swept away. More "knights of Jesus Christ" are being found to follow in the missionary pathway of the apostle Paul, with a world vision, to a world task.

"And after he had seen."—The first appeal of this missionary incident related in Acts is to see the world's need. A Christian Sunday School teacher suggested the other day that expensive Christmas presents be given up in her home this year, and the money saved be sent to feed starving Armenians. She had seen the need so plainly that she was willing to sacrifice that it might be satisfied. Paul had a vision first which brought him to his knees before Jesus Christ with the cry, "What wilt Thou have me to do?" Then he had a vision of a man on a distant shore, calling for help, and when he had seen, he was ready and glad to go. "Help! help!" is the cry of countless souls today to the Christian Church. What shall her answer be? Truly lost is the man or the child who is away from God, lost far more than the child in a forest of wild animals, or a dungeon in darkness. Only true and brave Christian knights can go out for the Church to the wide world to save the non-Christian nations. What will the answer be?

"Immediately we endeavor."—Immediate action is the second appeal. "Expect great things from God. Attempt great things for God," was William Carey's counsel. The response of Paul and his companions was immediate, and it was together. "We" is Paul's word. Only in union of effort can the great world task be approached and accomplished. And they went, together with God. The historian tells of the place where prayer was wont to be made. So used were they to going there together to pray, that worship was pre-eminent in their thoughts as they reached the river side. How much do you pray, O world Christian? What place does prayer have in your Christian crusade? Only prayer can be the safe guide for immediate endeavor.

"Preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ."—This is the message which the world needs. If the members of the Church of Jesus Christ would devote their time to such teaching in their daily lives and common conversation, rather than to the condemnation of others and criticism of their faults, the whole world would be much nearer the Christ.

This series of missionary lessons should present to our hearts some very searching questions. Am I a missionary Christian—that is, do I love others more than self, and am I seeking to bring them to Jesus Christ, whether they are living next-door or in a far distant land? Can a selfish Christian please Jesus Christ? Am I a world Christian, and ready to take my part in a great world task? What contribution is my life making to the great kingdom of God for which my Saviour died? The Christian who can honestly face these vital questions, and strive to measure his Christian life according to the great commands of Jesus Christ, has received from these lessons a blessing which can never be taken from him. He will share in the great Christian crusade, as a heroic and true knight of Jesus Christ.

"O matchless honor, all unsought,
High privilege, surpassing thought,
That Thou shouldst call us, Lord, to be Linked in work-fellowship with Thee.
To carry out Thy wondrous plan,
To bear Thy messages to man,
'In trust,' with Christ's own word of grace
To every soul of human race!"

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

December 16, 1923.

Topic: "Bible Passages We Should Memorize, and Why." (Each Endeavorer to memorize one passage.)

Thoughts for the Meeting.

John 3:16 has been called the "Little Bible," for it brings the message of the love of God, the theme of His Word.

A convert on a mission field complained to his missionary preacher that he could not memorize Scripture. The messionary advised that he choose a verse, and after repeating it carefully a number of times, try to put it into practice. The boy did it, and soon found that he knew, and was "living" many verses. Try it!

There are four places where the Bible should surely be—in the home, in the hand, in the head, and in the heart. How much of the Bible have you in your head and heart?

Dr. James M. Gray declares that the Bible is like a farm. The farmer must know his farm before he attempts to work it. He must know how much is upland and how much lowland; how much wood and how much pasture; what the land will best produce. When he has mastered his farm he begins to get ready for results from it. So the Christian must know the Bible before he can look for much result.

The Bible is the finest piece of literature. To memorize its choice passages, enriches our speech.

The Bible we know is the Bible which really helps us.

The useful Christian can use His Bible at all times. Memorized passages are his most effective passages in personal work.

Plans for the Meeting.

The Young People's Service suggests a Bible-bee, conducted like the old-time spelling-bee, for this meeting. Divide your society into two sections and give each member a turn alternately to recite a Bible verse. Whoever fails, drops out, and the side keeping up the longest wins. Or call on each member to quote a verse, telling what that verse has meant in his life, and how it has helped him.

Ask four members to make short talks on these topics: The place of knowing the Bible in our education. How the Bible enriches the life. How a knowledge of the Bible enlarges our usefulness. How the Bible strengthens character.

Questions for thought and answer: When is the best time in life to learn Bible verses and passages? What Bible verse has influenced your life for good? How can we best learn Bible verses? Name some Bible passages which every Christian should know (see Daily Readings), which include the ten commandments, the beatitudes, the shepherd psalm, the first psalm, Paul's farewell and the love chapter.

Suggested Hymns.—"Holy Bible, Book Divine," "Tell Me the Story of Jesus," "Break Thou the Bread of Life," "How Firm a Foundation."

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

December 16, 1923.

Topic: "Children in Turkey and Persia."—John 21:15.

"There are dear little children, far over the sea,
That are cunning and cute and as sweet as can be,
Yet some never heard of the Jesus we love,
And have not a tho't of the Father above.
O what can we do to help send them the Word?
To tell them of Jesus, our Saviour and Lord?
We can give of our pennies, our nickels and dimes,
We can take them in pray'r to Him numberless times,
For, although they may live far away o'er the sea,
Jesus loves ev'ry one as He does you and me."

PAUL'S AIM AND METHOD.

Aim to deepen in pupils the sense of obligation to extend the kingdom of Christ by showing how Christianity has come to us. Use the helps in the pupil's quarterly; read carefully the Home

Readings—these will give vision and illumine the lesson.

Teaching the Lesson.

1. The World of Paul's Day.—Use the map and point out that the world was then quite small, as far as the knowledge of men was concerned, consisting of a fringe of territory surrounding the Mediterranean Sea. India and China were far to the east and moving along as they had for hundreds of years in the past, and as they would for hundreds of years in the future. The power of the world had slowly shifted from the Euphrates valley in Abraham's time, to the Nile valley in Moses' time, then to Greece in the time of the later prophets. Before Jesus was born, Rome was the commanding nation on the stage of history. Northern Europe was occupied by barbarians.

The Greek language was widely known and Roman law made travel safe on the great highways connecting the imperial city with the provinces. It was an opportune time to introduce Christianity.

The Jews were scattered all over the empire, and in most large cities had synagogues, at least a place of prayer, as at Philippi. Their purer faith was attracting the attention of serious-minded people everywhere who had lost faith in the gods of tradition. Some of them even espoused the Hebrew religion and became proselytes. No general movement of this kind could be expected, owing to the intensely nationalistic ideas of the Jews.

The Christian religion, with its teachings of the Fatherhood of God, the deliverance from sin by the death of Christ, the service of man as the ideal of duty, and the hope of the life everlasting, was just such a gospel as men needed and blindly expected. If a man could be found in the Church combining Hebrew faith, Greek culture, and Roman forcefulness, it might be possible in one generation to spread the tidings of the kingdom of Christ throughout the known world.

Such a man was Saul of Tarsus. Born of Jewish race, yet possessing Roman citizenship; brought up in the strictest manner as a Pharisee, yet familiar with Grecian culture; deeply in earnest, yet balancing it by large sympathy and an inborn gentility; at first an enemy of Christ, yet afterwards His most powerful advocate on that very account—this was the man God chose to bridge the chasm between Hebraism and Christianity. (Eph. 3:2-9.)

After the momentous conference at Jerusalem and the decision was reached that Gentiles were to be received into the Church on their faith and apart from the works of the Jewish law, the principle so strongly contended for by Paul in the letter to the Galatians, the way was open for world-wide missionary effort. Our lesson today, covering the last half of the book of the acts, is the story of the rapid spread of the Gospel. In a few years it was carried from one end of the Mediterranean to the other.

Of course, you will use your maps and trace rapidly Paul's triumphant progress from the hour of his conversion at Damascus, to Jerusalem, to Tarsus, to Antioch, to Troas, to Philippi, to Corinth, to Rome, and, we are almost certain, to Spain. Use your imagination and paint glowingly his fiaming devotion to Christ.

2. The World of Our Day.—The world we know is far larger than the one Paul knew, but the problem of communication and transportation is much easier for us, thanks to modern inventions. We know a multitude of nations. (Take an atlas, or a globe, into class, and in a moment of time give the pupils a vision of all the kingdoms of the world.) It is a world recently torn by war, still suffering from its wounds, needing some good Samaritan for its healing. It is full of misunderstandings and jealousies and enmities. There are barriers of race and class and color. It is threatened with a reversion to savagery unless speedily the gospel of the kingdom of God is proclaimed and believed. Only Christ can save.

3. You and Your World.—You must become personal—the world's needs must be brought home to the hearts of your young people. Use Paul's vision at Troas and suggest that visions come to youths today—the men who have blessed mankind by some signal service have begun with a sense of the need of others. They have heard Macedonian calls for help and have been obedient unto the heavenly vision.

Make sure that they see that our Christian civilization is possible only because Paul obeyed the spirit of the Gospel and gave his life to the service of men. Out of the Churches he founded or revived, missionaries went forth to our barbarian ancestors in northern Europe, else we might still have been in darkness, having no hope and without God in the world.

Close with the loftiness of Paul's ambition—to be of the greatest use to the world, to reach the widest circle with the mercy of Christ—and urge your pupils to follow their highest ideals.—Adapted.

BIBLE SOCIETY HOLDS ANNIVERSARY.

On "Bible Sunday" evening, December 9, 1923, the New York Bible Society will hold its one hundred and fourteenth anniversary service. Hon. Arthur S. Tompkins, justice of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, and grand master of Masons, will deliver the anniversary address on "The Value and Influence of the Bible." The service will be held in the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas, Fifth Avenue and Forty-eighth Street, New York. The work of the New York Bible Society has continued without interruption for 114 years. Its work among the immigrants has been maintained for ninety years, and among the seamen since the year 1817.

During the past year, the distribution of the Scriptures by the society has been larger than ever before in its history. Sixteen thousand Bibles have been placed in the guest rooms of hotels during the year. More than two hundred institutions, including homes, hospitals and prisons, have been supplied with the Scriptures. Many volumes in raised type have been given to the blind. This distribution, which has been in fifty-three languages, has been, for the most part, free. The society is supported by Church collections and by donations from friends who love the Bible and our country. The society is located in its new Bible House, 5 East Forty-eighth Street, New York. GOOD NEWS FROM GREEN COUNTY, VA.

The following lines, which were personal to the writer, from Rev. A. R. Flowers, who, for the past year, was located at Dendron, Va., is certainly worth telling to CHRISTIAN SUN readers:

"We closed the meeting here last night with good results. We have had twenty-eight young people to come into the Church through a profession of faith in Christ, and a few to transfer. In all, it has been one of the most encouraging meetings I have been in for some time. Bro. Earp was here only three days. However, we received seven members the last night he was here.

"I am going over into the Luray Valley tomorrow and will write you in a few days.

"I have had the most hearty co-operation from the faculty of both the industrial school and also the public school."

This meeting was held in our Mt. Olivet, Green County, Va., Church, which Church building was dedicated last summer. Rev. W. C. Hook was last-year pastor. The industrial school referred to is that maintained by the Episcopalians as a mission work in the mountains of Green County. We have a great opportunity at Mt. Olivet, and in that vicinity, for a real constructive work, and the writer is most happy indeed to have such glad tidings from that field.

GOD'S WIRELESS.

BY HOWARD W. POPE.

God's wireless reaches every heart—
We have a conscience from the start;
Thus He communicates His will,
Or bids our anxious fears be still;
Thus, instantly, our God can reach
Each living soul, and to it preach,
Restraining it from evil ways,
Reminding it of what He says.

If we have trouble, pain or care,
And go to God in earnest prayer,
He hears our signal of distress,
And answers every S O S.
A mother, who in quiet hour,
Into God's heart has learned to pour
Her heart's desire for children dear,
Finds comfort which allays her fear.

A heathen, who in foreign land,
Receives God's message of command,
Lifts up his pleading voice to heaven,
And saving grace is quickly given.
A preacher, singer, soldier brave,
Receives a message which God gave,
Which fires his soul to do its best,
And let his Father do the rest.

CARDINAL PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Suggestive Thoughts.

There are jewels of thought as well as jewels of gold. It is folly to pass them by. We can make them our own my memorizing them and living them.

The Bible memorized enriches the mind and the vocabulary; but, better, it enriches the soul. It is a record of deep spiritual experience which tends to reproduce itself in those that read.

The Bible is a book of life; it deals with life fearlessly, its sin, its punishment, its hope, its victory. It lays down the true principles of living.

The Scriptures are God's thoughts. They look at things from God's point of view. What men think about this or that is unimportant, but what God thinks is vital. Store it in the mind.

To Think About.

What Bible passage has most impressed you, and why?

Why should we learn great Bible texts by subjects?

How can we stimulate the memorizing of texts by Endeavorers?

Debate.—Resolved, That it is more beneficial to memorize one verse of Scripture than to read a whole chapter.

Rumatism and Indigestion

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its affects in their practice, believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect, and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

If you suffer from Rheumatism, Indigestion, or from any curable disease, accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to—

Nothing like trouble, to make you think. In Berlin, heavy trucks, with regular gasoline engines, are run with gas produced from charcoal, and it works better than gasoline.

A small cylinder filled with burning charcoal supplies to the engine gas and power enough to run a heavy omnibus for seven hours.

There is a new use for the farmer's wood. Make it into charcoal, fill up your combustion cylinder, run your tractor all day—no carburetor, no gasoline bill.

Wake up, Henry Ford, and get to work on cheap, safe flying machines. They are selling them in Germany, all metal, safe, doing sixty miles an hour, less than a gallon of gas for sixty miles; price, $1,190.

Farmers, salesmen buy the machines by thousands.

Ford could sell them for $500. America needs them, Texas especially. Where is the young Ford to do for America in the air what Ford has done on earth?

The professor of Chinese at Columbia University says that Chinese is not a difficult language to learn and that any intelligent person may gain a working knowledge of the language in three months.

Colleges Should Encourage Study.—

Dr. Alexander Meikel-John, formerly president of Amherst College, recently said: "The American college should teach the student how to think about something other than football. To get anywhere, the colleges should kick out the young man who won't try to study."

Pennsylvania Notaries Dry.—

Applicants for notary public commissions in Pennsylvania in the future will be asked to take the prohibition pledge by Governor Pinchot and Secretary of State Clyde L. King. New blank forms for applications which are sent out from the Governor's office and become effective December 5th, place the notary publics on the same basis as other State employees, although they pay twenty-five dollars for their commissions.

On the new forms, which contain four pages of questions instead of two on the old forms, the twelfth question is, "Will you, on your word of honor, support, defend and personally obey the Constitution of the United States, including the eighteenth amendment, and the State laws enacted to carry that amendment into effect?"

The Turkish Treaty.—

Mr. James W. Gerard, former ambassador to Germany, is starting a propaganda against the acceptance of the American treaty with Turkey.

Mr. Gerard says that we have put ourselves in the hands of Turkey in order to gain the Chester oil concessions. Turkey made all sorts of promises, many of which have already been violated. She promised to grant religious freedom, but has not done it. She assured us that atrocities would cease, but they have not done so. By this treaty, American citizens who are charged with offenses in Turkey can be tried in Turkish courts. And all who know anything about the history of Turkey know how unreliable those courts are and how very likely they would be not to give fair and just trials to our citizens.

Mr. Gerard went first to President Coolidge and urged him to exert his influence in defeating the acceptance of the treaty. He will also appeal to the Senate, and he has secured the co-operation of some of our ablest statesmen of all parties.

We are constrained to say here what we have often said before—that Turkey, which deserves less than any other nation, has profited most by the World War.—Exchange.

The Soldiers' Bonus.—

From an exchange we clip the following as to the bonus for the soldiers of the late World War:

One of the acute questions to come before Congress will be the soldiers' bonus. Tremendous pressure is being brought to bear on the members of Congress to have the bonus granted, while from other quarters there is strong sentiment against it.

The clearest discussion of this subject that we have yet seen is in World's Work for December. The present demand for $4,000,000,000, the editor of the World's Work says, is but little less than the total amount which the United States has spent in Civil War pensions over a period of sixty years. This, however, is but the beginning. "If the veterans of the World War are dealt with on this meagre basis, comparatively speaking, they will receive not far from $128,000,000,000 in the next fifty-seven years. But judging from the proposal now put forward as an 'ultimatum,' no such parsimonious system of financial reward is to be tolerated. What the total expenditure will amount to, therefore, will be expressed in figures that only the astronomers can understand."

The editorial says the most serious aspect of this whole matter is not financial, but the effect it will have on American character. "Of the 4,000,000 survivors of the World War, only half left their own country, and only half of those who reached France saw military service. The grtat mass of these are young, just starting in life; they are in vigorous health and entirely capable mentally and physically of earning their own living. * * * It certainly bodes ill for the future of the country that these young and healthy men should early assert the right of being supported, in part, by the public treasury, and this as compensation for having performed merely an elementary duty of citizenship."

The Dr. McBrayer Case.—

At its session in February, the Legislature appointed a committee to investigate charges that had been made against Dr. L. B. McBrayer, superintendent of the tubercular sanatorium. The committee exonerated Dr. McBrayer, who had resigned during the investigation, and he was reappointed by the new board.

Dr. McBrayer was indicted in the Hoke court some time ago upon the charge that he traded with himself for the sanatorium. He is interested in a large peach orchard near the sanatorium, and bought peaches from that orchard for the institution. There is a law prohibiting a manager of a State institution from trading with himself, and, although witnesses for McBrayer said that he bought peaches from the orchard in which he was interested at a lower price than he could have secured them elsewhere, Judge Sinclair, who tried the case, held that he was guilty, he having admitted the truthfulness of the charge. He was fined $50.00, which was the minimum amount fixed by law, and the judge declared the superintendency of the sanatorium vacant. This, he said, he was required to do by law.

Dr. McBrayer appealed to the Supreme Court. Governor Morrison wrote the chairman of the sanatorium board, ordering him to call the board together and demand that Dr. McBrayer vacate. The chairman of the board called on the Attorney General for a ruling, and Judge Manning held that Dr. McBrayer could not be forced out until the Supreme Court acts on the case.

Petitions for the pardon of Dr. McBrayer were sent to the Governor, but the Governor said he had no authority to grant a pardon where the law distinctly declared that a man who violated a certain statute must be removed from office. The Governor left the responsibility of disposing of the case with the directors of the sanatorium.—Exchange.

North Carolina's Progress.—

The Biblical Recorder puts it this way:

The American Review of Reviews for December contains a very informing article by Mr. William H. Richardson, private secretary to Governor Morrison, on "North Carolina's Recent Progress." The article is illustrated by the pictures of leading citizens, public buildings, school-houses, growing crops, tobacco barns and other things of interest. Among the men whose faces we see are Governor Morrison, Major W. A. Graham, Dr. E. C. Brooks, Prof. A. T. Allen, Dr. W. S. Rankin and Mr. Charles M. Upham.

Mr. Richardson states in the beginning of his article that State-wide constructive policies were unknown in North Carolina until Charles B. Aycock became Governor in 1901. The campaign for the education of all the people—vigorously made by Governor Aycock—was the beginning of a new day in North Carolina. Mr. Richardson shows how rapidly we have progressed educationally along all lines, not failing to take into account the importance of educating the negroes, to whose institutions liberal appropriations have been made.

He speaks especially of the consolidated schools, to which schools 23,000 are carried daily by 600 motor trucks. He points out that during the administration of Major W. A. Graham as commissioner of agriculture, the State has gone from twenty-third to fifth place in the value of its crops. Mr. Frank Parker, agricultural statistician, shows that diversification is on the increase. Our farmers are no longer depending on one money crop, and they are not buying from other States as they once did.

North Carolina contributes more to the Federal government than it expends on itself, ranking as the sixth State in the amount of Federal taxes it pays. During the past fiscal year it yielded $140,000,000. And the collector of internal revenue believes this year's figures will reach $160,000,000.

Of course, the industrial life of North Carolina has a prominent place in this interesting article. We haven't space to give further review, but Mr. Richardson has made the State his debtor by giving through this great American journal such a fine account of our progress.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Who will be the next to send in five new subscribers to THE SUN from his field?

If you have not sent in to the editor the minutes of your Conference, Mr. Secretary, please do so just as soon as possible. The publisher is needing the copy right away.

Let us give Bethlehem College a helping hand. They are undertaking and doing a great work for our cause in the farther South. Let us help them and do it at once, for now is the time of need with them. See Bro. Carter's "Bethlehem College Notes" in this issue.

Please notice the letter in this issue from Bro. Sorrell as to the request sent to Mrs. Sorrell, from a little mountain girl, who wants a Christmas present. Would you like to make her happy? Then you know how to do it. You may send a present for the little mountain girl to Rev. M. T. Sorrell, Fancy Gap, Va.

THE SUN is crowded each week with matter of real value to the people of the Christian Church. Read it carefully yourself, and then lend it to some neighbor who does not take it, and point out to him or her the articles which seem to you to be the most valuable, and then after it has been read, maybe you can get a subscriber by making an effort. Try it and see what success you have.

And what do you think of Dr. Harper's suggestions, as given in THE CHRISTIAN SUN for the last two or three weeks, as to the "budget system" of finance, as meeting the needs of the Christian Church. He is feeling his way over a tried, but as yet an uncertain, way. Suppose you get his letters together and study them carefully, and then tell him what you think of his views.

"Three cheers for THE CHRISTIAN SUN and our 'Weekly Pulpit.' I certainly enjoy the sermons through THE SUN each week. My Bible is first, my preaching second, and THE SUN is third. I thank God for all that stands for truth and not afraid to tell it. May THE CHRISTIAN SUN long live to bless children yet unborn, and may God speed the day when it will be placed in every home among our people."—Mrs. R. J. Newton, Liberty, Vance County, N. C.

Do you read the poems which occasionally appear from the pen and heart of the Rev. H. W. Hope, 499 Cedar Street, Nlies, Mich.? If you do, it might do him good to write him a short note, telling him of the good they are doing for your heart and mind. Bro. Pope was once connected with the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago. He is now almost blind and affiicted. He writes his poems for THE SUN as a privilege and pleasure, that ere he is called away he may throw light on the path of some weary pilgrim and comfort some who mourn. Do not forget him at this Christmas time. A cheering word of appreciation at this Christmas time will doubtless give him encouragement and stimulate him to renewed effort in doing the Lord's work.

The Elm Street Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va., has, during the present year, built a parsonage for its pastor, and they have done it well. It is ample for a small family and withal is very comfortable. The work there continues to grow under the blessings of God upon the labors of Rev. Dr. Harward. In passing through that community recently, when near the Church building, we met an elderly gentleman, and asking him some question as to the Church, he answered in such terms as we shall not soon forget. If Dr. Harward has impressed that community as he has this one man (who is not a member of that Church), then we can have no fear but that the work will prosper, so far as human help can make it prosper, for he quickly put Pastor Harward in a class almost by himself. We are glad to hear of the fine impression he is making there for the cause.

GREAT SALE OF SEALS PREDICTED.

Indications are that North Carolina and every other state in the Union will have this year the largest returns from the sale of Tuberculosis Christmas Seals of any year in the history of the movement. The reasons given are: first, the Tuberculosis Christmas Seal has come to be a national institution in the United States, and millions of men, women and children look upon it as an annual opportunity and responsibility which they must meet toward the tuberculosis work.

Christmas now would not be Christmas without this little messenger of hope and the opportunity it brings in reach of everybody to help check the disease. As a matter of fact, disappointment is now felt during the Christmas season if the seal is absent from its accustomed place. The Christmas mail or message is not complete without it.

In the second place, the Tuberculosis Christmas Seal sale has become a business of such magnificent proportions that no community interests can afford to be without it. It is a money-making business for health interests. The $25,000,000 realized in the last sixteen years or the $3,812,000 realized last year from the Christmas seal sale is but one indication of the financial interests involved.

But more significant than the net receipts of the sale are the figures showing the results accomplished with the money. As Christmas seal money is not adequate to support institutions or to care for patients, it is used to agitate and organize public opinion to secure sanatoria, nurses, open-air schools and other agencies. The total value of institutions brought into existence largely through the Christmas seal sale is in the neighborhood of $100,000,000 and the annual maintenance cost for such agencies is between $30,000,000 and $40,000,000. More than 1,200 State and local tuberculosis associations have been built up and most of these have full-time executives.

There is a State association in every State, over 700 tuberculosis hospitals and sanatoria, with a bed capacity of 66,000, and nearly 600 tuberculosis clinics and dispensaries.

The Tuberculosis Christmas Seal sale movement has come to stay. In North Carolina there are 150 seal-selling organizations actively at work, with many of them selling seals has become a fine business. Each year these organizations become better perfected, using business-like methods, with the result that the seal sales show greater returns.

SANATORIUM.

OUR CITIZENSHIP.

In St. Paul's day it was considered a great thing to be a Roman citizen. You recall that Paul was proud of being a Roman citizen, and in those days it meant both dignity and honor. There were three ways in which a man could become a Roman citizen by birth, by special act or by grace of the State, usually bestowed for some service rendered to the State by purchase. In all these ways the Christian becomes a citizen of the kingdom of heaven. When Nicodemus came to Jesus by night to enquire about this new citizenship, Jesus said "Ye must be born again." That new birth, new allegiance and a new life is still required to become a citizen of heaven.

It is also an act of grace, for it is not because of any merit or worthiness in ourselves, but by the grace of God, that we are accounted worthy to be members of his kingdom. It is also by purchase, for we are bought "not with silver or gold, but with the precious blood of Jesus, through His innocent sufferings and death. Any true citizen of his country is always ready to support anything for the betterment of it by word or action. He will speak up for the rights (through ballot), pay his taxes to help carry on the work of the government, through love if needs be, give his service to defend his flag. So every true citizen of heaven should ever be ready to speak up for the right things in the interest of the kingdom. Let his or her ballot always be on the Lord's side. Let us remember that there is only three voting. The Lord is voting for us, and Satan voting against us, and whichever way we vote carries the election. A true citizen will pay his taxes by giving liberally as God has prospered, to carry on the work of the kingdom. Remember, we are not to give grudgingly, for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver. We may give all we possess and our bodies to be burned, and if we have not love in the giving it will profit us nothing.

As the earthly citizen is ready to give his service to protect his flag, so the Christian citizen should ever be ready to fight for Jesus and protect the blood-stained banner of the cross. If we are Christians, we are citizens of heaven now. It is a present possession. Now are we called the sons of God, said St. John. First, as Christians, we must live as becoming citizens of heaven. Whether eat, therefore, or drink, or whatsoever we do, let us do it all to the glory of God. Second, we should cheerfully obey the laws of heaven. As I recall, Jesus reduced them all to two—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and greatest commandment, and the second is like unto it. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." The great law of heaven is love. Third, as Christians, we should carry the atmosphere of heaven with us. It is often difficult to recognize our heavenly citizenship by our conversation, actions or likeness to Jesus Christ. The Roman had the right of personal access to the emperor. The Christian has this same right of access to God. We are told to draw nigh unto God in full assurance of faith, and He will draw nigh unto us. If we only do that and obey the laws of heaven, we would be true citizens, not slackers in anything pertaining to the extension of His kingdom. If we were going to take a trip to a far-away country, the first thing to be done would be to find out something about the place and secure a way-bill to help us. Now, we are on our way to a far country, and the Bible is a true way-bill to lead us to that city, whose builder and maker is God. Heaven will be to us just what we make it. What kind of material are we sending up to God to build our eternal home? If we fail to have as good a mansion as he can build, it will be because we failed to send good material for the building. Let us send Him our best, and thereby prove that we are true citizens. May we say to Jesus with a sincere heart: "O Man of Galilee, if you have left undone anything that I can do, you can depend on me.

Questions and Answers.

JOHN THE APOSTLE.

Question.—What became of John the Apostle after he was banished to Patmos? Did he die there?—Mrs. S. A. H.

The information which would answer your question is lacking. There is a tradition that the Jews put John to death, but there is not much dependence in it. There is another tradition that John was put to death by being cast into a cauldron of boiling oil. This is not to be depended on definitely, although it has a little more show of truth than the other tradition. His banishment to the Isle of Patmos was toward the close of his life, when John was a very old man. Yet I can find no evidence to indicate that he died there. The probability seems to be in favor of John, after his Patmos experience, going back to Ephesus, his old home, and dying there, when he was about one hundred years of age. However, none of these traditions are to be fully relied on, as to the right answer to the questions you ask. The most common tradition as to the death of John is that he was cast into a boiling cauldron of oil.

IN WHAT SENSE WAS HE A HARD MAN?

Question.—Please explain through THE SUN Matt. 25:24. In what sense is Christ like the man mentioned in this verse, a hard man?—G. H. V.

As we understand it, Jesus Christ was like him in no sense. The man who had the one talent, and had added nothing to it, when he was called to account for his laziness, was evidently trying to fix up an excuse for not having put his lord's money to a wise service, and it was he who, in trying to make such an excuse, said: "I knew thee that thou art an hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown and gathering where thou hast not strowed; and I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth; lo thou hast that is thine." There is no proof that the man was a hard man, not at all. It was the man who had received the talent that was bad, and not the man who let him have the talent. The facts show the opposite. This man's excuse reflects on himself, not on Christ.

Question.—What is evolution, and how long has it been taught in this country?—G. H. V.

As to what evolution is, it may be said to be a scientific and philosophical theory, and so far it is nothing more than a theory, for the proof of its claims has never yet been found, but the theory is designed to explain the origin and course of all things in the universe. Understand, that is what is claimed as its design, but it comes very far short of so explaining. As to when it was first taught in this country, we may say it is not quite certain, except it has been in late years—say, during the last century. In other countries it has been known in some form for hundreds of years. A similar thought to evolution was advanced as early as 500 years before Christ by Heraclitus and others; but as now known, Charles Darwin, who was born in 1809, was the first to develop, classify and give prominence to it as a philosophy. So its study in this country is of recent date. Fifty years ago it was not much known, and less taught. Thirty years ago it was just beginning to attract attention among the scholars in this country in any extensive way. From that time on, it began to get into our colleges and universities, and a little later it began to take a place in our high schools, and now it is taught even in our common schools some. As to what per cent of our colleges teach evolution, I have no accurate information, but it is safe to say that the per cent is very high. I should think, perhaps, at least 75 per cent of our colleges and universities teach evolution; but, after all their teaching, it is only a theory and not a demonstrated fact. No man has been able to clear up all its difficulties.

ZEBEDEE.

Question.—Who was Zebedee, so often mentioned in the Gospels?—Sally.

Zeberee was a fisherman, and lived near Bethsaida. He was the father of James and John, two of the apostles of Christ. That is about all that we know of Zebedee.

THE NEGROES UP NORTH.

Question.—Can you tell me how the negroes are faring—I mean those who went North some time ago to live—are they doing as well North as they did South?

In recent years, there has been quite a movement of the Southern negroes northward. They have gone by the thousands, so that our Northern people are beginning to find out something of the trials of our Southern people in trying to live two races in the same section of the country. The two races do not mix up North quite so well as they did in the South. The Literary Digest of October 6, 1923, tells somewhat of the situation in the Northern States at this time because the negro is there in considerable numbers. The Mayor of Johnstown, Pa., seems to have gotten into a good bit of trouble with the negroes. He issued an order some weeks ago ordering all the negroes in Johnstown who had not been living there for a term of seven years to leave the town, and we are told that they left and have sought homes elsewhere. We do not know just why this order was given, except that they were not desirable on some account. The Mayor of Johnstown has been pretty badly criticised in many sections for this seemingly unwarranted action. Not all the people in Johnstown sympathize with the Mayor. The Johnstown Democrat has put the case clearly and briefly as against the Mayor, when it says: "The negroes who have come to Johnstown in search of employment may not all of them be of the most desirable class, but until they have committed some overt act they are entitled to the same freedom of movement and the same protection as whites who come hither to work in our various industries." That Mayor is credited with saying:

"As Mayor of this city, I'm not going to stand idle and allow the South to dump its criminals and riff-raff into Johnstown. The negroes can stay where they belong—that's in the South. The old-time negroes in this city never gave us any trouble, but the scum that has been brought here is not going to remain while I'm Mayor. Their colonies are lined with houses of prostitution and dives for the sale of moonshine and dope. That has to stop, and the negroes responsible for it must leave the city.

"If these negroes remain here, we could never stop the wave of crime this winter. The Cambria plant of the Bethlehem Steel Company is running slack. Men are being laid off and the thousands of negroes and Mexicans imported here are not needed. What are thousands of the idle negroes and Mexicans, stimulated by poison liquor and dope, going to do in Johnstown this winter?"

That shows pretty plainly the way the Mayor of Johnstown sees the situation. He thinks the South is piling up their riff-raff on the North, but in this he is mistaken. The South does not, as we understand it, wish to give up the negro, but Northern agents, for the sake of making money out of the misfortunes of the negro, have been inducing them to leave the South. The poor negro is again the catspaw to pull the hot chestnut out of the embers. The South does not wish the negro to leave the South, for the Southern farmer especially needs the negro to cultivate his lands. There is, we think, no doubt about it, the Southern white man is the best friend the negro has in the United States. If those who have gone North can get back, the best thing he can do, as we see it, is make his way back to Dixie and go to work in the good old warm sunshine (a thing the negro loves) to make a good, honest living for himself and his family. In Johnstown, the negroes are forbidden to hold meetings or social functions. They are allowed to hold Church meetings, however.

"WATCH NIGHT."

"The one concern of the devil is to keep the saints from praying"—on "Watch Night" (December 31st), and on every other night—to keep them busy with beautiful sermons and addresses, with interesting programs and exercises, with social service activities of every kind, with entertaining testimony meetings and song services, with (at times) almost prayerless Bible conferences and evangelistic movements, and even with tearless campaigns of card-signing which the Church calls soul-winning.

Machineries are multiplied "that meditation may be ousted," and organizations are increased "that prayer may have no chance." Would that the Church knew its business as well as the devil knows his!

Why cannot "Watch Night" this year be given over to prayer? Why not ask God to restore to the Church its sense of the heinousness of sin, its sense of the wrath and love of God, its sense of concern for the lost, its sense of the necessity of complete separation from the world, its sense of the joy of salvation?

Let prayer become fundamental instead of supplemental, and modernism and worldliness and infidelity in the Church will have to go. The card table and the parlor dance will have to go. Duplicity and suspicion, jealousy and dissension, backbiting and division will have to go. Our broken-down family altars will be re-erected; our young people will be saved; our coffers will be filled with consecrated money. Our home and foreign boards will be replenished with men and means, and a harvest of new-born souls will be swept into the kingdom.

You have tried everything else, dear saint of God; now try prayer, and see what God will do. Try it, pastor. Try it, official board. Try it, poor struggling Church. Your way has failed. Why not try God's way? Try it during "Watch Night." Try it through the week of prayer, through January, through 1924, through the years to come. Your activities have been abundant, but your tears have been lacking. Try God's way (Psa. 126:6). Try prayer!

"Prove me now herewith," saith Jehovah, "if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Ye are behind on prayer! "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house" (Mal. 3:10; also verse 11).

Make "Watch Night" a night of prayer!

Pray for revival!

SHALL THE INFLUENCE OF THE BIBLE BE FELT IN OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS?

For some years there has been a growing sentiment with some people that the Bible should be kept out of our public schools. As meeting this sentiment, there has also been a growing influence in favor of giving the Bible to the public schools. Already these opposing influences have met in battle in a number of States, and the outcome of this conflict is that there now seems to be a divided sentiment. Some oppose the reading of the Bible in our public schools outright. There are others who hold that parts of the Bible may, and ought to be, read in these schools, and there are yet others who are demanding by their votes at the ballot box that the Bible be read in all of our schools, and for the reason that the children of school age need the moral and spiritual influence of the Bible to aid in shaping their young lives. The Literary Digest has recently given a sort of a review of the situation as to the Bible in our schools, which will give our readers a general idea of the present sentiment as to this matter. If you wish to know the facts, read the following:

The Bible is banned, or at least not read, in the schools of twelve States, we are told, though "23,000,000 people live in the twelve States and the officials whose opinions have excluded the Bible number not more than thirty," while "in the history of this country, no legislature or constitutional convention has ever adopted a provision plainly excluding the Bible from the schools." After a study of the situation as it exists today, W. S. Fleming reports that "the highest courts of Maine, Massachusetts, West Virginia, Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Texas, and Nevada have all said that the Bible has a right in the school-rooms." Wisconsin "excludes the Bible as a whole," but "plainly asserts that parts of it might and should be used." Illinois pronounces the whole Bible "a sectarian book," and, as such, excludes it. It has recently been excluded from the schools in California. In the Christian Statesman, Mr. Fleming tells us—

"It is reported that the Supreme Court of Louisiana has given a similar opinion, but no word to that effect comes to me from the State superintendent, who merely reports that the State board thinks bes not to permit the use of he Bible in the schools. The courts of Ohio and Nebraska make the reading of the Bible optional with the school boards. Thus there is uncertainty in my mind about the fact in one State; in three States the courts exclude the whole Bible; in one the court excludes part of it, and in eleven the courts admit the Book without question.

"By the opinion of the attorney-general or the State superintendent of public instruction, the Bible is not used in the schools of Minnesota, Idaho, Utah, Arizona, New Mexico, Montana, New York State (outside of New York City), and possibly Louisiana. Thus, including Wisconsin, the Bible is banned—or at least not used—in the schools of twelve and possibly thirteen—States."

On the other hand, the Bible is read by law every morning in every school-room in Massachusetts, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, and probably Mississippi, though there is a little doubt in my mind about the latter State having passed the law. Excepting Massachusetts, these States have all passed the mandatory law within the last ten years. In addition to the above seven States, the Bible is used every morning in all the schools of New York City, Washington, D. C., and Indianapolis, Indiana. In the cities and States where the Bible must be read every morning as above, there live just about 30,000,000 people, or 30 per cent of our entire population."

Thus—

"With the Bible definitely excluded from the schools of twelve States and legally required to be read daily in the schools of seven States, there remain twenty-nine States, with just about half the national population, in which its daily use is permitted. In some States, as in Indiana and Iowa, there is a definite enactment that the Bible shall not be excluded from the schools; while in others there is no specific provision on the subject, but what is not denied is then allowed. The practice varies in these States from almost universal use to exclusion by custom. Omitting half a dozen States for lack of information, the others can be divided into four classes—

"1. Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Florida reports that the use of the Bible in their schools is almost universal.

"2. Delaware, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Kansas, and Colorado use the Bible quite extensively.

"3. The Book is little used in the schools of Michigan, Nebraska, Missouri, Wyoming, and Texas, the reason for the slight use in the first three probably being the widespread belief in those States that its use is forbidden.

"4. The Bible is not used in the schools of Oregon."

As Mr. Fleming goes on to say:

"Fifteen months ago a company of business men in Kansas City, Mo., at their own expense and with the consent of the school board, put a copy of the Bible on the desk of every school teacher in the city (1,464 in all), and the act was highly commended by Bishop Lillis of the Roman Catholic Church of that diocese. Three years ago the W. C. T. U. of Michigan voted to offer a copy of the Bible to every public school in that State.

"As a result of a widespread and persistent popular request, in the State of Illinois an amendment, by a vote of 52 to 9, put a provision into the new proposed constitution of that State, specifically permitting the use of the Bible in the public schools; but the constitution was rejected by popular vote in December last, though not because of the Bible provision. In the State of Missouri, by a tie vote, a constitutional convention in session, at the time of this writing, fails to insert a permissive clause on the ground, as nearly all those voting against it declared, that the present constitution permits the Bible in the schools. In Washington there is now being waged an active campaign for an amendment to the State constitution, plainly giving the Holy Book an honored place in the educational system of the State. This year, bills were before the legislatures of Iowa, Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia, Michigan, and probably some other States, for the mandatory reading of the Bible every day in every school-room, and the National Reform Association was, as always, a leading factor in the campaign for the passage of the bills.

"Taking their cue possibly from the decision of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, which said that parts of the Bible might and should be used in the schools, there is a rising sentiment in some of the States from whose schools the Bible is excluded, in favor of securing a list of Bible references chosen by an inter-denominational commission and asking the teacher to read one of these daily from the version of the Bible she personally prefers. It is hoped that this will overcome official objection and meet the situation, but it has not yet been tried except in a few smaller cities, notably Cadillac, Mich."

"A FINE CHRISTIAN GENTLEMAN."

And what does it take to make a fine Christian gentleman? According to some, a man well-dressed, smooth in manner and pleasant in conversation would be styled a fine Christian gentleman, regardless of what he thinks of the Bible as the revealed will of God. He may dispute every cherished doctrinal statement in the Bible, and yet if he has the qualities named above, then he is a fine Christian gentleman. To this we do not and cannot agree.

Not long since there was a little discussion as to the views of a certain man, prominent in public life as a teacher. He was accused of teaching much that is not according to the Bible, but a sympathetic gentleman standing by declared that he was a fine Christian gentleman, so sweet-spirited and pleasant. It is evident that this man did not consider any teaching, no matter how erroneous, as a barrier to Christian character. It would be well if we should remember that all that shines is not gold. It is just as true that all which seems to be sweet and pleasant is not an expression of Christian character.

Only very recently there has come from the press a book called "Story of the Bible." The publisher sent a review copy of the book to a prominent American religious newspaper, and among other assurances given was this:

"In sending this book to you, we wish to let you know that, at Mr. ———'s expressed instructions from H——, where he is now convalescing after a breakdown brought on by his labors in completing 'The Story of the Bible,' the last three months' preparation of this book has been almost entirely devoted to an endeavor to find inaccuracies or to eliminate any possible misrepresentation, particularly of the Gospels. By this we do not mean that Mr. ——— (the author of the book in question) has authorized us to make of his work a spineless and a colorless interpretation of the Bible. We do mean, though, that Mr. ———a a fine Christian gentleman in the truest sense of the word, asked us that galley proofs of his book be sent to leading theologians of every Christian and Jewish denomination in the country. As Mr. ———'s 'Story of the Bible' is now printed, it incorporates a number of able suggestions so kindly and unselfishly made up by these careful readers. It does not incorporate one statement that offends in any way one of these denominations. * * *"

Notice the publishers say they were not authorized to make of this work a spineless and colorless interpretation of the Bible. And yet these same publishers declare that it has been made so as not to offend in any way any of these denominations. Alas, for the thought! It was not to be spineless and colorless, and yet it will not offend any of these denominations. Alas! for such a thought.

But notice one other statement made to the effect that Mr. ——— (the author of the book) is a fine Christian gentleman in the truest sense of the word. Now, this statement was made in the face of the fact that the author had written in this book that was to offend no one of these denominations the following sentences:

"Where did their 'idea of God' come from? From their wholesome fear of 'the Old Man.' 'The young of the primitive squatting-place grew up under that fear. Objects associated with him were probably forbidden. Every boy was forbidden to touch his spear or to sit in his place just as today little boys must not touch father's pipe' (p. 94). The fear of 'the Old Man' was the beginning of wisdom. Hence, tabus and the tendency to propitiate him after death. 'The Old Man idea was very natural to the primitive mind and capable of great development. The universe was seen in terms of the family herd' (p. 94) presided over by an Old Man in the clouds. 'Out of such ideas grew the first quasi-religious elements in human life. * * * Religion is something which has grown up through human association, and God is still being discovered by man. It is a necessary part and central part of the history of man to describe the dawn and development of his religious ideas and their influence upon his activities' (p. 102).

"Not God speaking in time past and in divers manners to men, but ape-man guessing God from the ape-man's own sordid environment."

Did any man of sense ever get up such ideas as are therein set forth? Think of it—they got their sense of God from a wholesome fear of the "Old Man"! Think of such a statement as that the beginning of wisdom came from their fear of the "Old Man." Again he says, "The universe was seen in the terms of the family herd, presided over by an 'Old Man' in the clouds." And then he adds that such ideas grew from the first quasi-religious elements in human life. And yet a man who can make such absurd statements is a fine Christian gentleman in the truest sense of the word.

The man who made such statements may be a gentleman, as the infidels would name him; but he is not a Christian gentleman—not at all.

There is a great deal of such talk floating around today, and some professing Christians do not seem to know any better than to accept what is said as if true. If any of our readers wish to call such a man a gentleman, that is their business; but in the name of common decency do not call him a fine Christian gentleman in the truest sense of the word. How can a man or a woman who attributes his Christianity to such sources as this man does be a Christian at all?

We think the author of the book in question is ignorant of two things, viz: he is ignorant of the true teachings of the Bible and he is also ignorant of the spirit of Jesus. If he were well acquainted with the truth of the Bible, he could not make such statements. If he knew of the spirit of Jesus in any experimental way, he could not throw such aspersions upon the name of his Saviour.

Indeed, we think most of the daring criticisms of the Word of God in this day of daring unbelief is to be attributed to real ignorance. These men do not know the Word of God, and having a lively imagination, they give out these awful ideas. We do not believe any man or woman who truly knows the Lord in the forgiveness of sins could possibly offer such indignities to the Son of God as the Saviour of the world.

DO WE KNOW HOW TO PRAY?

That is a strange question to ask believers. Why, if we do not know how to pray, how did we ever get to be believers at all? Surely we know how to pray, for we have been practicing, lo! these many years, and we are still trying to pray. We see the fact, but it may be that we have been praying often and long, and yet we might not know the best way to pray. Would it not be wise for us all to try to find out some other way to pray than as we have been praying?

There was said to be a farmer once who worked hard to make a living, but after years of effort he saw he was beaten, that he would have to go into something else to make a living. He went into some other business, and another man succeeded him on the same farm. He came and went to work, and in less than five years he had paid for the farm and was comfortably situated. He had his wife and children well kept and everything was going well. One failed and the other succeeded; one failed miserably and the other succeeded grandly. Now, why? That is the question. The answer must be that one knew how to farm and the other did not. Now, it may be that way with some Christians. They have learned how to go through the form of prayer, but do they know how to pray in fact? Have they just gotten into the habit of whispering words into the ear of God, as they think, or have they taken the time to get themselves into the spirit of prayer? Then, in addition to getting into the spirit of prayer, have they ever taken the time to take the Bible and plead the promises of God as the ground of their prayers, as a reason why they expect God to answer prayer, because He has promised to answer.

The beloved and greatly lamented Chas. H. Spurgeon has put it this way, and we wish you would think over what he says and see if you cannot learn a better way, a more effective way of praying. If you succeed, it will mean much to you, and so we urge you to try it and note results. Mr. Spurgeon said:

"Every promise of Scripture is a writing of God, which may be pleaded before Him with this reasonable request: 'Do as thou hast said.' The Creator will not cheat his creature who depends upon His truth; and, far more, the Heavenly Father will not break His word to His own child. 'Remember the word unto thy servant, on which thou hast caused me to hope,' is most prevalent pleading. It is a double argument: "It is thy word, wilt thou not keep it? Why hast thou spoken of it if thou wilt not make it good? Thou hast caused me to hope in it; wilt thou disappoint the hope which thou hast thyself begotten in me?' "

SOME THINGS WE MAY KNOW.

Many people are much alarmed over the fact that some things they are not certain of, and therefore they are never sure just what may be the next step they should take. The Rev. Geo. T. Dowling, D. D., in the Churchman, presents a strong point of view, and we believe it will do us all good to see as far as possible if what he says is not true. He says:

" 'I know' that if the religion of Jesus Christ is best for the great world, it is best for my little world: the circle which I can influence; and chiefest of all, my own home. I know that my children will have a better chance to live a worthwhile life if they shall regularly spend a part of Sunday morning with me, in the Church, listening to its hymns and its prayers, and its Bible, in which this same Apostle Paul teaches us: 'Let all bitterness and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil-speaking be put away from you, with all malice, and be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.' There is no doubt there. I know in my heart, whether I confess it or not, that I am not doing the right thing by them when I take them picnic-hunting Sunday morning instead of going with them to the quiet peace of God's house and joining with them in its character-making service.

"And finally, 'I know' that if the religion of Jesus Christ is the best for the great world and the best for my little world, it is the best for me."

SINCERITY OF THE TRUE CHRISTIAN.

DEAR DR. BARRETT:

You answer the questions in THE SUN, I suppose. Well, I was reading them tonight and ran across your answer on eternal sincerity. It did me good when I read your plain, simple answer to find that you believed in His salvation being once for all. Several years ago I saw the truth so plainly that I have never ceased rejoicing in the finished work of our Lord. I no longer doubt for a moment but that my salvation is "eternal," "everlasting"—just as God says in His Word. And instead of making me slack, or worldly, it makes me love Him more and wish with all my heart to serve Him.

During the last week of September and a few days in October I held a meeting in Moore County under an old saw-mill shelter for seven days. It was the most wonderful meeting I have been privileged of God to conduct. I suppose sixty or more confessed Christ besides a large number of reclamations, and also many who came forward to dedicate themselves wholly to the Lord's service. But the thing I want to say is this. I was dealing personally with an old man, and he said he could not be a Christian long, if he were to start, for a man living on his place would cause him to turn back. I asked him what God had promised to give him if he would definitely confess and receive Jesus as Lord. He said, "eternal life." I asked how long did "eternal" mean to last. He said "forever." I agreed with him and asked again "If Jesus gives you 'everlasting,' 'eternal' life, could that wicked man living on your place make you lose it tomorrow or in ten, or even one hundred years?" He said "No," and at once confessed Christ and rejoiced greatly. I heard from him since and he was witnessing for his Lord, doing personal work.

Dr. Geo. Guille was once discussing this question with a friend who did not believe in security. After hearing what Mr. Guille had to say, the friend replied, "Well, then, a man can go on and do just as he pleases after his confession?" "Yes," said Dr. Guille, "just as he pleases, and if he pleases to grieve so great a love, it's proof of the fact that he has never been born again." To me, the Word of God is very conclusive and clear as to this, as you stated in THE SUN. Paul also says: "If we would judge (or discern) ourselves, we should not be judged. But when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world."

Peter has a beautiful expression in 1 Pet. 5:1, saying that he was "also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed." He was so eternally saved that he was then partaking of a future glory. Amen!

I just wanted, if I may, to encourage you and say, God bless you; go on in this good work. Think I will write an article for THE SUN before long. Love and good wishes.

J. LEE JOHNSON.

Fuquay Springs, N. C.

Let the pastor preach the riches of grace. Upon that the Christian people will grow and come to fruitage and high usefulness. If you preach such things as fads, new thought and so forth, well you cannot expect it to stand the test of a practical application. Preach the riches of grace, for that will stand the test with both the Church and the men and women of the world. Grace has a wonderful softening effect on the human heart. Messages of grace will not only bless Christians, but they will awaken sinners and call them to repentance and to a better life. Let us give the people the Gospel; that will do its work on the human heart and life as nothing else will do.

It does seem that a large per cent of the leaders in public life today go as much by the fads of the day as they do by good common sense. If some one start a thing which happens to strike the cord of popular sentiment—well, that is quite sufficient—in a short time a fad will be started, and after running a race of some weeks or months the thing bows its head and gives up the ghost. What is the use of such stuff? Brethren, it seems to us that real fads have no place of usefulness in the community. Let us do away with the fads and put into their places real hard common sense.

CONTRIBUTIONS

ELON LETTER.

Our Northern and Southern Churches were the first branches of Protestant Churches to unite following the Civil War. This is as it should be for a people whose genius saw in the beginning the necessity for Christian union. But really we have been two Churches in methods. Our Southern Church is compact and uses the apportionment or budget plan of raising its money for the support of its general enterprises. The Northern Church is scattered, and uses the free-will offering based on the educational method. There are other contrasts or differences between the two branches of our Church, but this discussion is meant to deal with financial matters, and we shall not mention these other items now.

The real reason for discussing this question at this time is that we of the Southern Church have not been supporting our general denominational work as we ought and would like. In home and foreign missions, we have done measurably well, but we are not contributing at all to the support of the American Christian Convention's office, to the Federal Council of Churches, to the Aged Ministers' Home, to the support of evangelism or the Christian Publishing Association, nor, until recently, and then only till our Southern Christian Convention meets in May, to the support of the Department of Christian Education. Both sides have felt the need of a completer co-operation, and commissions have been appointed to recommend a plan.

It has long been the conviction of the writer that each branch of this Church has something to contribute to an adequate system of Church finance and something to gain by a correlation of methods. The Southern Church is not prepared to abandon its budget system and to open up its Churches and other organizations to a medley of appeals for aid on sundry occasions. The budget plan has demonstrated its value in our Southern Church, but we all recognize its twofold weakness—that it tends to make giving mechanical, and that it can tap only the minimum capacity for giving.

The Northern Church, on the other hand, is not prepared to abandon its educational method, which, while it has failed to reach a great many Churches, has splendidly and intelligently nurtured not a few in the grace of stewardship and instructed them in the plans, programs, and purposes of the Church, and this despite the fact that much of the educational propaganda sent out has been faulty as putting too strong an emphasis on the desire for money rather than on the intelligent development of the Christian conscience, so that the giving will be a natural, a normal, an increasing response.

What I hope to see come out of the joint discussion of this vital issue is the incorporation of the strength of these two methods, and in the confidence that something of this kind will eventuate, I have ventured to write thus frankly, and now make bold to suggest a plan, not as the final word on the subject, but as opening the way for full, free, fraternal discussion.

I think we should set a benevolence goal for the denomination, say $500,000 annually. This is more than we will raise now, but within ten years, by the combination of the educational method with the budget plan, we will have gone safely over the top and be ready to move on to an annual benevolence budget of $1,000,000.

I would apportion this budget to the departments to be supported on an agreed basis, somewhat similar to the forward movement, or the Men and Millions basis, but different in vital spots. Each Conference and each regional Convention would have the right to reserve certain percentages for its own purposes.

I would the napportion it to the regional conventions on an agreed basis; for example: membership, value of Church property, total paid pastors, and previous record for giving. The regional conventions would in turn apportion to the conferences on the same basis, and the conferences to the local Churches, each group asked to vote its approval of its part of the budget and its willingness to undertake to raise it.

This budget plan would require a budget commission or board with a stewardship and promotion or budget secretary at its head. In this central office would be prepared the educational literature, which would be educational, informative, and inspirational in emphasis rather than obtrusively financial. The year would be divided up into periods, with educational emphasis on the different agencies promoted by the budget, with the thought of the people fixed on Christian education, on home missions, etc., as the case might be. Such a method carries the budget and the educational method down to the local Church.

Unless the local Church budgets its part and raises it through the every-member canvass, with abundant teaching on stewardship and special and insistent effort for the enrollment of tithers, the whole system will collapse at the foundation. In a spiritual democracy such as ours, the local Church is the final as well as the original test of efficiency as of authority. Each regional Convention will of necessity have to employ a stewardship and promotion or budget secretary, whose duty it shall be to educate the people in stewardship and efficient methods of expressing it, aiding where necessary in the every-member canvass. Large conferences might profitably do the same, but such an officer is a prime necessity for each regional Convention.

Reference was made to the commission or board of the General Convention to handle this matter. This body should consist of the heads of the General Convention boards promoted by the budget and the regional budget secretaries, and should elect their own secretary, being given plenary powers to administer the budget in all its details after its adoption. It would be the duty of the various board secretaries then to perform field and administrative duties and to aid the budget secretary in every way desired.

Likewise, the regional conventions each would have a budget board, consisting of the employed secretary chosen by the regional Convention and the Conference budget secretaries (voluntary or paid) constituent in the Convention, with powers that shall be agreed upon by the General Convention's budget board. The local Conference would, of course, have a budget committee of three or five persons and be expected to promote the budget interests, acting under the regional Convention budget secretary and harmoniously co-operating with that officer.

It may be objected that we would be acting under subterfuge to say, in a local Church, that "we make our offering today through the budget with our thought on evangelism," the preacher then setting forth salient facts relative to the evangelistic program and achievements of the denomination. On the face of it, this appears to be a fatal criticism, but when we remember that the right is given the individual even in the budget system to designate his gift, the difficulty disappears. Then again the statement is not made that the money given goes wholly to evangelism, but only that we keep our minds on evangelism as we give. This is necessary if the budget system is to be educational locally.

This plan is not perfect, but it is at least concrete. I trust there will be full, frank, constructive discussion and criticism of it.

Finally, we should say that offerings for special causes, like the Japanese or Near East Relief, and perhaps for the orphanages at Thanksgiving and Easter, would be permissible under this plan, but only as approved by the General Convention's budget board, and also that the colleges and other institutions of the Church would be allowed to raise money in large sums only from individuals of wealth, but not by a general canvass. Further, the denomination should give its solemn promise not to permit general canvasses for any purpose. W. A. HARPER.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

The sun is shining brightly this morning, December 6th, after three days of clouds, rain and deepening mud. Of course, we still have the mud, but that does not keep us from enjoying the sunshine.

Work on the building is still progressing slowly. The rain stopped all outside work the last few days, but we are hoping for some fair weather again now. The plasterers completed their work in the building a few days ago, but there is still some finishing wood work to be done in the basement and on the second floor. The pipefitters are at work putting in our heating system. They are hoping to finish it next week.

The lighting and pumping outfiet and the water tank are on hand. Bro. E. M. Carter is looking after the installation of this equipment. We are hoping to have it ready for operation by the time the heating system is in.

Contributions continue to come to the college at irregular intervals. We appreciate the interest our friends are taking in this institution. We only wish that more of our friends would express their interest by making liberal contributions to this great work.

Yesterday I received a check for the college from Dr. R. D. Gibson, Youngstown, Ohio. Some time ago the following contributions were received but had not been mentioned in these columns: People's Church, Dover, Del., $12.50; First Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C., $5.31.

Note the progress that is being made by those who are furnishing rooms in the dormitory.

$50 paid—Mrs. A. M. Johnson, Mr. A. S. Peak, Dr. and Mrs. W. A. Harper, Class No. 2 Wadley Christian Sunday School.

$50 promised—Rock Stand Church, Antioch Church, Beulah Church, the Philologian Literary Society, Wadley Christian Church.

Who will be the next one added to this list?

SERVING ONE'S OWN GENERATION.

By Rev. S. L. Beougher.

David served his own generation by the will of God and was gathered to his people. Jesus came to this world not to be administered unto, but to minister. There was a vast difference between David and Christ. David had a work to do, limited to his own generation, and when he died saw corruption; but Christ had a work to do for eternal generations, and so He rose and saw no corruption. In this subject is suggested the contrast between the limits within which the work of service to mankind done by any mere man, however great and powerful, is necessarily confined, for the wide, far-reaching, endless ministry to the whole human family, belongs alone to the Son of Man.

A man may live through three generations, if God is pleased to spare him to reach the fullness of old age, and yet it is only upon one of them that he can exert an active influence. The first generation molds him with its various educational forces. The second generation he may distinctly impress with his own individuality; of it he may become one of the potent forces. On the third he can only exert a passing influence; he is mostly out of sympathy with it, and he soon finds that he had better step aside and let the current of life and thought pass on. Some men serve their generation by being before it and giving expression in it to the thoughts and truths and sentiments which properly belong to the age that is yet to be. Such men do a great work by anticipating the coming time and preventing the transitions and changes from becoming too abrupt. They must accept the peril of being misunderstood, and called hard names until they die, and a new generation recognizes in them its heroes, forerunners and apostles.

The greatest benefactors of mankind have prosecuted their work amid the frowns and intense opposition of the multitudes. It is only after they are dead that we show our appreciation of their work and try to atone for our neglect, or opposition, by building to their memory great monuments. Galileo, who declared that the earth moves around the sun, was compelled to renounce publicly his doctrines and to refrain from teaching them; but as he rose from the altar he quietly said, "Nevertheless it moves," and time has vindicated his theory. Oliver Cromwell was denounced as a hypocrite, a tyrant, usurper and fanatic; and even after his death his body was taken up and hanged upon a gallows to show contempt of his memory. But the ablest writers of today hold him to have been the wisest statesman, the most religious and virtuous ruler ever placed at the head of a nation. E. P. Lovejoy was wantonly shot down at Alton, Ill., in 1837, because he championed the abolition of slavery and insisted on the right to publish his views. He died almost unbefriended, and sixty years after a monument is erected to his memory, while an advocate of that relic of barbarism can hardly be found anywhere.

The Christian Church is pioneer in accepting the Bible as its only creed—in religious journalism, co-education, licensing women to preach, and the erecting of a religious activities building on the college campus at Elon, N. C.

Some men belong precisely to their own generation; they are exactly adapted to it; they never get beyond it; they are born into its thought and feeling; they live in it, work for it, and pass away with it; usually leaving no name, only the good fruitage and the silent seeding of their good works. These are the thousands of the unknown ones, but they are the "salt of the earth." Some men seem to always be living in the past; all their thoughts and feelings belong to bygone years. A queer, old-fashioned life they live amongst us, and their very talk sounds strange. And yet these link us to the past out of which we have come lest we forget. No generation can afford to keep a backward look; it must lift up its head, peer away yonder, and hail the coming days. Enter into every new movement whole-heartedly which has for its supreme object the establishing of the kingdom of God in the world.

The plain duty of the servant of Christ is to serve. Jesus, with ever-illustrious career of self-sacrifice, was among us as "He that served," and He said it as well, "Whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant."

We find in our study of social development three human creeds—first, might makes right; second, knowledge is power; third, goodness is greatness. Humanity has outgrown its first creed, is distrusting the second, and is apprehending the third. Under the first, monarchy was the form of government; under the second, aristocracy; under the third, democracy will appear. Under the first, the warrier was king; under the second, the philosopher; under the third, the servant will be master. In the light of eternity past I read that a man's greatness consisted in his ability to cause the world to serve him, but in the light of eternity to come a man's greatness will be measured by his ability to serve his fellow-men. Under the monarchy there were slaves. Under the aristocracy, there were wage-earners. Under the democracy, all will be fellow-workers. You may call this a Utopian dream, but it is the logic of events. It is the program of the inevitable. It is the march of the centuries. Caesar and Plato must pass on, and Christ will be supreme. If we serve our generation fully, there is but one rule which must govern our serving—"by the will of God." It is possible to spend large amounts of money, time, energy and property, thinking we do God service, when we may not be doing any such thing. Much of our serving depends upon our purpose to serve the will of God and our care to do the thing best approved as God's will. "Not in the spirit of eye-service, as men-pleasers, but as the bond-servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart." Eye-service and men-pleasing have reference only to what will pass muster in the world; Christians must go deeper, as bound to Christ's service by the great claim of redemption. The will of God is our great standard, and our daily prayer is, "Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven." In heaven it is done "from the heart."

We should serve our generation in humility, not wasting aspirations through pride or personal feelings; not seeking the unattainable distant, but instead laying hold on that we can most certainly touch because it is close by us. The present time, the present place, the present task are the time, the sphere, the toil for the servant of Christ. For between the dreams of the past and the visions of the future, lie the wrecks of lost opportunities. We too often sigh for more strength, more knowledge, more wealth, instead of using at once our available strength, and improving soberly our given talents—one, two or five.

FROM MT. CARMEL CHURCH.

Mt. Carmel is one of our oldest Christian Churches in the Eastern Virginia Conference. It has stood for many years as a great light-house in the community. It has had its advantages and its disadvantages, its successes and its failures, but like all other Churches where there were some faithful servants of our Lord and Christ, it has stood far above all other institutions for founding of righteousness, the salvation of men, and the glory of God. And where it has had its place in the past, we feel that the work has just begun, and we feel assured that if we will let Jesus rule as the Head that it will meet the present emergency and the future need.

The time was, and until very recent years, that it was surrounded only by country homes. There was only one store for several miles away, no railroad in less than eight miles over rough country roads; but a few years ago the Virginian Railroad laid its tracks from Norfolk, Va., to the great coal fields of the West. This railway passes just a few hundred yards south of Mt. Carmel Church. This at once began to bring about a great change in the life and conditions of the community.

The only store, mentioned above, owned by J. G. Duck, a prosperous merchant, was soon moved over the swamp to the railroad, and here began to increase his business. Business has grown until there are five apparently prosperous stores that sell goods at a reasonable profit. Here they have a station, telegraph office and shipping conveniences. It is becoming a great peanut market, as buyers are located here, and many peanuts are grown in this section. There is a cotton gin here that is a great help to the people, as cotton is brought from all sides to this place and sold for best prices. There is some lumber business, such as logs, lumber, railroad ties, etc. There are two garages here, a blacksmith, and several carpenters, so you do not have to go to some other town to find some one to build your house, fix your car or shoe your horse.

There is a prosperous bank at this place, which adds much to its business advantages. There is a good high school, teaching to the ninth grade, looking forward to the building of a larger school in the future. The village is growing very fast in business and in population. The community around is settled with prosperous farmers, and Walters is fast becoming a great business and transportation center.

Under these material advantages—as good as they are in their place—there is a great need in the human heart and life which these things cannot fill. And whether or not Walters and its surrounding community will rise or fall, succeed or fail in the true sense of the word depends upon their attitude towards God and His righteousness, for the Scripture says sin is a reproach to any people, but righteousness exalteth a nation.

In this time of great need for spiritual truths and divine guidance will Mt. Carmel Church take her place and stand bravely for righteousness and hold up Jesus before the world as the need of man. Mt. Carmel Church is passing through a great crisis, as I see it, and the result rests upon its members, as to their prayers, faith and efforts put forth in God's name to hold up righteousness in this community.

I believe it has some praying people in its membership, and that it will take its place in this time of emergency. I have faith to believe it will be one of the strongest country Churches in the Conference in a few years. It now has a membership of about 235, with several others on the delinquent list. It has eight Sunday-School rooms not quite completed, but which we are using to a great advantage. We had present last Sunday, December 2nd, 176 in Sunday School, and a very large congregation for the preaching service. May God help the members of Mt. Carmel to take on new life in the Master's service by turning to Him in prayer for strength, courage and inspiration.

We have Sunday School every Sunday morning; Bro. Otis Joyner is our superintendent. Preaching first and third Sunday morning. Why God should have called one of its own community boys to the great task to encourage this work at a time like this is more than I can understand, but God's ways are not man's ways, so let us bow in humble submission to His will and ask Him to use us in His own way to His glory.

You will hear from us again, the Lord being willing. Elisha Bradshaw.

MY CHURCH DEBT.

In a letter now before me from one of our active, busy and loyal laymen, I find this sentence: "I have decided to pay my Church debts first, and then pay, as far as I can, on my other matters. I herewith enclose my check to cover my Men and Millions pledge for the present year. I have paid my subscription each year. I have sometimes wondered where the money was coming from to pay these subscriptions, but it has come each year, even if a little late this time."

I wonder if there are not a number of CHRISTIAN SUN readers who put their Church debts first, or, if not that, then put their Church obligations along with their other debts and obligations. I have heard of individuals who relegate their Church obligations entirely to the background and only pay them after they have met all their personal obligations; but let us trust that no CHRISTIAN SUN reader does this.

A WONDERFUL DAY.

A good friend, in a personal letter, writing under date of November 22nd, from Dover, Del., gives a glimpse of what must have been a very wonderful service. It was not intended that I give this to the public, but it seems to me too good to keep. After stating the matter in hand about which she was writing, the good friend closes her letter with this fine description:

"We had a wonderful day last Sunday in our Church. At the close of the morning sermon, Dr. Helfenstein called for a reconsecration altar service, unannounced before, and the whole Church moved forward. All who could not get to the altar were kneeling in the pews, and it seemed to me that heaven opened and we could feel the presence of the Holy Spirit in our midst. I cannot begin to tell you of the great blessing which came to our Church at that time. I am telling you this, Dr. Atkinson, because I know you are interested in our Church and the good work here. May God spare our dear pastor to us for many years. Please remember us in your prayers."

A consecration altar service is evidently worth while when the pastor is moved by the Spirit to invite one.

MEN AND MILLIONS.

Those who have made pledges to Men and Millions should not overlook this obligation now that the year is closing. We wish to come to Christmas and face the new year with a clear conscience, a good report and as many of our obligations met as possible. Quite a few who have not been in a position to pay heretofore are now able to do so. The good Lord has blessed with abundant crops, and there is no better way to express our gratitude to Him than by meeting our obligations to His cause and in His name.

If every one who has made a pledge to Men and Millions will do his best or her best within the next few weeks, we shall face the new year with glad hearts and all the enterprises of the Church will be blessed, benefited and helped.

While we are settling up other debts and meeting other obligations, do not let us forget this obligation to our dear Church and to the enterprises of the Church, which need these funds so very much. There has never been a better nor a holier movement in the Christian Church, and those who are carrying this movement are proving their loyalty and devotion, not to one interest of the Church, but to all that the Church stands for and is trying to do in the world.

THANKSGIVING SERMON.

BY REV. J. G. TRUITT.

"In everything give thanks."—1 Thes. 5:18.

We have met as working-people, on a week day, to give thanks to God for the bounty and blessings of the closing year. Every Sunday we meet to worship and praise God, but our country has set apart a special day when we can meet to give thanks to a bountiful Father. I am glad it is so. And how beautiful it is that we of many faiths come together in this united way, in this heavenly way, to say, "Father, we thank Thee"!

Paul was one of the most thankful of men. The words "thank" and "thanksgiving" are used sixty-nine times in the New Testament. Paul used them forty-seven times, and all the others used them twenty-two times. The beloved physician, Luke, says "When Paul saw, he gave thanks." In the Old Testament, David used the word as frequently as all the other writers put together. In the Gospels the writers found their greatest occasion for using the word in quoting Jesus. Upon His lips we frequently find these words: "I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth." "He took the seven loaves and gave thanks"; "He took the cup and gave thanks," and "When He had given thanks He distributed. In His prayer at the resurrection of Lazarus we hear Him pouring out His gratitude in these words, "Father, I thank Thee that Thou hast heard."

These three persons stand out as exceptional, and one of the basic reasons for their uniqueness is their spirit of gratitude. They gave thanks for two things for which people are not usually thankful, namely: favors and disfavors, or blessings and reverses. This reminds me of a couplet I saw the other day—

"Women's faults are many; men have only two—Everything they say, and everything they do."

For what was David thankful? Why, for being the especially chosen and favored king of God's beloved people. For this he was truly thankful, and throughout these ages the world has quoted and guarded and pondered his beautiful songs of thanksgiving. But is that the only reason why David has lived in the hearts of men? Is that the only reason they choose his words when they wish to return thanks to God. I say, Nay! True, to be thankful for favors shown is often beyond the average in life, as both literature and history has shown; but still more rare is the being thankful for reverses. What little boy delights to be left alone in the fields with the flocks while the older brothers are in the glory of entertaining at home, or are making famous records for their country in the crowded walks of life? But right there David learned to sing his sweetest songs and pour out his heart in thanks. David was rare, and a rare future stood out before him. Later, the world would have need for his kind, and it would pass the brothers by to find him.

After David became king he found it far from happy sailing all the time. He found opposition and persecution; he found duty lying across the path of his personal wishes; and as the prophet says, "He was wounded in the house of his friends," but one of the sweetest lines of David is this: "At midnight I will rise to give Thee thanks." It is unique to give thanks even in the noontides of life, but is rarer still to rise up in midnight's darkest hour and give thanks to God! The song of king mocking-bird is often at noon nothing but a meaningless chatter, but once while awake and sick I heard him sing at midnight! It was the sweetest bird-song I have ever heard. "At midnight I will rise to give Thee thanks." O America, your midnights have been few and far between, while others have had them in plenty. May you rise and give thanks, lest you be in the midst of midnight and know it not.

For what was Jesus thankful? His Father's faithfulness to Him was a constant buoyancy that lifted His soul. For this we find Him ever thankful. Differing from the ten lepers whom He healed, He was not merely one-tenth thankful, but He was altogether thankful. In comparison with His own thankful attitude, He was thanked less in earthly life than any one who ever lived. The Gospels record only one gift of gratitude, and when Mary, of Bethany, brought that solitary gift of thanks, the wicked world stood near and said: "Why, O why!" Jesus praised Mary and thanked her in words entirely and beautifully fitting. Indeed, He was truly thankful for the favors either of His Father or His friends, but, like David, He, too, was thankful for the midnight hour. "He took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it." Gave thanks, I say, when He knew that it meant the breaking of His body for the sins of the world! "He took the cup, and gave thanks, and supped," when He knew that it meant that He would drink to the dregs for the vilest sinner upon earth! This sinless Son of God, knowing this, gave thanks. And with His dying words, He quoted from the twenty-second psalm, which is not only a cry of anguish, but a song of praise.

Among all those who followed the risen Christ, and caught His spirit of thankfulness to God, Paul stands a peer. Over, and over, and over again I hear Paul saying, "We are bound to give thanks always to God." For what was Paul thankful? For the fact that he was a Hebrew of the Hebrews? Yes. For the fact that he was a Roman-born citizen? Yes. For the fact that he was familiar with the tongues and knowledge of men? Yes. And, most of all, he thanked Jesus Christ his Lord that He came to save sinners, of whom he says he was chief. But was he thankful only for the blessings of life? In the 11th chapter of 2 Corinthians, he sums up his reverses, his midnight hours, and concludes this magnificent summary, which is the admiration of the world, by saying: "If I needs must glory I will glory of the things that concern my weakness. I take pleasure in my weaknesses, in injuries, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses, for Christ's sake, for when I am weak then am I strong."

So Paul was another praiser of God in the midnight hour, and though they might lock him in prison bars he and Silas would sing their thanks to God until prison shook, and freedom fell from heaven above. God could trust persons who were thankful after the manner of David, and Paul, and Jesus with life's greatest blessings and also with life's greatest responsibilities. A man with a true spirit of gratitude can always be trusted with big things, and big things come as a result of his dauntless courage. May it be so with each of us, by the help of Christ Jesus our Lord, to whom, with the Father and the Holy Spirit, be thanks evermore! Amen.

THE LAYMAN AND THE BUILDING OF THE KINGDOM.

By J. W. Stout.

[Delivered before the late session of the North Carolina Christian Conference at Wake Chapel, Wake County, N. C., and published by the request of that body. The address made a most favorable impression upon the audience, and is well worth a careful reading by both layman and preacher.—Editor.]

To meet and mingle with the great pillars of the Church is one of the keen joys of this annual Convention to me. After being associated with some of the consecrated leaders of our Church for a while today, I feel a deeper and renewed interest and enthusiasm for the purpose for which we meet. I am always glad to come to these meetings year after year and feel the thrill of of association with this consecrated band of leaders, and I wish every member of the Christian Church in North Carolina could attend these meetings, and catch a new vision of the great opportunities for our Church. I probably would enjoy this particular meeting tonight more were I not on the program, yet I know if our Church is ever going to be the force that it can be, we laymen must contribute our mite in whatever way we can, so tonight I am trying to be a living example of the message I shall attempt to bring to you.

It is said that the greatest influence and worker for the Church in St. Louis is Mr. Brown, the head of the great Brown Shoe Company. He is not a preacher, but just a successful business man and layman who realized the duty that was his. On his desk he had a motto which read, "God first, home second, shoes third." Is it a wonder to any of us that Mr. Brown was very successful in business, and yet how many laymen are there in the Christian Church who realize the place of the layman in the kingdom? There are a great many phases of the subject of the layman and the kingdom, and I have decided to talk for a few brief minutes on the subject of building the kingdom, since I perhaps know more about building than any other subject, and I am sure you will understand why I use that analogy in my talk.

I like to think of the work of building the kingdom of Christ in the earth as a great and vast building operation, one in which every one of us have our part to do and our responsibility to shoulder. In the beginning of a great building project there must be an architect, and his duties are to draw the plans and details for the building and lay down the specifications for its completion; and the workers, be they great or small, must work in accordance with these plans and specifications.

Christ is the great and perfect Architect of His kingdom, and in the Holy Bible He has given us the specifications upon and by which we must work. Christ's ministry on the earth was spent in the explanation of the specifications and the beginning of the foundation of His kingdom, and the plans He completed on the rugged cross on Calvary's hill, and He left us as His workmen to carry on the work and to see to it that no changes are made in the fundamental plans, and if we follow these plans as He gave them to us, we will build on lines that time cannot crack and sin cannot shatter.

However, in the construction of a building, we must have more than an architect and more than plans. We must have supervisors, superintendents and leaders of the individual work to be done. The supervisor must have had training in the reading of plans and specifications, visualizing the finished product—must be able to catch the vision and realize the purpose and spirit of the architect. He must be able to inspire the workers to their best efforts and highest attainments, and interpret the intent and meaning of the work to be done. And so in our ministry we have this trained and consecrated leadership—men who have been educated along this particular line and are able to unfold to us, as laymen, the spirit and meaning of the plans and specifications designed and written for the purpose of building Christ's kingdom.

But the superintendent cannot do all the work. He cannot bear all the burden nor can he shoulder all the responsibility; but it is his to plan, direct, organize, apply the best methods, and inspire his co-workers to greater and nobler feats. If the preacher is not such a superintendent in Christ's kingdom, the work of the kingdom will suffer and the plan of the Great Architect fall short of realization. All of our superintendents in the Christian Church of North Carolina may not have the qualities necessary for the maximum development of the kingdom, but a more consecrated and loyal group is not to be found anywhere.

A great building cannot be erected with just an architect and superintendent, and God has not ordained that this should be. Workers are necessary, and this is the place of the laymen in the kingdom. The Architect has drawn His plans and given us His specifications in the Holy Writ. The supervisors have prepared themselves to lead, direct, guide and inspire, and the laymen must furnish the workmen, and unless this is done the work of building the kingdom cannot go forward as was intended.

"But what can the layman do?" some one may ask. One may say, "I cannot preach, speak, sing or pray." The builder does not have all of his crew from the same craft. There are skilled and unskilled workmen. Not all of the members of a building crew are bricklayers or carpenters, or plumbers, or roofers. Neither are all the workers in Christ's kingdom preachers, public speakers or leaders in song, but some are unskilled in their labor, and one is just as important to the completion of the building as another, and each is very necessary.

In the construction of the kingdom there is the Sunday School to be taught, Christian Endeavor to conduct, individuals to be spoken to, sympathy to be given, prayer to be offered, prayer meeting and Church to be attended, and, above all, a Christian life to be lived seven days in the week. If we want to work on and in the kingdom, and will report to the superintendent, and will meet the conditions, he will find plenty for us to do. However, we must be willing to do the work we can do. We cannot all be skilled laborers. Some must be willing to do the unskilled work. If we ever expect to see the plan of the Great Architect carried out, each of us will have to do our bit in the work, be that great or small.

When the Christian Church gets working laymen, working 100 per cent strong, who are willing to do the work that they can do, and are prepared to do; who are willing to follow the instructions given by the leaders, and we realize the fact that the plan of the Great Architect calls for work from every one, however weak or strong, however rich or poor, however learned or unlearned—then we will begin to see the plan of the kingdom take form, the Church go forward, and the fight against sin become effective.

The fourth and equally important part of any building program is material with which to work. The plans may be perfect, the specifications clear and understandable, the leadership learned and inspiring, the workers plentiful—skilled and unskilled—and then have no material with which to work, and no progress can be made when the construction of the kingdom, and that has been the great handicap of our Church. The Architect drew His plans for the building of this kingdom on a world-wide scale, but the leaders and workers have been afraid to launch out on this wide scale because of lack of material. I am now speaking of money with which to carry on the work in the building of God's kingdom.

Again the laymen must respond. We must dream dreams, we must see the bigness of the task, we must have faith, we must take stock of our hopes and not be dominated by our fears. We can do whatever we have the courage to do. A few of us have gotten the vision, and with faith, leadership, work, and prayer, the Christian Church in the South has launched stupendous progress and has successfully completed them. The supervisors, the workers, and the material have been supplied because we have had the faith and courage to dare and do.

We are just at the beginning of a wonderful service to be rendered to humanity through our Church. We are entering a new day. We are no longer afraid. With the greater opportunities come greater responsibilities, and I appeal to the laymen of our Church to stand up, be strong, shoulder the responsibilities and carry them on. I would like to sound tonight to the laymen the clarion call of the Christian Church; for you to respond to the call of duty and the opportunity for service. God has given us the plan for building His kingdom, and it is our privilege to study it. Christ has picked out His leaders and called them into His service to follow and work with Him. He has saved us and called us into His service as laymen in His kingdom; He has blessed our labors with money; we and it are His, and we should not withhold either. With the supervisors, the leaders and the laymen working hand in hand, each doing what he can toward the construction of the kingdom, we will find ourselves making rapid progress towards the ultimate completion of our part of the construction of His kingdom, and if in the sunset of life we are not quite certain about the work that we have done, report this to the Architect, who thoroughly understands all of the plans, the details and the specifications, and if any of our work is not right, He will give us instructions in order that we may correct the same before our life's work is finished.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

LIFE'S MIRROR.

There are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave,
And souls that are pure and true;
So give to the world the best that you have,
And the best will come back to you.

Give love, and love to your life will flow,
A strength in your utmost needs;
Have faith, and a score of other hearts
Will have faith in your works and deeds.

Give truth and your gift will be paid in kind,
And honor will honor meet,
And the smile which is sweet will surely meet
A smile that is just as sweet.

For life is the mirror of king and slave,
'Tis just what we are and do,
So give to the world the best you have,
And the best will come back to you.

Prayer.—Heavenly Father, with the beginning of the new week, we dedicate our lives to Thee and to those around us. Reveal to us Thy will this week, the tasks that Thou hast for us to perform, the spirit that we should show, the opportunities in our way; and may every act, yea, every thought, be turned into eternal profit. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

DO YOU SEEK SALVATION FOR YOUR CHILDREN?

*"These words, which I command Thee * * * shall be upon thy heart, and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest in the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up."*—Deut. 6:1-10.

When Dr. Talmadge was asked how he became a Christian, he declared it was all due to a night his grandmother spent in prayer for her three sons and a daughter, and how, as a result of it, they were all converted. Then he told how his father, rejoicing the next day in his new-found salvation, went and told his sweetheart about it, and she, too, accepted Christ. Then how his mother, remembering her salvation was due to prayer, met with five other mothers every Saturday afternoon for years to pray for their children, and how every child of every mother was converted and how he himself was the last of the eleven children of their household.

Here is the answer to the question asked by some mothers: "How can my children be brought to Christ?" Have a personal interest in their salvation. Have a definite purpose in your effort. Have a prayer circle in your home, for your own children and the children of others. God hears and answers, but He waits for a cry from burdened, broken, believing hearts.—Selected.

Prayer.—Our dear Heavenly Father, in the name of Christ our Saviour, who took little children upon His knees and blessed them, we pray Thee to lay upon our hearts the responsibility we have with our children and those under our care, that they may know Thee and live their lives for Christ. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

WAITING UPON THE LORD.

"They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength."—Isa. 40:31.

What values and profit come to us by taking time to wait on the Lord! A little boy was rummaging in the attic one day, and, among the many other ancient things there, he found a diary written by one who died before his grandfather was born. The following entry concerning a trip from Philadelphia to Baltimore, a three days' journey, was found, which read as follows: "The company operating the stages talk of making the trip in two days. This they plan to do by a more frequent change of horses and by pushing on after dark. But I hope they will not do so. Such speed and hurry is not seemly for humans."

Are we worse off for our speed today? We are indeed, if we allow our bustle to defraud us of time with God. If we do not make a quest of God a part of our life's pursuit, our sense of God will grow dim and fail us. Efficient speed is seemly, but have a little time every day to wait patiently, unhurriedly and quietly on the Lord.

Prayer.—Dear Heavenly Father, Thou who givest power to the faint, draw us to Thee every day in all spiritual blessings that come by seeking them and by waiting on Thee. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

THURSDAY.

AGGRESSIVE FAITH.

"Lord, increase our faith."—Luke 7:5.

If we attain what we are praying for, we must experience the increasing faith that brings it. There are two different kinds of faith—one that submits, and another that aspires; one that hangs on desperation, and another that is optimistic; one that is barely alive, and another that is robust and growing. Which is yours?

Some folks weaken in their faith when they have prayed and still are overwhelmed with privations and troubles. Our Christianity and faithfulness does not promise that we shall be free from these, but it does promise that we shall have God with us in them, and each may be an opportunity for something better. Paul and Silas did not weaken. For instance, they counted it a joy to be cast into prison and to suffer for the sake of Jesus Christ, and their songs and prayers broke the jail open and set the world on fire for Christ; and this was because they were like the psalmist, their hearts were fixed on Him. It was thus that every experience they had was an open door for the power of God. Faith that comes and goes like flashes of lightning, does not carry. We must have the faith of Paul and Silas and John—a faith that is not weary in well doing—and then we shall reap if we faint not.

Prayer.—Heavenly Father, increase our faith, and when trying times come upon us, hold us by Thy hand until they all cease to be, and we shall be conquerers over all—the world, the flesh and the devil. Teach us to tarry in Thy presence until we can have this faith and triumph, and until sin shall be no more. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE WONDERFUL GRACE OF GOD.

Texts: Luke 2:40; Acts 13:43; Rom. 5:15; 1 Cor. 1:4, 15:10; 2 Cor. 6:1; Heb. 12:15.

What is "grace"? We speak of the beauty of a flower as grace. It is applied to the wonders of the dawn, to flowing waters, to the song of birds, to the majesty of the mountains, to the strength of man, to the loveliness of a woman, to the laughter of children, and to the love of friends; but the grace of God is more than these—it is the eternal power that heals our wounded souls and puts God at our disposal.

For instance, when the body is wounded, nature fights for it to heal it and make it whole. That is nature's grace. When battle-scarred France is redeemed by the grass, the flowers and the fruitful fields, that is nature's grace. When trouble comes to us or injury is wrought, there is a power within that fights it. It is the grace of God. When misery comes, there is mercy and sympathy to overcome it. What grace! When temptations confront us, there is always a way of escape. Glorious grace! He hath said, "Where sin doth abound, grace doth much more abound." We are the heirs of this grace; it is our salvation.

Prayer.—Dear Father, as we work out the salvation of our bodies by physical exercise and obedience to the laws of life and health, help us to work out our soul's salvation through spiritual fellowship and through that grace of Him who works in us to do His will. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE GREATEST ACHIEVEMENT.

Baseball fellows scorn the team which challenges only those they can whip. It is very much like a cowardly bully "pecking" on a child. There was a team that lost nearly all their games of the season. They became discouraged and canceled the remainder of them. The manager said to them: "Boys, it is apparent that we cannot develop a team like the others; but if we propose to run ourselves on the principle of playing only those whom we cannot whip, we had as well go out of business; but if we go with the understanding that the best victories are over self, we can put out a reputation that we are the gamest little set to be found. Stop depending on the enthusiasm of throats, and rely on the enthusiasm of the square jaw." The iron in the blood of those boys came back to them. Their true manhood awoke and asserted itself, and they made their reputation for pluck, stick-to-it-iveness, and the square deal.

Life is not given to us to win victories over foes, but to win victories over ourselves. That is the greatest achievement any man ever made.

Prayer.—Pray today as your spirit prompts.

SUNDAY.

WHY I BELIEVE IN THE CHURCH.

The Church is the most important stabilizing element in the world. It is the channels through which the ruling ideals of the present age of mankind have flowed into men's hearts. It is the custodian of the only offer made anywhere on earth of a power sufficient to save sinning man from their sins.

The Church concentrates in its membership the largest aggregate desire for righteousness than any other fellowship that man has ever known. The Church is the source of the greatest benevolent generosity and the largest missionary ideals that contribute to the welfare of mankind. The Church counts more than any other social influence known in the world for the proper home life and for the moral character of childhood.

Taking into account what the Church has done in the past, its inherent character, the wonderful service rendered by its adherents, it offers a far more promising hope of meeting all the needs of the world than any other institution, or any substitute that anybody ever proposed for it. Nineteen centuries ago, Christ proclaimed that the Church was God's and that it could not be overthrown by death nor hell, and now in this present generation, we find it to be in actuality just what He proclaimed it to be—the Church of the Living God. You may criticise it as truth may demand, but do not let yourself for a moment cease to love it, nor to believe in it, and in all give it your heartiest support. It is God's institution for you. Let no Sabbath pass by without using it for the good of humanity and the glory of God.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, help us poor sinners to see and understand the true values of the Church of the Living God, and do Thou enable us to give our lives unto its supreme callings. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

A HAPPY THANKSGIVING.

DEAR FRIENDS:

The orphanage family had a happy Thanksgiving. The boys had the day off for hunting and having a good time. The girls had the day off, too, and had a good time indoors. The weather was too rainy to be out.

The good women of our Burlington Church made it possible for the children to have a good Thanksgiving dinner. The different circles in the Church furnished hens, already dressed, cakes, cranberries, pickles, etc. The Wentworth Sunday School, near Raleigh, N. C., furnished a crate of oranges. Bethlehem Church, Valley of Virginia, through Mr. J. M. Bradford, sent us eight barrels of apples. The Durham Ice Cream Company furnished us cream for the occasion. The Burlington people also furnished one barrel of apples, one crate of oranges, a bag of potatoes and several other articles. It was a happy day for the children, and they were delighted.

It certainly was kind of these good people, and we are grateful indeed.

I wonder who will make it possible for the children to have a nice Christmas dinner?

Mr. Smith, Norfolk, Va., is driving ahead with the work of the great task of completing the new building for the Christian Temple of that city. In all such enterprises, delays will occur in spite of one's best efforts. So in this case, the completion of the building has been delayed because of the difficulty in obtaining various materials, and especially the pews, but our brother is pressing the work all he can. It will likely be as late in the new year as Easter before the work can be completed, but it will not do to have it much later in the year, as about May 1st the Southern Christian Convention is to meet there, and of course it must be done for that occasion. Let every one who can help do so, and as soon as you can. As giving our readers some idea of the great task that our Norfolk brethren have undertaken, it is sufficient to say that no such Church building has ever been undertaken in the Christian Church, North or South, East or West. It will be a great building and a credit to the city by the sea as well as to our people.

CLEVELAND'S SISTER FOR PROHIBITION.

Mrs. Susie Cleveland Youmans, of New York City, a sister of Grover Cleveland, who was visiting her daughter in Chicago, is, according to an interview in the Chicago Tribune, foursquare for prohibition. She is for it economically, viewing it in the light of what s best for the country as she sees the light. She is for it personally, quoting St. Paul, "If meat makes my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth."

"The liquor question today," she said, "stands in my mind like the slavery question did in the old days. Slavery had to be done away with."

Miss Pattie Coghill, of Elon College, visited THE SUN office this week. She is spending the week in Richmond in conference with Dr. Walters and Miss Eldredge, preparatory to becoming field secretary of religious education.

The Coming of a Little Child.

"Dear, can you be a child once more—
Little, and trusting and wonder-eyed?
Then enter in; there is many a door
Where only a child may pass inside.

"Once the way seemed dim and far,
But now it is clear and true,
For the portal of love was lit with a star
When the little Christ passed through.

"So come as a child to His Christmas tide,
Heart-pure as the blue above;
You will find that the portal is just as wide
As the width of His measureless love."

Love and light came to the world centuries ago with the birth of a little child. Always men had seemed to have a wistful longing to know God better. Long had they dreamed of a time when God would reveal Himself. Prophet and psalmist had looked forward together to the itme when all the world might see peace and good will. Then the little child came to Bethlehem's manger, while the heavenly host sang and wise men from the East followed the Star of the East.

Only a child-like trust and faith and love can give full appreciation of the Christmastide. There is no place in its holiness and sanctity for the pride of the cynic, nor the selfishness of the materialist, nor the oppression of the unjust. The heart of Christmas is the child. The Child Jesus and His birth bring countless men and women of all nations, classes and races together in a common love and a common worship. The Christless Christmas is a mockery and a sin. The Christ-Christmas is the happiest day of all the year. Jesus Christ came to lighten the way to peace and justice, and His own teaching was "Except ye become as a little child ye cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven." To the one who comes as a child to His Christmas tide, there is ready a gift of peace, a spirit of lovingkindness and a joy which nothing else can bestow.

This Christmas lesson comes to us in the Sunday School as the climax of twelve missionary stories. The story which never loses its beauty nor charm, gives the fulfillment of the Old Testament prophecy and the impetus to all missionary work. Without Him, no missionary goes forth for the kingdom. Without Him, the motive power would be lacking. Without Him, the hope of the world would be gone. And yet with all His power and love and glory, to all the world, He comes with a glowing appeal as a little child!

The Child of Prophecy.—Isa. 9:6-7, 11:1-10.

Isaiah, with the other prophets before and after his time, saw and portrayed vividly the pitiful condition of the world. They mourned the people's disobedience. They denounced their sin. But with it all they were hopeful, looking forward to the coming of the Messiah. Read Isaiah's Bible picture of the coming of a child, of the family of Jesse to bless the world: "Wonderful, Counselor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace," tells of the character of the coming One. The reign of this Messiah would bring justice to the poor, punishment to the wicked, love to the faithful, peace to all God's children. He looked forward to a time when all people might see that "a little child shall lead them," the time when the people should ask and receive from God the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession. And this King, for whom the people longed, came as a humble little Child, to fulfill prophecy and show the world the way.

The Child of Bethlehem.—Luke 2:6-14.

The Child of Bethlehem has been the inspiration of the poet, the subject of the greatest works of art, the theme of the most beautiful songs. The beauty of the scene of the Child with Mary in the humble stable, the glory of the angels' song, the picture of the wise men's worship has immeasurably enriched the world. It is a living picture, for it still lives in the hearts of men. The Child of Bethlehem, sent by the Heavenly Father, because He "so loved the world," was the divine and best Christmas gift ever bestowed, as it was the first. The Child of Bethlehem grew, and taught principles. The only hope for the world's safety and joy today lies in heeding those divine principles which will bring love into men's hearts, and justice and righteousness into their daily lives.

The Child of Today.—Matt. 18:14.

Jesus Christ glorified childhood by becoming a child. On that first Christmas night, there was no room for Him at the inn. If we say, "There is no room" in our Christmas this year for any little needy child, perhaps we are closing the door to a royal Christ. Norman Duncan declares: "Whoso loves a child, loves not himself but God; whoso delights a child labors with God in His workshop of the world of hearts; whoso helps a child brings the kingdom of God; whoso saves a child from the fingers of evil, sits in the seat with the builders of cities and the procurers of peace." There are children, and children, and children today—millions of them. Some live in wealthy homes, some in very humble cottages. Some are in our Sunday Schools, many are not. Some know Jesus Christ, while others stare in wonder at the mention of His name, strange to them. Some in the devastated lands of the Near East are calling to their American spiritual brothers and sisters for just enough to keep life in their bodies. Some are in orphanages, some in the mountains, in cities, in far-distant lands. But wherever they live today, the Heavenly Father is not willing that one should perish. The Christ-Child seems to be calling pleadingly that they be thought of at Christmas time. May joy be theirs, and more! For they are needing teaching which will make them ready to solve difficult problems, and face severe conditions. Our great missionary program, or better called our great world-friendship program, must go forward through these boys and girls.

At this Christmas season, may we rejoice that the Child of Bethlehem came as the Child of Prophecy, to be the center of our Christmas thought. May we pray that His great teachings may be spread to the ends of the earth, that the story of Bethlehem and Calvary may be known by every boy and girl. May we thank the Father for His great gift, and for all the children, and work, that not a single one shall perish, but that all may find His way and do His work.

"Child, my child, can I reach you?
Can I speak and make you hear?
Can I open your eyes to see Me,
Can My presence draw you near?

"If there be a prophet among you,
One with a heart to know,
I will flash My secrets upon him;
He shall watch My glory grow.

"For I, the God and the Father,
The Quest and the Final Goal,
Still search for a prophet among you
To speak My work in his soul."

Topic: "Advent Lessons from Bethlehem."—Matt. 2:1-12.

Thoughts for the Meeting.

Wise men seek Jesus today. Without Him, life is poor and fruitless. With Him in the heart, there is peace and joy. Verse 1.

Wise men today are seeking the little child and realizing his worth to the world. Verse 1.

Many others, perhaps, saw the star, but it meant nothing to them. Because the hearts of the wise men were pure, because there was in them a longing and a love, they read the meaning of the star. "He who would see the beauties of the Indies must carry the Indies with him" is inscribed on the front of a great station. One has to have something inside to see something outside. Verse 2.

Herod was fearing personal loss. He did not want to see a new "King of the Jews." Sin breeds selfishness in the heart. Jesus brings love for all men. Wise is the youth who places Jesus first, others next, and self last. Verse 3.

Herod had not studied the prophecy as had the wise men, or he would have known as did they. Verse 4.

The wise men lost the star when they went into Jerusalem, but found it again when they started to Bethlehem. Did you ever lose your guiding star? How clearly you saw Christ when you first accepted Him, and then somehow the vision was dimmed. It is a critical time. tA Christmas time, think, "Is Christ my guiding star? Am I following Him all the time. Am I sure that I have not lost the star in following the way I have chosen for myself." Christmas brings anew the opportunity to see the Christ.

"They rejoiced." Seeing Christ will bring joy to all hearts.

The first act of the wise men was to worship—then they presented gifts. Our first act is to worship the Father, and Jesus Christ His Son, then to render our gifts of service. Worship and service cannot be separated. No ship inspires service. Service expresses the thoughts of worship. Verse 11.

" 'Tis not enough that Christ was born
Beneath the star that shone,
And earth was set that morn
Within a golden zone.
He must be born within the heart
Before he finds his throne
And brings the day of love and good—
The réign of Christ-like brotherhood."

The wise men were seeking Jesus, and Herod declared he likewise wished to find Him. Different were their purposes. What is your purpose in seeking Jesus?

"In the pure soil, although it sings or pray,
The Christ is born anew from day to day;
The life that knoweth Him shall bide apart
And keep eternal Christmas in the heart."
—Elizabeth Stuart Phelps.

"And they who do their souls no wrong,
But keep, at eve, the faith or mourn,
Shall daily hear the angel song,
Today the Prince of Peace is born."
—James Russell Lowell.

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

Make your meeting-place have a Christmas atmosphere. Make it look "Christmasy." Perhaps you can fix a large star in front, with electric lights shining through to light the room dimly, or light with candles. For five minutes before the opening, have Christmas carols played softly, and then open with prayer. Sing Christmas carols. Have some one tell a good Christmas story, as "Why the Chimes Rang," "The Other Wise Man," or a story in the Christian Endeavor world. Ask each member to take part by telling a Christmas lesson which the Scripture verses give us, and also let each tell what Christmas gift he or she plans to give Jesus Christ this year. This may be a gift to the needy (Matt. 25:40), or a promised service. And perhaps, best of all, some one may give his heart to Jesus Christ, or his life to active Christian service. Let the leader impress the meaning of Christmas, and the part which Christ must have in the true Christian observance of the day.

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

DECEMBER 23, 1923.

TOPIC: "Lessons from the First Christmas."—Luke 2:8-20.

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

Christmas time is the happy time to which every Junior has been looking for weeks. What does Christmas mean? Yes, gifts, a good dinner, decorations, and, most of all, the birthday of Jesus Christ. On this Sunday afternoon before Christmas let us think of that first Christmas. Let us remember the baby Jesus, and decide this afternoon how we are going to observe His birthday. He must have a gift, of course, on His own birthday. He must be loved very much. He must be talked about so that everybody will know that He came to this earth to bring peace and joy and good will. Yes, all this, and even more yet may we remember and do, as we sing together of the best Christmas gift of all that we could give to Jesus Christ—

(Tune: "Just as I Am.")
"Just as I am, young, strong and free,
To be the best that I can be
For truth and righteousness and Thee;
Lord of my life, I come, I come."

GREAT WORLD S. S. CONVENTION

The outstanding event in the Sunday School world next year will be the great World Sunday School Convention, to be held in Glasgow, Scotland, June 18th to June 26, 1924. This will be a significant gathering of world Sunday School teachers, and to those who can attend a great opportunity. The program which is being prepared, and copy of which will be sent when published upon request, promises to be full of inspiration and interest.

Following the convention, a tour is being planned which is called a "pilgrimage to the shrines of freedom," giving visitors an opportunity to see something of Europe, and particularly those portions of it that are associated with the great Protestant movement which the World Sunday School Convention represents. The most beautiful and most interesting historic places are included on the tour, and visits are made to Scotland, England, Holland, Switzerland, Italy, France, and if possible to Germany. Additional longer tours are also arranged for the Holy Land.

The Board of Religious Education (headquarters 2311 Hanover Avenue, Richmond, Va.) has received from Miss Helen R. Stearns, who will be the Christian Church denominational leader on this pilgrimage to the shrines of freedom, leaflets giving full information regarding itinerary and price of various trips. These leaflets will be sent free to any who are interested. It is to be hoped that a number of our people may attend the convention, and enjoy this trip following. In addition to the travel features, it has been arranged to give a series of lectures on the "Beacon Lights of Religious Education," and also more intensive work for those who wish to earn academic credit. This work will be directed by Dr. W. S. Athearn, dean of Boston University school of religious education and social service, who is also the chairman of the committee of education of the International Sunday School Council of Religious Education. He will be assisted by leading authorities in the Sunday School world who reside in different sections of our country.

Send today for your leaflet concerning the convention and tour.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE NOTES.

At the last session of the Alabama Conference it was suggested that we have a Chautauqua at Bethlehem College next year. The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Committees were authorized to confer with like committees of the Georgia and Alabama Conference, thence jointly with the Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention for consideration of the matter. The idea met with hearty approval, and we are looking for these committees to work out as best they can such plans as they may think best.

It has been the cry for a long while that we need better leaders. Such is hardly probable without more or less training. So in this school of methods, or Chautauqua work, there is to be an opportunity to come in touch with specialists in their line of work. This is indeed gratifying, and we are looking forward to the time when these plans are to materialize and the Chautauqua is to be a reality. Now, to aid in this and to enable us to get assistance without extra cost, the executive Committee of the Alabama Conference has requested every Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society to make a special offering for this purpose.

I have just had an opportunity to examine a copy of the Journal of Christian Education, edited by Dr. W. A. Harper. It is fine, and a most helpful feature of the journal is the Christian Endeavor topics added.

We are to be in our building in a few days with all our work, and I would suggest that those who have books they wish the school to have may send them in. In this building we are to have a modern steam-heating plant, at a cost of three thousand dollars; an individual lighting and water plant, at a cost of one thousand dollars, with a hardwood tank with a capacity of five thousand gallons. Other furnishings will amount to about twelve hundren dollars. Of course, these are not all paid for. We hesitate to make a call for assistance, while we know ours is a worthy cause and some day those who assist will have cause to rejoice in the things accomplished. Some one might make a Christmas offering for some of these items. E. M. CARTER.

If you have not sent in your renewal to THE SUN, do so before the holidays.

MOUNTAIN GIRL WISHES PRESENTS.

DEAR DR. BARRETT:

I am sending you a letter that I wish you would have published at as early a date as possible.

Thanking you for your kindness, sincerely,
M. T. SORRELL.

DEAR MRS. SORRELL:

I will write you a few lines to let you hear from us. This leaves me well and going to school every day. Say, I want you to put me a lot of toys on the Christmas tree. Say, put a new dress on for me, and Fola said put her one too, and a new hattie (hat), and some toys. Mamma has been sick, but better now.

FROM "E. T." TO MRS. SORRELL.

This is a girl that has been going to our school. She moved some time ago to another community, and from her writing you see she wishes to be remembered again this year at our Christmas tree.

Many of the children are waiting for the tree, with the hope of getting something. They are real anxious for Christmas to come, because of what they are expecting to receive off of the tree.

Should any of our people like to remember the children, we would greatly appreciate the opportunity of placing the gifts on the tree.

MRS. M. T. SORRELL.

Fancy Gap, Va.

NOTE.—Now, if any of our readers would like to make a little mountain girl happy, here is your chance, and you must not forget if you will do this good deed and get the present there by Christmas you will have to hurry a bit; at least, you must lose no time. Bro. Sorrell is in charge of our mountain work as pastor.—EDITOR.

HOLLAND.

We will appreciate the prayers of the brotherhood in our behalf on Monday, December 3rd, when we will call upon our people to take up their Church notes; and on those who have not notes, to contribute to the indebtedness of the Church.

Holland has just enjoyed a three-day Chatauqua. On the first night, a Mr. Harry Hibschman lectured on "The Law and the Prophets," and it was a clear and splendidly arranged challenge on law observance.

On Monday night, the Young Woman's Missionary Society met at the parsonage and put in an hour and a half of real study of "The Child and America's Future."

Mr. Bernard Holland led the Christian Endeavor last Sunday night, the 25th, and the meeting was an excellent one.

The loyalist says with Jacob: "I will not let Thee go, except Thou bless me."

How Shivar Mineral Water Relieves Rheumatism

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate, and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism, it is, therefore, necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable conditions due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred, on the average, report no benefit.

Shivar Springs,
Box 16-B, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

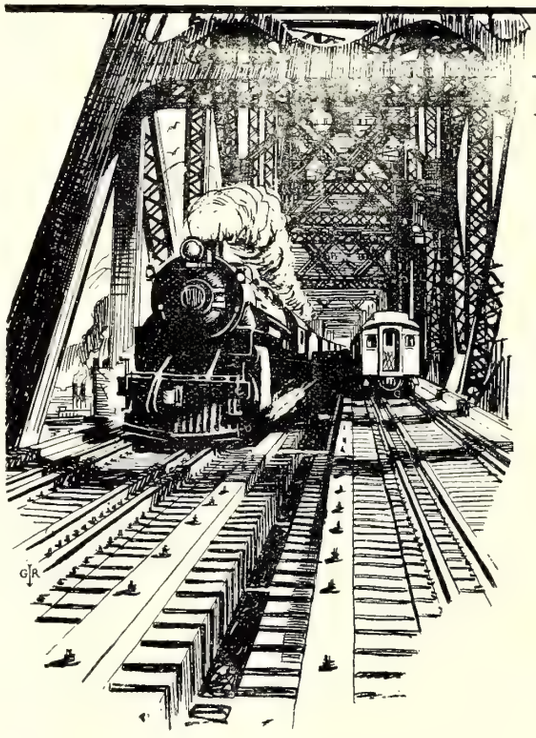
SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM



Making new capital work for the South

The margin between the cost of producing transportation and the price received for it is so small that it requires the utmost efficiency of management, and the most carefully directed expenditure of new capital, to safeguard even a small return on the investment.

In no other large business enterprise is so great an amount of capital risked for so small a return as in railroad transportation.

The $285,000,000 of new money that has been put into the Southern Railway System in the past twenty years has been largely devoted to increasing capacity and promoting operating efficiency.

We receive many requests for the elimination of grade crossings, the construction of monumental passenger stations, and other non-revenue-producing improvements. The communities we serve naturally desire to have as much of this work done as can be safely financed, but they have recognized that their interests will best be served by expenditures which produce more and better transportation.

It is only because new capital has been expended on productive improvements that the Southern Railway System today is an efficient transportation machine and an asset to the South.

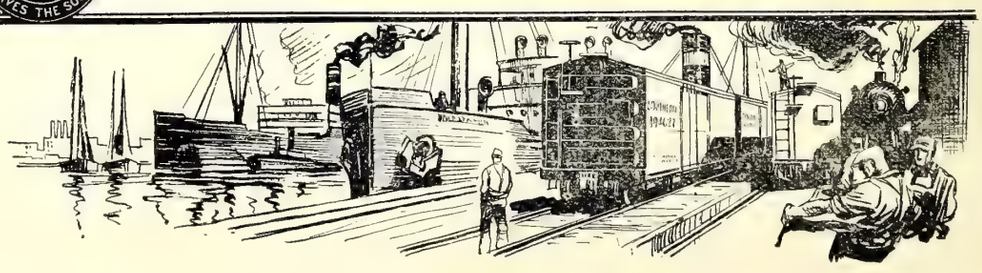
Southern Railway System deposits in Southern banks an average of $150,500 each banking hour.

THE SOUTHERN SERVES THE SOUTH



RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

There was a gloom cast over our city on the afternoon of November 14, 1923, when it became known that the death angel had come suddenly to the home of Dr. D. L. Harrell and claimed the beloved wife and mother, Mrs. Mattie Wilkins Harrell. She was a loyal and much-beloved member of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society, of the Suffolk Christian Church; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That the society has sustained the loss of a faithful and generous member, which has brought to our hearts inexpressible sorrow, though there be an aching void, we bow in resignation to the will of God. Let us cherish her memory and emulate the many virtues she so faithfully exemplified.

2. That your committee is at a loss for words to adequately portray the many beautiful qualities which crowned her life. "Her children rise up and call her blessed, her husband also, and he praiseth her."

Home was her empire, duty her throne, and heaven was her goal. She wielded the scepter of love.

"Love cannot die!
Its holy flame forever burneth;
From Heaven it came,
To Heaven returneth."

3. That to her husband and children, those to whom she was nearest and dearest, we extend our heartfelt sympathy, and commend them to the God of love and mercy. May this sad dispensation be to them a connecting-link between earth and heaven, where they may be reunited and form an unbroken circle around God's throne.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be spread on the record of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

Respectfully submitted,
MRS. C. B. DUKE,
MRS. J. E. RAWLS,
MRS. I. W. JOHNSON,
W. W. STALEY,

MRS. JOHN W. STOUT.

Thaddie Beatrice York Stout was born February 7, 1870, and died November 14, 1923, being 53 years 9 months and 7 days old at the time of her passing. She was married to John W. Stout August 18, 1895. To this union five children were born; Lalia, the oldest, died in infancy. Messrs. Arnie and Earl Stout, of Mt. Airy, N. C., and Montie Lee and Wade who are still at home, remain to mourn the passing of mother. She is survived by her sister, Mrs. Callie Cheek, of Franklinsville, and by one cousin, Rev. T. B. Johnson, of the Methodist Church of Thomasville.

At about the age of fifteen she professed Christ and joined the Church at Pleasant Ridge. After her marriage she moved her membership to the Christian Church at Ramseur. She was ever a loyal Church member and a consistent Christian.

Mrs. Stout's sister, her husband and her four children have been privileged to minister to her during her protracted illness, and her conversations with them concerning the future have been inspiring, even to the last. She said she had nothing to fear; that she had always tried to do her duty, and that there was nothing in her way. She was brave, patient, and prayerful throughout her suffering, and her last words were a beautiful prayer uttered as her spirit took its flight.

She was a devoted wife and mother, freely sacrificing herself on the altar of home, ever forgetful of self in her eagerness to minister to the needs and wants of her family. She was indeed a true mother, and to say that is to pay the highest possible tribute to a life of unselfishness and beauty.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Scott, of the Methodist Church, Ramseur, N. C. May the spirit of God comfort the bereaved.

Farmers living within one mile of the post-office or rural mail station will be entitled to receive special delivery mail by carrier, according to an order recently issued by the Postmaster General.

SANTA CLAUS VISITS MELVINA AND CLARA.

Melvina is a little Virginia girl—a bright and happy little darling. She wanted Santa Claus to come, not only to bring her Christmas things, but she wanted him to come to bring her little friend, Clara, some Christmas presents also. And when he came, he had them for both Melvina and Clara. Melvina was not selfish enough to want all Santa Claus had for herself, so, with her stocking, she put up one for Clara, and then Santa came. Now read what follows, and learn all about it.—EDITOR.

The Story of the Two Little Stockings.

The two little stockings hung side by side,
Close to the fireplace broad and wide.
"Two?" said Saint Nick, and down he came,
Loaded with toys and many a game.
"Ho! ho!" said he with a laugh of fun,
"I'll have no cheating, my pretty one;
I know who dwells in this house, my dear—
There's only one little girl lives here."
So he crept up close to the chimney-place
And measured a sock with a sober face.
Just then a wee little note fell out
And fluttered low, like a bird about.
"Aha! what's this?" said he in surprise,
As he pushed his specks up close to his eyes
And read the address, in a child's rough plan.
"Dear Saint Nicholas," so it began;
"The other stocking you see on the wall
I have hung for a child named Clara Hall;
She's a poor little girl, but very good,
So I thought perhaps you kindly would Fill up her stocking, too, tonight,
And help to make her Christmas bright.
If you've not enough for both stockings there
Please put all in Clara's—I shall not care."
Saint Nicholas brushed a tear from his eye.
"God bless you, darling," he said with a sigh.
Then softly he blew through the chimney high,
A note like a bird's when it soars on high,
When down came two of the funniest mortals
That ever were seen this side earth's portals.
"Hurry up!" said Saint Nick, "and prepare
All a little girl wants where money is rare."
Then, oh! what a scene there was in that room!
Away went the elves, but down from the gloom
Of the sooty old chimney comes tumbling low
A child's whole wardrobe, from head to toe.
How Santa laughed as he gathered them in
And fastened each one to the sock with a pin.
Right to the toe he hung a blue dress.
"She'll think it came from the sky, I guess,"
Said Saint Nicholas, smoothing the folds of blue,
And tying the hood to the stockings, too.
When all the warm clothes were fastened on,
And both little socks were filled and done,
Then Santa tucked a toy here and there
And hurried away through the frosty air,
Saying, "God pity the poor, and bless the dear child
Who pities them, too, on this night so wild!"
The wind caught the words and bore them on high
Till they died away in the midnight sky,
While Saint Nicholas flew through the icy air,
Bringing "peace and good will with him everywhere."

NOTES-PERSONALS

A Happy Christmas to all our readers!

Happiness is not frivolity. True happiness is the joy of the Lord.

The joy of the Lord will not only enable you to have a happy Christmas, but it will enable you to do your best during the coming New Year.

The New Year well spent in the service of the King of kings and Lord of lords will, the Lord willing, bring you to another Christmas in a right condition to enjoy another day—another Christmay Day—while yet in the flesh.

Professor Henry Fairfield Osborne, head of the American Museum of Natural History, good judge of prehistoric animals says: "The best American stock is rapidly dying out." Harvard and Yale would be practically empty if they had to depend for their students upon sons of graduates.

It is a fine thing to have a happy Christmas, provided it be real happiness; but it is even better to have a happy year, for it takes in so much more of time and greatly enriches both the heart and mind. A whole year fully given to the Lord is better than even a week of Christmas happiness, although Christmas happiness is right. Let a week of Christmas joy lead you to a year of joyous living. Then you will find life worth far more than mere "giggling" and "frivolity." God bless our readers with real joy in this Christmas time and for the coming New Year.

The Rev. E. Y. Mullins, D. D., president of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky., said to be the largest theological seminary in the world, recently completed a service of twenty-five years in that position. As appreciating his work, about eight hundred of the citizens of Kentucky recently tendered him a banquet, as expressive of the high esteem in which he is held by the people who are interested in his great work. It is further said that all denominations, and even the Jews, took part in the festivities of the occasion. Dr. Mullins was not only elected to the presidency of the Southern Baptist Convention, but a little later he was elected to the presidency of the Baptist World Alliance, which met last July at Stockhold, in Sweden. He is perhaps the most prominent Baptist in the world. Though not a Baptist, we rejoice with him in his sphere of high usefulness.

Every now and then we hear of some man who is trying to fix up a way to go to heaven without the sacrificial blood of the Lamb. You know, Paul tells us that without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin. Hence, Jesus said: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." We wonder now and then how these men can read that passage from John 10:1, and still feel at liberty to hunt some other way of entering the sheepfold? Mr. Moody used to tell a little story that made it quite clear that the some other way will not do. If we are going back to God and into heaven, we must do it in God's way. Mr. Moody tells this story:

"A man drempt that he built a ladder from earth to heaven, and when he did a good deed up went his ladder a few feet. When he did a very good deed, his ladder went higher, and when he gave away large sums of money to the poor, up it went farther still. By and by it went out of sight, and as years rolled on, it went up, he thought, past the clouds, clear into heaven. When he died, he thought he would step off his ladder into heaven, but he heard a voice roll out from paradise: 'He that climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber.' Down he came, ladder and all, and he awoke. He said if he wanted to get salvation he must get it in another way than by good deeds, and he took the other way, which is by Jesus Christ."

THE BEST MAGAZINE OF ITS KIND.

The above headline was not just made up for the purpose of saying something "strong" about the Business Printer, but was inspired by a similar comment from one of the Franklin printers who has been a constant reader of the Business Printer for many years.

The Business Printer is, easily, a leader in its field, and, if not positively the best printing-trade journal, is certainly among the best of them. It has remained constantly a service publication, although it might easily have branched out into the national field long ago.

December will be no exception to the rule in excellence of issues of this magazine. Some of the best features of the entire year have been reserved for the closing weeks—like the dessert at a good meal, or the climax of a good story or play.

AN INTERESTING CONFERENCE.

The annual founder's week conference of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago has come to be one of the most noteworthy in the year's list of such events. It is announced that this conference for 1924 will be held February 4th to 8th, inclusive, in the Moody Bible Institute auditorium, Chicago.

From this world-wide forum, many of the country's leading clergymen and scholars who adhere to the historic position of the Christian Church, unreservedly accepting the Bible as the divinely inspired Word of God, have sounded forth their reasons for the faith that is in them, in defense of the Bible against modernistic attack.

The program for the coming conference includes a strong representation of America's ablest contenders for the truth of the Scriptures, among them Rev. J. Gresham Machen, D. D., professor of New Testament literature and exegesis in Prniceton Theological Seminary, and author of the book entitled "Christianity and Liberalism"; Rev. Harold Paul Sloan, D. D., pastor of the Central Methodist Episcopal Church, Bridgeton, N. J., a powerful opponent of anti-orthodox tendencies in Methodism and author of the book, "Historic Christianity and the New Theology"; Rev. Leander S. Keyser, D. D., professor of Christian Endeavor in Wittenberg College, and of systematic theology in Hamma Divinity School, Springfield, Ohio, and Rev. Alexander Sprunt, D. D., of Charleston, S. C., present moderator of the Presbyterian Church in the United States.

Among other speakers will be Rev. W. Talbot Hindley, M. A., vicar of St. John's Church, London; Rev. Henry W. Frost, home director of the China inland mission; Rev. Louis Entzminger, an evangelist whose remarkable work with Sunday Schools in Fort Worth, Texas, Minneapolis, Cleveland, Toronto, and other places have caused him to be called "the greatest Sunday School man in the world"; Rev. W. W. Johnstone, D. D., an exponent of rural evangelism, superintendent of the Lakes District of the American Sunday School Union; Miss Sara Wray, whose name and work as superintendent of the Eighth Avenue Mission, New York City, are known the country over; Rev. Charles Ernest Scott, D. D., a distinguished Presbyterian missionary and author from North China; Rev. Harry L. Strachan, of the Latin-America Evangelization Party, whose work in the Argentine has been attended by bitter persecution.

The names of other preachers, teachers and missionaries to participate in the conference will be announced later.

A WORD FROM TORONTO.

Thought I may be spending the most of my time up here in the North where they sing "God Save the King," instead of "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," I have not forgotten the South nor the many friends who have been a great inspiration to my life. Lest they should forget me, I have decided to send a few lines once in a while to THE SUN, provided the editor, in the goodness of his generous heart, shall see fit to publish them.

Christmas is almost here—the third one since we came to the great city of Toronto and undertook the work of what was then our only Church in this city of more than half a million people. Through all these months we have been plodding along. The work has been hard, and progress necessarily slow. The average man, and that is what I am, doesn't easily make a great impression upon a city of more than five hundred thousand people. I am still painfully conscious of the fact that the majority of this half a million people don't even know I am here. But I can rejoice in the fact that it has been my privilege to come in close contact with a few people and to help them to a closer fellowship with God. It has also been my privilege to receive into Church membership some very fine Christian people.

The first year of my work here, the morning congregations increased considerably, but the evening attendance did not show so much improvement. Last year, sickness in the congregation greatly interfered with our work, as it did in many other places. This fall, both the morning and evening congergations are on the upgrade. A congregation such as ours works at a disadvantage, so far as Church attendance is concerned. The most of my people have to take the street cars in order to attend Church, and a 7-cent street car fare is no small consideration for a working-man's family. But we are moving, even though we do have to go slowly.

When I became pastor here, the congregation was undecided as to whether it would build an addition to its present building or sell the property and build on a new site. It has since decided to move and build on a site where it will be possible to render a greater service than can be done under the present conditions. The site has been decided upon and the lot purchased. We are now waiting to sell the old property before going ahead with the new building. In the meantime, we are working on a building fund.

During the time of our service here, a new Toronto Church, known as the Victoria Park Christian Church, has been received into Conference membership. Now, with more than fifty members and a great opportunity for growth, it is moving forward. Its pastor, a young man of brilliant promise, is building it upon a solid foundation.

I feel more and more that our Church—North, South, East and West—should move unitedly forward to a greater service for Christ and the kingdom of God. Our platform is broad enough to include every follower of Christ, and simple enough for every one to understand. But we do not get very far by merely congratulating ourselves upon the greatness of our principles. We must live them and work intelligently and unitedly to give them to the world. We will not get very far by airing our differences and trying to force our individual creeds upon others. In the spirit of the Christ who said, "He that is not against Me is for Me," let us go forth to do His will.

A CHRISTMAS MESSAGE.

Christmas is a Christian festival celebrated in memory of the birth of Jesus Christ. It was first celebrated by the Eastern Church as Epiphany, January 6th, and by the Western Church as Natalis, December 25th. The selection of December 25th by the Western Church was not arbitrary, while in all probability it was not the actual date of the birth of Christ; for at this season of the year occurred a series of pagan festivals, closely connected with the civil and social life of the Romans, and from the nature of their observance, easily capable of being spiritualized and made symbolic. This festival celebrated the winter solstice, the birthday of the new sun about to return once more to the earth. In this feast the transition to the Christian viewpoint easily presented itself, and so it came about that in the Christian cycle of holidays, December 25th was set to celebrate the birthday of Jesus, the Sun of the spiritual world, for the purpose of drawing away Christians from heathen festivities, and of purifying eventually these heathen customs and ideas. But it matters little on what precise day the Saviour deigned to take our nature upon Him; the great thing is to commemorate the amazing event on some day accepted by Christians at large.

In the long ago—seven hundred years before the first Christmas—it was the world's darkest spiritual night stars fading; people groping like the blind, stumbling, falling; lights out in the sanctuary; no open vision; silence—a prophet standing with his face toward the East, shading his eyes. Hark! listen—he hears a voice: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulders, and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." In the distance, it is answered by the song of the angels: "And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will toward men." The whole air at the first Christmastide was tremulous with joy. Christ had come to give brightness and beauty, gladness and glory, to the whole circle of life and duty. He came to give peace, and from heaven's throne today he bends to give peace to all who trust in Him. He was the only person ever born into the world that had his choice as to how he should come. He might have come a man as did the first Adam—he came as a babe. He inserted himself into our race at its lowest and weakest point. If He were to lift the race He must get under it. He glorified the cradle; He beautified boyhood; He sanctified motherhood.

There is a world-longing for universal peace, "when nations will learn war no more." Here is the solution to this ever-pressing and perplexing problem: "good will to men." When this good will is perfected in us, we have a basis for everlasting universal peace. Permanent peace can come in no other way. Recognize every man as a brother, and war will cease. Then every babbling tongue will sing, Glory to God in the highest.

What an interest centered in that Babe, wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger in Bethlehem! Prophets were interested, angels were interested, the ages have been most deply interested since. The shepherds had, perhaps, some premonition. The seventy weeks of Daniel's prophecy were about fulfilled. Suddenly their attention was arrested by a strange sight in the heavens, an angel announcing the birth of Christ as glad tidings to all people; then the air was filled with angels singing, "Glory to God in the highest."

Christ was found by the shepherds in a sheepfold. Since then the world has been too apt to seek for Christ only in magnificent temples. He who must have microscopic vision to see me at all, come down, passing thrones of kings—in ancient times all kings were considered gods. The wonder of Christianity is its simplicity. If the Bible had been an imposition, it would have fallen into this trap. The world has been 1800 years coming up to the idea of democracy embodied in that wonderful effort of human wisdom, the Declaration of Independence. The idea of democracy was in this coming to a stable to find Christ. A cave below the high altar of the Church of the Nativity is now shown as the very place where this august event transpired—a little recess, shaped like a clam shell, its floor of marble wrought into a star in the center, bearing in Latin the words: "Here Jesus Christ was born of the virgin Mary." A row of lamps hange around the outer edge, the right to attend to them being jealously watched by each of the ancient Churches—the Greek, the Latin, the Armenian and the Coptic having one or more of these under their care. One can follow the shepherds in their journey to see the unspeakable wonder. They would go along the rich valley of Boaz, and then up the terraced hill, by a path still in use; nor is it uninstructive to reflect that, while simple shepherds were led by the angels to the manger, the high priests and the great of Jerusalem, so near, slept through that most illustrious night of all history, quite unconscious of what had happened.

Two thousand years had passed since Balaam, the soothsayer, had prophesied that a star would appear in the East, but now it had appeared. The wise men had seen his star; they had learned to look through nature up to nature's God. They were not Jews. The East, from which they came seeking Christ, was beyond the boundary of the Holy Land—perhaps Arabia or Persia. The magi were men to whom weer entrusted the sacred books. It is not strange that the appearance of a new star attracted their attention, or that they should have connected it with some new revelation from heaven, since they had studied astronomy and the feeling of the appearing of a great deliverer was widespread among the Eastern nations. A feeling of expectancy was prevalent everywhere. The King of Judea was troubled. It was rumored that about this time, in fulfillment of prohpecy, a Prince was to be born, who would assume the Jewish throne. Vergil had written his fourth Eclogue, in which he announced the near approach of the golden age. In the porch of the temple at Jerusalem the old king was walking on a February morning over nineteen hundred years ago. Off yonder, beyond the Kedron, a group of venerable strangers drew near, their long garments covered with dust, who enquired for Him who was born king of the Jews. They hoped to find the Jewish Prince in the Holy City, and were amazed to find that nothing was here known of Him. The wise men reached their destination. The star that guided them rested over a humble cottage. They enter and find the Christ-child. The one in whom all the streams of prophecy converge and all the glowing lines of history radiate. In this humble home at Bethlehem all the hopes of Abraham, the dreams of David, and the visions of Isaiah are realized. Here the magi leave their kingly gift which was sufficient to support the holy family during their sojourn in Egypt.

The incarnation of Jesus was a reality. Everything of the Christian religion depends on the truth of the story of Bethlehem. If He who was there born was not divine, then the religion He set up is but human religion, and our hopes of a manhood perfected in a God-man are quenched. Revelation, mediation, passion, crucifixion, resurrection, ascension, parousia, all revolve around Bethlehem's manger. Before Christmas, Christ was in the genealogies of the race, for God framed the history of the world in view of the coming King. He lived in the ideal manhood which the Old Testament lifted before the world as the Emperor of the ages. Today all that is best in our nineteenth century civilization is traceable to His earthly life. "That we might receive the adoption of sons" was the supreme object of incarnation, which means that God's nature imparted to us would initiate us into His family, giving us that liberty of fellowship with Him to walk in the enjoyment of the highest kind of intercourse the world shall ever know—the confidential friendship which subsists between the father and the son when the father becomes the companion of the son, and the son grows up to be the associate of the father; that his house is our home around which our highest and holiest and fondest associations cluster, and in which, at last, we are to find our eternal abode.

The final test of a Christian life is not the worship of God, but always the love of man for man.* Wherever we find men and women with the true conception of Christ's life and teachings, we find them thrilled with the passion for giving. The little child wakes on Christmas morning with its heart full to overflowing with gladness, and by every gift in stocking, or beside cradle or bed, is taught anew the old, old lesson of love. Husband and wife, brother and sister, lover and sweetheart, friend and friend, as they receive their gifts are reminded once more that love is not a dream, but a reality—and a reality which grows more vital, more precious and more enduring with the years. All should be remembered with some token of love on Christmas day, especially the friendless, the poor, the outcast, the waifs on the streets. That is knowing Christmas in its highest and noblest sense; in its truest conception; knowing it in that spirit from which we derive the surest happiness.

The whole Christian world prostrates itself in adoration around the crib of Bethlehem on Christmas day and rehearses in accents of love a history which precedes all time and will endure throughout eternity. The message is as universal as it is personal and present; indeed, we live and move and have our being in the midst of a civilization which is the legitimate offspring of the religion of Christ. The chief charm of Christmas is its simplicity. A genune fellowship pervades our common life—a fellowship whose source is our common share in the gift of the world's greatest life which was given to the whole world. The universal joy at Christmas is wonderful. We ring bells when princes are born, or toll a mournful dirge when great men pass away. Nations have their red-letter days, and festivals, but once in the year, and only once, the whole world stands still to celebrate the event of a life. Only Jesus of Nazareth claims this world-wide, undying remembrance. You cannot cut Christmas out of the calendar, nor out of the heart of the world.

WEATHER.

How far ahead can the weather be accurately predicted? Only a few days, and then subject to the law of averages. The airplane and radio, however, are proving such valuable helps that the Weather Bureau says long-range weather predictions (far in advance) may not be impossible. Meantime, nature predicts the kind of winter and other seasons months ahead—to any one with eyes and knowledge.

This year looks like a mild winter. If so, chances are that next winter will be severe. Nature evens things up, in temperature, over five-year periods.

CHRISTMAS.

Again it is within five days of Christmas, and we are brought near to the birthday of the greatest personage in the history of the world, for no other man has ever died for the salvation of the world except Jesus Christ, whose natal day we celebrate on December 25th.

Something will be said of this Christmas that was never said of any other, viz: for the first time in all of the two thousand years, or nearly so, the 25th of December is for all Christendom Christmas. If we mistake not, the Russian Church this year has changed its calendar to run with ours, and on this account we have a world united on Christmas Day. And it is worthy of such agreement. May not this union of the world indicate, at least in a remote way, the tendency to come together in the Christian world and be one people, even the Lord's people.

May we not venture to wish that this may be the time, as Longfellow puts it, when—

"The bells of all Christendom may roll along the unbroken song of peace on earth, good will to men."

Or as E. H. Chapen expressed a similar thought when he said:

"The Church bells of innumerable sects are all chime-bells today, ringing in sweet accordance throughout many lands, and awaking a great joy in the heart of our common humanity."

It is the day of Christmas joys, when we are very happy; happy, true Christians are, because the whole world has another chance to think of the new-born King and the glorious kingdom into which we are to come, as we believe on Him and live and serve in His name.

It was Tennyson, who at about this time in the month of December, wrote:

"The time draws near the birth of Christ:
The moon is hid: the night is still;
The Christmas bells from hill to hill
Answer each other in the mist."

It was Phoebe Cary who wrote:

"For little children everywhere
A joyous seasen still we make;
We bring our precious gifts to them,
Even for the dear Child Jesus' sake."

It was the celebrated David Gregg, D. D., who wrote:

"In the past, Christ was, in the generations, stepping Bethlehemward. Every time a new descendant in the covenant line was born, the voice of prophecy shouted, 'Christ is coming!' As ancestor was added to ancestor, the voice waxed louder and louder. Thus the shout was repeated and repeated until at last the angels and the magi and the shepherds and the watchers in the temple answered back that shout with gladder and louder, 'Christ has come!' "

"THE REAL QUESTION."

How hard it is to get the people to see the real question in anything which is of national importance! You see, there are always so many who wish to play the scuttle-fish—muddy the waters, so that the real question shall not be seen. And these men are not only numerous, but they are very active, seeking to give aid to the wrong as against the right, to make error seem like truth and truth seem like error, and in that way they confuse a great many good people who wish to do right, but really do not know what is right or for the best, except as some one may give instruction. These scuttle-fish orators are ever busy and watching the chance to muddy the waters and so keep good, clever people who wish to do the right thing from doing it, and this they do by misrepresentation, or by some innuendo which is, after all, misrepresentation, and they hope in this way to turn the tide of public opinion and win the day for the wrong, but this they will find it very very hard to do, and may God stay the hands and tongues of such men till they fall impotent into the dust of oblivion. We wish the men no harm, but we do wish the issues they seek to obscure complete deliverance from the success the scuttle-fish orators are seeking to give it.

The editor of the Christian Advocate (Nashville) has a strong and a sensible word along this line, which we reprint as follows, and we endorse what he says:

There is little probability that either the eighteenth amendment or the Volstead enforcement law will be repealed. No amendment which has ever been added to th Constitution of the United States has ever been repealed or modified. No law which has ever been enacted by Congress to carry into effect the provisions of a constitutional amendment has ever been changed except to be strengthened. It would take two-thirds of the votes of both houses of Congress to start a repeal or constitutional of the prohibition law—that is, so long as one more than one-third of either house stands firm, the eighteenth amendment will stand. But should that obstacle be overcome, a mere majority in a single house of each of thirteen State Legislatures would block constitutional repeal. No, there is not much danger at this point.

The real question is whether the eighteenth amendment and the Federal prohibitory law are to be nullified by a law-defying, special-privileged class representing a few wet cities and a few wet States either by inaction or by overt connivance with outlaws. The contest is sharply drawn. Every American citizen is on the side of law enforcement or he is on the side of the bootlegger and those outlaws who are his patrons. Talk about "personal liberty"! The one who bribes jurors and judges and law enforcement officers and patronizes bootleggers is a despicable outlaw. Indifference toward the enforcement of the prohibition law and willful violation of that law both strike at the very heart of free government.

One of the great daily papers of this country says editorially: "Thousands upon thousands of law-abiding persons in the United States are not abiding by the liquor laws." It is very strange that any paper would boldly make a statement that is so untrue. But it is just that kind of false statements and the cultivation of that kind of sentiment that must be met, must be fought, must be overcome, if we are to continue to be a free people.

LET US FACE THE FACTS.

On three different occasions during the last six weeks we have heard three different brethren discuss the essentials in the faith of the fundamentalists and the teachings of the modernists. All three of these brethren, either directly or impliedly, admitted the unsound and unscriptural teachings of the modernists, and at the same time expressed a sympathy for the faith of the fundamentalists, and yet, strange to say, each of these speakers claimed that, notwithstanding these differences, they claimed to believe that both the fundamentalists and the modernists can work together in the Church of Christ.

These admissions were open and above board, so I am not making public that which was meant to be private. Now, to make sure that we are understood, let us define these terms in very plain language, as a means of getting to understand the differences between the fundamentalists and the modernists.

1. The Fundamentalists.—Who are they and what do they believe? They are men and women who hold closely to the fundamental teachings of the Bible. As the world implies, they hold to whatever is fundamental in the teachings of Christianity.

2. The Modernists.—Who are they and what do they believe? They are men and women who repudiate largely the thought of authority in the Christian faith and repudiate many of the vital doctrines of the Bible as at all essentials in Christian teaching. It is not so much what they believe as what they do not believe.

To illustrate the difference between the two parties, the fundamentalists and the modernists, it may be sufficient to say, a fundamentalist believes in the deity of Christ, in the virgin birth, in the vicarious atonement, in the inspiration of the Scrptures, in the supernatural in Christianity, in the physical resurrection of Jesus, in the working of miracles, in the inerrancy of the Bible—that if you reject these or any one of them, thereby you give Christian doctrine a staggering blow, in so far as these rejections are accepted. Hence, they are called fundamentalists because of their devotion to whatever they regard as made fundamental to Christianity by the Bible.

On the other hand, a modernist is a person who holds that according to the so-called new knowledge, many of the fundamentals of the Christian faith are not true, and should not be made a test of fellowship among Christians. The great body of modernists, the leading modernists, agree that they do not believe that Christ is God, nor that His was a virgin birth, nor that He made a vicarious atonement, nor that the Scriptures are in any special sense inspired of God, nor in the physical resurrection of Jesus, nor in the supernatural in Christianity, nor in the miracles of Jesus and not in the inerrancy of the Bible, etc.

We thus have the beliefs of the fundamentalists and the disbeliefs of the modernists in such plain language that no one, who is willing to face the facts need have any trouble in locating the doctrinal standing of the fundamentalists, nor the lack of doctrinal standing of the modernists. In this statement of the beliefs of the fundamentalists and the lack of beliefs on the part of the modernists, there need be no discussion. We have tried to be absolutely impartial, giving to each side just what they claim. We have sought to state the facts as they are claimed by both sides, and we believe we have done so in an understandable way.

The brethren to whom reference is made in the beginning of this article are the brethren who have claimed publicly that the two bodies, the fundamentalists and the modernists, can work together in the Church of Christ. It is to these brethren, in part, that we are coming for information. They declared that the two bodies can work together. If that means anything, it means that at least the speakers could work together with the modernists—but can they? Can the fundamentalists and the modernists work together in fact?

Let us see if they can. If next Sunday you open the doors of your Church for the reception of members, and a number of candidates for membership come forward; among the number thus presenting themselves is a man of more than ordinary intelligence; when the pastor asks him if he believes in Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world, he boldly answers, "I do not"; when you ask him if he does not believe that Jesus is the divine and only begotten Son of God, again he answers, "I do not: I believe that Jesus was a good Man, but no more the divine Son of God than are all good men, neither do I believe that He came to save sinners from their sins"; again you ask Him if he believes the Bible is the inspired Word of God, and he just as promptly answers, "I do not, I believe the Bible is a human document, and like all other human documents, it has in it many errors."

Now, brethren, the case is before you. What will you do with this man as an applicant for membership in your Church? Would you vote to receive him into full fellowship and membership in your Church, or could you vote to refuse him fellowship and membership in your Church? Which?

But let us ask this man one more question. It may be that his answer to another question which we ordinarily ask candidates for membership will enable you to let him in on a close squeeze. Turning to the candidate, the pastor says: "Brother, let me ask you one more question: Do you believe that God, for Christ's sake, has forgiven your sins?" Again he answers, just as promptly and just as distinctly: "I do not; I believe that I am saved by my own good conduct and works."

Now, will you tell us if, in answer to these questions, such answers should be given, would you favor receiving that man into your membership and fellowship? He has plainly said he does not believe in Jesus Christ as the divine Son of God, except as all good men are the divine sons of God. He does not believe that Jesus is the Saviour of the sinner. He does not believe that the Bible is the inspired Word of God; he does not believe that God, for Christ's sake, has forgiven his sins. If such a man as that can be taken into the Church as a regular member, why cannot all men be taken in their unbelief, regardless of their acceptance of God's plan of salvation? And if we go that far, then Church membership will mean what?

Brethren, I have not set up a man of straw just to have the pleasure of knocking him down. I have given answers to these questions just as I believe any full-blooded modernist would give them—would be compelled to give them—if he answers in harmony with his convictions. Now, what I wish to know is this: If such a man were to apply to your Church for fellowship as a Christian and as a member, having answered these questions practically as above given, what would you do, vote to receive him or to reject him?

I now ask the following brethren to tell us what the Christian Church should do in such a case, according to its principles—accept such candidate for membership or reject him? Will Bro. Hermon Eldredge, Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., Rev. T. E. White, Rev. J. G. Truitt, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, and Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., tell us what should be done in such a case—receive such a man into our membership or reject him? I have tried to be perfectly fair in selecting these names. I have included some who are supposed to be extra liberal as well as some who are very conservative. We do not wish any protracted discussion, we do not wish any "ifs and ands," but a simple answer to the question—would you accept such a man for membership in the Christian Church, or would you reject him? Replies are to be limited to 200 words, and must be in the editor's hands by December 24, 1923, for publication.

CHEERING NEWS FROM AFAR.

Good news invigorates the mind and heart and does the soul real good. There is depression. It is useless to deny it, but, thank God, the depression is not able to break God down and claim the field for itself. No matter how gloomy is the day, the sun is shining somewhere, and as long as the sun shines somewhere, just that long shall we have confidence in the ever-ruling providence of God. The darkness shall go and the light shall come. That we do, now and then, have occasional dark seasons is nothing strange. The Church has had them since the beginning. We may be now in one of the dark-day periods, but we are not cast down, for soon the sun will cross the line and brightness will return.

We find in an exchange some very wholesome thoughts from the pen of Rev. Bob Jones, an evangelist of note, who has had much success in preaching the Gospel and thereby winning men and women to Christ. That our readers may have an idea of the man who did the writing of these cheering words from afar, we will give first a personal word concerning himself, and then we will give the cheering words from his pen. Mr. Jones says:

A word personal: This is my fortieth birthday. I have been preaching for twenty-five years. The first seven years of my ministry were spent as a country school-teacher, a pastor of country Churches, in college, and in holding country revivals. For the last eighteen years I have held revivals in thirty States. I have given twelve thousand five hundred Gospel talks and sermons. My audiences have aggregated fifteen million. (This is conservative.) I have shaken hands with over three hundred thousand people who have responded to a definite proposition to accept Christ as a personal Saviour, and over one hundred thousand people have gone into the Churches as a result of my evangelistic campaigns. I say these things not in any spirit of boasting, but because I want my friends to feel that I have had enough experience to prepare me to make some observations. I have not spent much of my ministry in the library. I have read on an average two good books each month for eighteen years, but I have had to read on trains and in hotels at night after my services when I have been too tired to sleep. I do not claim to be either a scholar or a thinker. I have spent eighteen years on the firing line and have had to meet many complicated problems and have had to solve them immediately. This has forced me to draw upon mental resources that I did not know I had.

Then Mr. Jones says, by way of sending out good news to his readers, this:

The following are my conclusions about certain things in which I am sure all ministers and godly laymen should be interested:

1. I have found the overwhelming majority of preachers in all Churches orthodox, consecrated, faithful, and self-sacrificing men. They are the finest type of men in the world. My faith in them grows year by year.

2. The people in America believe the Bible. I know more about this than the college professors. There is nothing to all this talk about the young people and their doubts. The only young people I find with doubts are the ones who have had doubts put into their heads by college professors and a few high-brow false preachers.

3. The laymen of all Churches are growing suspicious of the educational leadership of the Churches. There is a lot of propaganda in this country against our educational leadership. People are saying: "We gave our money to the Church for Christian education, and now we understand the colleges are undermining the faith of our young people." It is my honest opinion that the Church will have to put down false teaching or the rebellion will come. In fact, I think it is here already.

4. When a preacher's orthodoxy is questioned, that preacher is not orthodox. I have never heard any one question the orthodoxy of Bishop Warren A Chandler.

5. The need of the day is dogmatic, positive preaching. A man who is considered an authority on any subject can have a hearing. No one cares to listen to a preacher who is not at all sure of his position. The world is too busy for men to waste their time listening to any man who does not know what he is talking about.

6. It is easier to have revivals now than it has been any time in the last eighteen years. The people are hungry. They want the Gospel straight. They have tried substitutes, and they are sick. They are crying for the old-time message. Here is my prophecy: We are going to have the greatest revival in America during the next five years we have had in the history of this country. It is up to the pastors to fall in line with the revival spirit. If the pastors do not fall in line, God will send it through the laymen. There are signs everywhere in America. May it be a real, genuine, old-time Holy Ghost revival!

HOLY NECK.

The following persons, as delegates from this congregation, attended the Christian Missionary Association at Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., Tuesday, December 4th: Mr. and Mrs. B. D. Jones, Mrs. Forbes, Mr. E. T. Holland, Mr. A. L. Jolly, Mr. R. C. Norfleet.

The Woman's Missionary Aid Society had mite-box opening at their last meeting, Monday, December 3rd. The writer has not been informed as to the amount realized, but a splendid offering was expected.

The Thanksgiving remittance to Christian Orphanage from Holy Neck Sunday School approximates $200. The offering was received from the various classes last Sunday.

One of our good, loyal members has been so impressed with the splendid achievement of Christian Temple, Norfolk, in the erection of their Church, that he has given his check for $700, with a promise of $150 more to Dr. Smith, to be used to pay for the tiling in the vestibule and hall entrances. Such liberality in the spirit of the Master is certainly most commendable. May the Lord bless the giver and the gift to His glory.

Our efficient Sunday School superintendent, Bro. R. C. Norfleet, has recently outlined the following as objectives for the coming year:

1. Better-qualified teaching force.
2. Fifty per cent increase in enrollment.
3. One hundred per cent increase in attendance.
4. Increased interest in missions and stewardship, leading to enlarged offerings.
5. Every scholar won for Christ.

The plans for the attainment of these goals will include teacher-training class, special teaching along lines of stewardship and missions, daily vacation Bible school, decision days and personal work. The school will likely adopt his suggestions.

NEW ORLEANS GETS DRY RULES.

"Izzy" Einstein, celebrated New York raider, and some of his assistants, are down in New Orleans, and have decided that they will give the Gulf Coast the driest Christmas it ever had. To this end, the following rules regarding drinking in hotels, restaurants and cabarets have been laid down:

"All persons seen in possession of whiskey or with liquor on the table before them will be arrested.

"If one person carries liquor into a place, those in the party will be charged each and severally with possession of intoxicants.

"If the persons prove they purchased the liquor in the place they will be freed only when the raiders are satisfied that correct names and addresses have been given.

"If the sleuths are so satisfied, those giving their names will be compelled to appear in court as witnesses against the proprietors.

"If doubt exists as to the correctness of the names and addresses and doubt that the liquor was obtained in the place, then Federal agents are required to arrest all concerned."

ELON LETTER.

The Indiana limestone columns for the south entrance to the Alamance building are here and being erected. Those for the north entrance have been shipped. Work is being pushed with all rapidity consistent with satisfactory workmanship, and we hope to have this new building completed on January 18th, the anniversary of the fire. Meanwhile, students and faculty are roughing it in a spirit of genuine sympathy and heroism. The pioneer spirit is not dead in American life, but only dormant. It is thoroughly awake here. Visitors who are here but an hour or two readily sense the situation, and go away rejoicing in the Elon spirit, glad to have breathed even momentarily such an exhilarating atmosphere.

Gifts continue to come to us occasionally. We need them, and many more, to do the work requisite here—work that we ought to do in discharge of our duty to Church and State. We are now ready to furnish and equip rooms in the Alamance building, and good friends have found it out and are helping right nobly. Sterling Furniture Co., Greensboro, N. C., have donated a beautiful suite of their American walnut dining-room furniture, Queen Anne style, to furnish the model dining-room. I trust that many who plan to equip dining-rooms for the new year will remember to inquire of their dealers for the Sterling Furniture Company's make.

The Odell Hardware Company, Greensboro, and the B. A. Sellars & Sons, Burlington, have donated the silver and chinaware, and the linens and draperies, respectively, for this same room. These three gifts represent an outlay of $1,200. We are grateful, and hope our friends will call on these generous firms when in need of articles they supply.

It will cost $300 to furnish each recitation room in the Alamance building. Here is a fine opportunity for twenty friends to enjoy Christmas.

Chief Justice Walter Clark, of the North Carolina Supreme Court, has given us 219 valuable historical works out of his personal library. He plans later to add to this splendid gift. Judge Clark sent us these books without a word or suggestion from us. He did it because he is a generous-hearted man who knows Elon's worth and suspected her needs.

There are some good friends who are deeply conscious that the Lord wants them to help our college in her present crisis. I have never doubted that He would care for Elon. These friends will be genuinely happy when they have yielded generously to the promptings of His spirit.

A Merry Christmas to all!

CHOICE CHRISTMAS READING.

BY WM. THORNTON WHITSETT.

As the Christmas season draws near, our minds naturally begin to think of the part that this great festival has played in the literature of our race. Everybody has read Charles Dickens' "Christmas Stories," and they will well bear a re-reading each year, as nothing finer has been written in their class. There is, then, John Milton's hymn on the nativity that is generally regarded as the finest poem yet written that is suggested by the birth of Christ. In it we have poetry and scholarship combined to a remarkable degree.

We wish to call special attention to a beautiful selection of poetry by the English poet, Christina Georgina Rossetti, written by her as a Christmas carol. Christina Rossetti was born in 1830, and died in 1894. She was a sister of the poet and painter, Dante Gabriel Rossetti. Her best work ranks with the finest poetry of her day, and we would know more of her probably if her genius had not been somewhat overshadowed by the work of her distinguished brother. In her best lyrics she strikes a very high, pure note.

Christmas Carol.

Our God, heaven cannot hold Him,
Nor earth sustain;
Heaven and earth shall flee away
When He comes to reign.

In the bleak midwinter,
A stable-place sufficed
The Lord God Almighty
Jesus Christ.

Angels and archangels
May have gathered there,
Cherubim and seraphim
Thronged the air.

But only His mother,
In her maiden bliss,
Worshiped her beloved
With a kiss.

What can I give Him,
Poor as I am?
If I were a shepherd
I would bring a lamb.

If I were a wise man
I would do my part—
Yet what can I give Him?
Give my heart.

PALM STREET CHURCH.

In Psalm 31:8, David says: "Thou hast set me in a large room." Since coming to Palm Street Church, Greensboro, I feel that the Lord has set me in a large room—a room of opportunity and service. The people are very responsive and willing to co-operate, which, to say the least, is most stimulating to the pastor. If a tree is known by its fruits, shall not a Church also be known?

Shortly after arirving on this field, we experienced a sample of one kind of fruitage—it happened on this wise. On a certain Monday night, a knock was heard, and on answering, the visitor was invited inside, and in he came, bringing with him a congregation (taxing our housing capacity), loaded with packages. After depositing their packages on the table, and on the floor, their leader made a neat little speech, packed with welcome, co-operation, and godspeed in the work of the Church. Then the pastor tried to respond, but one's feelings at such a time can be "better felt than telt."

We are occupying a cosy five-room bungalow, and we like it so much that my wife calls it "a love-nest," and says that we are living our honeymoon over again.

DETERMINATION.

This is an age of competition. If you want anything you must go after it, not in a half-hearted way, but with a determination that will brook no interference. The one thing that you may as well understand right in the beginning is that you will get no more than you are willing to pay for, but you can have almost anything you want, when you want it bad enough.

UNCLE TOM BAKER.

Here is a story of absorbing interest. It comes to us through the North Carolina Christian Advocate. We ask for it a careful reading by every person who may chance to get a copy of this issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Uncle Tom Baker and Devil Bill Jones are types of men not to be found in this day, only rarely if ever in this country. The story of these two men follows:

Uncle Tom Baker was much of a man. He had been wild and reckless and feared not God nor regarded man, but one day at a camp meeting while Bishop Gaston was shaking up sinners and scorching them over the infernal pit, Tom got alarmed, and before the meeting was over he professed religion and became a zealous, outspoken convert and declared his intention of going forth into the world and preaching the Gospel. He was terribly in earnest, for he said that he had lost a power of time—"I must make it up." Tom was a rough talker, but he was a good one, and knew right smart of Scripture and a good many of the old-fashioned hymns by heart. The conference thought that he was a pretty good fellow to send out into the border country among the settlers. So Tom straddled his old flea-bitten gray, and in due time was circuit riding in northern Mississippi. In course of time, Tom acquired notoriety, and from his strong language and stronger gestures and his muscular eloquence they called him sledge-hammer, and after a while "Old Sledge" for short. Away down in one corner of his territory was a blacksmith shop, and a wagon shop, and a whiskey shop, and a post-office at Bill Jones' cross-roads. And Bill was the keeper of them all. And was known far and wide as "Devil Bill Jones," so as to distinguish him from Squire Bill, the magistrate.

Devil Bill's Oath.

Devil Bill had sworn that no preacher should ever toot a horn or sing a hymn in that settlement, and if any of the cussed hypocrites ever dared to stop at the cross-roads he would make him dance a hornpipe and sing a hymn, and whip him besides. And Bill Jones meant just what he said, for he had a mortal hatred for the men of God, and it was reasonably supposed that Bill could and would do what he said. His trade at the anvil had made him strong, and everybody knew that he had as much brute courage as was necessary. So Uncle Tom was advised to take "roundantes," and never tackle the cross-roads. He accepted this for a time and left the people to the bad influences of Devil Bill; but it seemed to him that he was not doing the Lord's will, and whenever he thought of the women and children living in darkness and growing up in infidelity he would groan in spirit. One night he prayed over it with great earnestness, and vowed to do the Lord's will if the Lord would give him light, and it seemed to him as he arose from his knees that there was no longer any doubt—he must go. Uncle Tom never dallied about anything when his mind was made up; he went right at it like killing snakes. So next morning as a neighbor passed on his way to Bill's shop, Uncle Tom said: "My friend, will you please carry a message to Bro. Bill Jones for me? Do you tell him that if the Lord is willing, I will be at the cross-roads to preach next Sunday at 11 o'clock, and I am sure the Lord is willing. Tell him to please notate it in the settlement about, and ax the women and children to come. Tell Bill Jones I will stay at his house, God willing, and I am shore He is willing, and I will preach Sunday too, if things get along harmonious." When Bill Jones got his message he was amazed and astounded, and his indignation knew no bounds, and he raved and cursed at the "onsult," as he called it. The "onsulting" message of Old Sledge—and he swore that he would hunt him up and whip him, for he knew that he wouldn't dare come to the cross-roads. But the neighbors whispered it around that Old Sledge would come, for he was never known to make an appointment and break it; and there was an old horse thief who used to run with Murrel's gang and who said that he used to know Tom Baker when he was a sinner and had seen him in many a fight and said Tom was much of a man. So it spread like wildfire that Old Sledge was coming, and Devil Bill was going to whip him and make him dance and sing a hymn and treat to a gallon of peach brandy besides. Devil Bill had his enemies, of course, for he was a hard man and in one way and another he had gobbled up all the surplus of that neighborhood and had given nothing in exchange but whiskey, and these enemies had long hoped for somebody to come and set him down.

They, too, circulated the astonishing news, and without committing themselves to either party said that h—l would break loose on Saturday at the cross-roads, and that Old Sledge or the Devil would have to go under. On Friday the settlers began to drop into the cross-roads on pretense of business, but really to get the bottom facts of the rumors that were afloat. Devil Bill knew full well what they came for, and he talked and cursed more furious than usual and swore that anybody that come expecting Old Sledge tomorrow was an infernal fool, for he wasn't acomin'. He laid bare his strong arms and shook his long hair and said he hoped the lying, deceitful old hypocrite would come, for it had been nigh on to fourteen years since he had whipped a preacher and made him dance.

Old Sledge at the Cross-Roads.

Saturday morning by 9 o'clock the settlers began to gather. They came on foot, on horseback, buggies and carts—men, women and children. And before 11 o'clock there was more people at the cross-roads than had ever been there before. Bill Jones was mad at their credulity, but he had an eye to business and kept behind his counter and sold more whiskey in one hour than he had sold in a month. As the appointed hour drew near, the settlers began to look down the long, straight road that Old Sledge would come—if he came at all—and every man whose head came in sight just over the rise of the distant hill was closely scrutinized. More than once they said, "Yonder he comes, that's him shore." But it was not him. Some half a dozen had the old-time bull's eye silver watches and they compared time, and just at 10:45 the old horse thief exclaimed, "I see Tom Baker comin' over the risin' of the hill. I hain't seed him for eleven years, but, gentlemen, that are him air I am a liar." And it was him. As he got nearer and nearer a voice seemed to be coming with him, and some said he was talking with himself; others said he is talking to God Almighty, and others said, "I will be darned if he ain't apraying." But very soon it was decided he was singing a hymn. Bill Jones was soon advised of all this, and coming up to the front said, "Darned if he ain't singing afore I axed him; but I will make him sing another tune till he is tired. I will pay him fer his onsulting message; I am not agwine ter kill him, boys; I'll leave life in his rotten old carcas, but that's all. If any of you want to hear Old Sledge preach today you will have to go ten miles from the cross-roads to do it."

Slowly and slowly the preacher came. As he drew nearer he narrowed down his tune and looked kindly about him upon the crowd. He was a massive man in frame and had a heavy suit of dark-brown hair, but his face was clean-shaven and showed a nose and lip and chin of firmness and great determination.

"Look at him, boys, and mind your eye," whispered the horse thief.

"Where will I find my friend,Bill Jones?" inquired Old Sledge. All round they pointed him to the man. Riding up close, he said, "My friend and brother, the good Lord has sent me to you and I ask your hospitality for myself and my beast." And slowly dismounting, he faced his foe as though expecting kindly reply.

The crisis had come, and Bill Jones met it. "You infernal old hypocrite, you cussed old shaved-faced scoundrel, didn't you know that I had sworn an oath that I would make you sing and dance and whip you besides if you ever dared to pison these cross-roads with your shoe-tracks? Now, sing, d— you, sing; and dance as you sing." And he emphasized his command with a ringing slap with his open hand on the parson's face. Old Sledge recoiled with pain and surprise. Recovering in a moment, he said, "Well Bro. Jones, I did not expect so warm a welcome, but if this is your cross-roads manners I suppose I must sing. And as Devil Bill gave him another slap on the other jaw he began with "My soul be on thy guard."

And with his long arm, suddenly and swiftly gave Devil Bill an open-hander that nearly knocked him off of his feet while the parson continued to sing in a splendid tenor voice, "Ten thousand foes arise."

Never was a lion more aroused and more frenzied than was Devil Bill, and with his powerful arms he made at Old Sledge as if to annihilate him at one blow and many oaths. But the parson fended off his stroke as easily as a professional boxer. Then with his left hand dealt Bill another settler on his peepers as he continued to sing, "Oh, watch and fight, and pray, the battle ne'er give o'er."

But Jones was plucky to desperation, and as settlers were watching with bated breath, the crisis was at hand, and he squared himself and his clinched fist flew thick and fast on the parson's frame and for a while disturbed his song and his equilibrium, but he rallied quickly and began the offensive as he sang "Ne'er think the victory won nor lay thy armor down."

He backed his adversary squarely to the wall of his own shop and seized him by the throat and mauled him as he sang, "Fight on, my soul, till death."

But the long and the short of it was that Old Sledge gave him a good whipping and humbled him to the ground, then lifted him up and helped to restore him, and begged a thousand pardons.

Devil Bill Retires in Defeat.

When Devil Bill had retired to the house and was being cared for by his wife, Sledge mounted a box in front of the grocery and preached righteousness and temperance and judgment to come to that people. He closed his solemn discourse with a brief history of his own sinful life before his conversion and his humble work for the Lord ever since. Then he besought his hearers to stop and think. "Stop, poor sinner, stop and think," he cried in alarming tones. There were a few men and women in that crowd whose eyes long unused to the melting mood dropped tears of repentance at the preacher's kind and tender exhortation.

Bill Jones' wife, poor creature, had crept humbly into the outskirts of the crowd, for she had long treasured the memories of her childhood home when she, too, had gone with her good old father and mother to hear the circuit riders in days gone by. In secret, she had pined and lamented her husband's hatred for religion and the men of God. After she had washed the blood from his swollen face and dressed his wounds she asked him if she might go down and hear the preacher. For a minute he was silent and seemed to be dumb with amazement. He had never been whipped before and had suddenly lost confidence in himself and his infidelity. "Go along, Sallie," he said. "If he can talk like he can fight and sing, maybe the Lord did send him to the cross-roads. It is all mighty strange to me." And he groaned in anguish, his animosity seemed to have changed into anxious wondering curiosity. And after Sallie had gone he left his bed and drew near the window where he could hear.

Old Sledge led an earnest, soul-reaching prayer, and his pleading with the Lord for Bill Jones' salvation and that of his wife and children reached the window where Bill was sitting, and he heard it all. Bill's wife returned in tears and took a seat beside him and sobbed out her heart's distress, but said nothing. Bill bore it for a while in thoughtful silence, and then putting his bruised and trembling hand in hers said: "Sallie, if the Lord sent Old Sledge here, and maybe He did, I reckon you had better look after his horse." And sure enough Old Sledge stayed there that night and held family prayer, and the next day he preached from the piazza to a great multitude and sang his favorite hymn, "Am I a soldier of the cross?" And when he got to the third verse, his untutored but musical voice seemed to be lifted a little higher as he sang, "Sure I must fight if I would reign; increase my courage, Lord."

Devil Bill was converted that day and became a changed man. He joined the Church and closed his groggery, and helped to build a meeting-house, as they were called in those days. And it was always said and believed that Old Sledge mauled the grace of God into his unbelieving soul, or it never would have got in any other way.—Contributed.

Were you ever tempted as to giving to the needy? Did you ever have a case in which the appeal was for such help, when the devil would try to keep you from giving? When you thought of giving only a dollar, did the devil ever whisper to you that fifty cents would be a plenty? That is his method of work, and often he accomplishes his end. The National Republican tells a good story on this point, and we invite all liberal men to read it, and if there should come among the liberal men one of the stingy kind, well let him also read it, as it might possibly get him to see the point more clearly. Read:

"If you find yourself getting close-fisted," remarked a Pennsylvania congressman, "it is time to emulate the example of a wealthy old farmer in my State. He was noted for years as an old miser, but was converted during protracted meeting. Shortly afterwards, a poor man who had been burned out and had nothing for his family to eat, came to him for help. The farmer thought he would be liberal and give the man a ham from his smokehouse. On his way to get it, the tempter whispered to him:

" 'Give him the smallest one you have.'

"He had a struggle with himself as to whether he should give him a large or a small ham, but finally he took down the largest one he could find.

" 'You are a fool,' the tempter whispered to him.

" 'If you don't keep your mouth shut,' the farmer snarled at him, 'I will give him every ham I have in the smokehouse.' "

THE ONE ROUTE TO HAPPINESS.

All the wild ideas of unbalanced agitators the world over in their ignorant and pitiable quest for happiness through revolution, confiscation of property, and crime, cannot overthrow the eternal truth that the one route to happiness through property or government is over the broad and open highway of service. And service always means industry, thrift, respect for authority, and recognition of the rights of others.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

WILL YOU SHARE YOUR CHRISTMAS?

Christmas is the one holiday whose happiness depends on how much cheer and happiness we carry to others. We get happiness at Christmas by giving it. We multiply our happiness by sharing it with others. If this whole Christian Church of ours wishes to increase its happiness this Christmas season, it can do so by carrying cheer and comfort to our Christian hosts in Japan, where property has been destroyed, Churches ruined, homes razed to the ground and hundreds of thousands killed by the recent earthquake. It will require $50,000 for relief and reconstruction in our Christian Churches in Japan. How much will your Church give? How much will you give, reader, to carry Christian cheer and greetings to stricken Japan, to help carry Him there, who gave us Christmas? In this way we may increase greatly our own cheer and happiness at this Christmas period. J. O. ATKINSON.

A CALL TO EVERY CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

During the annual session of the Christian Missionary Association at Norfolk, Va., December 4th, Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, moved that the executive committee of the Southern Convention be memorialized to authorize a free-will Christmas offering in all our Churches, at the service nearest Christmas Day, for the relief and reconstruction work made necessary in our Japan mission field by the recent destructive earthquake in Japan. Under date of December 10, 1923, the secretary of the committee writes: "The executive committee of the S. C. C. approves the call for a Christmas offering on the part of our Churches for the Japan emergency work." (Signed: I. W. Johnson, Secy., Suffolk, Va.)

In the memorial to the executive committee, the mission secretary was instructed to furnish envelopes to the Churches requesting same, and also supply information and data necessary for the offering. According to estimates made on the field in the damaged or destroyed districts and by the General Mission Board, it will require $50,000 to relieve our suffering Christians and reconstruct the work we had already completed and had in the building.

No worthier or more fitting appeal has gone to our Churches, and every Church and individual should give as liberally as posible toward reaching this $50,000 goal.

Will any pastor or Church secretary needing them write the undersigned for envelopes for the offering? J. O. ATKINSON, Elon College, N. C. Mission Secretary.

EVERY-MEMBER CANVASS.

Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, secretary, as per vote of the Conference at Bethlehem, has sent the budget resolution to every Church secretary in the Conference, and with it the resolutions passed by Conference to the effect that every Church in the Conference make an every-member canvass at the beginning of the year, for the Conference funds, and not wait, as many Churches often do, to raise their Conference apportionments at the last of the year. If the individual members in the Churches will try to think of the budget as a goal to be reached, and not a tax, there will be joy in giving and spirituality in the service.

In addition to the letter by Bro. Harrell, the mission secretary, has sent to every pastor in the Conference, the total Conference budget, which is the goal for the entire Conference, and the amount each Church is asked to set as the minimum goal in its every-member canvass. Also, each Church secretary has been given the amount his Church is to set as a goal.

It was brought out in the Conference that our giving for Conference apportionments at the close of the year had come to be quite mechanical, and was often done by the few, without having given the entire membership a part. It was also brought out that if the people knew, at the beginning of the year, what they were to undertake, their giving would be more systematic and a part of their worship. The mission secretary believes that if pastors and Church secretaries will co-operate and call to the attention of their Churches the action of the Conference, great good will result and the old slip-shod method of raising Conference apportionments will be abandoned for a far better and more joyful system of Church activity.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

CHRISTMAS MISSIONARY OFFERINGS.

The Eastern Virginia Conference, in session at Holland; the Eastern North Carolina Conference, in session at New Hope; the Western North Carolina Conference, in session at Ether; the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, in session at Bethlehem, each adopted, under their foreign mission report, a recommendation that all Churches of the Conference take a Christmas offering for missions, same to go to our relief and reconstruction work in Japan. This offering is indeed most appropriate and most timely. The recent earthquake in Japan brought untold suffering to our Christian forces there and entailed great loss to our mission homes and Churches. It will require $50,000 for this relief and reconstruction work, to be applied as follows:

To repair Kasuni Cho Mission Home	$ 2,000
To rebuild the destroyed Azaha Church	30,000
To repair two other damaged Churches	2,000
Restart work on new mission home	4,000
To continue necessary relief	6,000
Our share in co-operative work	6,000
Total	$50,000

The above amount is the estimate given by our missionaries on the field and our mission board of the General Convention. Will our Christian Churches respond to this most needy and worthy cause?

Nothing could be more fitting at Christmas time than a free-will offering to foreign missions. This for the reason that Christ gave us Christmas, and only those who know of Him know anything of this glorious festive season. An offering for missions at Christmas is but trying to give Christmas to others who have no Christmas, and who have it not, because they know not our Christ. Let all our Churches this Christmas take a free-will offering, making it just as large, liberal and glad as possible, for our relief and reconstruction work in Japan. Forward same to the writer and he will see that it goes to the right place without cost and without delay.

CARDINAL PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

HOLLAND.

Three members were received into the Holland Church Sunday, the 2nd.

On Monday afternoon, December 3rd, a fine group of men of the Church left their places of business and gave the afternoon to the task of waiting on the membership of the Church in behalf of the Church debt. They assembled in the Church that evening at 7:30, and it was soon discovered in the neighborhood of $6,000 had been collected. By the end of the week we are sure this will have been increased to $6,500.

We were very much gratified by the offering of the Sunday School for the orphanage. More will probably be received, but we were able to send Uncle Charlie a check for $165 on Monday. This is an increase over last year.

REPORTER.

WILL YOU SHARE YOUR CHRISTMAS WITH SUFFERING JAPAN?

Many of our churches and individuals responded promptly and generously to the emergency appeal for relief. If you were among those so giving, you may rejoice in the fact that your action made it possible to get relief funds to Japan among the first, and enabled our heroic missionaries, who are working far beyond their strength, to do their full share in this ministry to suffering thousands in the name of Christ.

Scene of Destruction in Our Mission Field. Wrought by Recent Japanese Earthquake.

The following from one of Brother Garman's letters will give you some idea of the splendid way in which your gift for relief is being used:

"It must have been awful to be in the city with a family when the calamity occurred. Houses fell on thousands, and other thousands were overcome by fire. 33,000 fled with their clothing and such possessions to an open field, which was then surrounded by the changing fires, and then their goods took fire and all were burned to death. Many people fled into the ponds, but the flames heated the water which it surrounded so that they were actually scalded to death.

"You doubtless have the figures: Tokyo has cared for about 80,000 corpses and there are still some 40,000 missing. Barracks have been built for thousands, tents house other thousands, while other thousands are crowded into the houses of relatives—already overcrowded. At first it was a food problem, next a clothing problem, and then a housing problem, with problems of transportation, sanitation, medical care, etc., thrown in. Now it is the winter problem. Then there is the problem of the care of children to relieve the parents for work, and we are working at that along with some other things.

"At Sendai, our church accepted the responsibility for collecting the food for the refugees which passed through the city, and at Utsunomiya our Christians did likewise. Thousands were cared for as they came and went. At Ichinoseki our church assisted in collecting clothing for the many refugees that passed through that far northern town.

"We have established a Relief Committee consisting of two pastors and two missionaries—Miss Stacy and myself. A number of our Azabu church members were burned out, others had their houses shaken down and others so badly damaged that they must get out. We have decided to make small grants to the pastors who had to open their homes to church members and others and divide food and clothes with them, and to those of our members who were burned out or whose houses fell. Then we are undertaking to pay for six months, forty per cent of the amounts the afflicted churches have been paying on their pastors' salaries, granting an aid to the Azabu church for expenses of its members who distribute canned milk every third day to children and aged refugees, and then undertake to conduct the nurseries in the districts about our churches. The government has turned over to us some tents, cots, etc., to use in the work. Also, a day nursery is being established among the laborers at Oji. Barracks are being set up by the government and we are to furnish the workers and run it. At Meguro there is another opportunity for caring for the small children. It is the general policy to help folks help themselves, rather than give too much direct. Excepting in the case of the affected workers and our own members who had their homes burned or razed, we are giving nothing direct, and what we gave there was quite small.

"Every foreigner who was present remarks on the patience and fortitude with which everything was borne. One has yet to hear of any complaints, even from those who suffered most."

We Now Face the Task of Reconstruction.

At the meeting of the General Board of the Christian Church in October, that body endorsed the following resolution from the Foreign Mission Department: "That the Foreign Mission Secretary be asked to speedily get as accurate an estimate as possible of the loss from the earthquake to our mission in Japan, and the cost of reconstruction; and then make an appeal to our whole people to give this full amount, and to do so by Christmas; and that this should in no case diminish their regular giving for the maintenance of our regular foreign work. The Mission Council was charged with the duty of properly appropriating this special fund."

Do We Need Make Any Further Appeal?

We believe our people will see the need and respond. Many who have so generously responded to the immediate relief fund will gladly share their Christmas for the sake of rebuilding our work in Japan. Some Sunday Schools are voting to give up their accustomed treat and send the money thus saved for Japan Relief; others are making this the object of their White Gifts for Christmas. We trust that many individuals will accept this opportunity to make direct gifts to so worthy a cause. We lay this before you, and pray that the Lord may lead you and your church to accept this opportunity to "Do unto these, Christ's brethren, as you would gladly do unto Him."

Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

A CALL TO WORSHIP.

"Take the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God" (Eph. 6:17); and this was "mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds" (2 Cor. 10:4); "for the word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart" (Heb. 4:12).

If the reader of these lines knows that he is willing at least to believe in Christ as his Saviour, let him hear the voice of God sounding from heaven, and recorded by the Holy Ghost in the sacred Scriptures, "I have blotted out as a thick cloud thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins"; and let him sign his name to it as true. Then let him take the same word, or another verse, and hand it to some troubled one, or to some one who ought to be troubled, remembering that of all who are saved it is written, "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever." (1 Pet. 1:23.)—Selected.

TUESDAY—CHRISTMAS DAY.

THE HISTORY OF CHRISTMAS CUSTOMS.

About everything, we can say: "Once upon a time." That is, there was a beginning. There was a beginning to all our Christmas customs.

It is said that Diocletion, in the years 180-192 after Christ, held the first Christmas celebration. It is not known just what it was. The first Christmas tree was used by St. Winifred, a missionary to Scandinavia, in the eighth century. The Scandinavians were Druids and worshipped trees, and on this celebration it was their custom to go into the forest and hold their feast around a sturdy oak. The good St. Winifred, the missionary there, to show the Druid priests and their worshipers that they were wrong, went out to their festivity, cut down the oak and set up the fir tree in its place, and then declared: "Here is the living tree. It points to the sky where God is. Call it the tree of the Christ-Child. Go no more into the forest for your feasts with secret rites of shame, but keep it in your homes with laughter and song and love. The oak has fallen. The green fir tree has taken its place, and remains for the birthright of Christ," and ever since this we have used the Christmas tree.

The first Santa Claus was St. Nicholas, Bishop of Myra, in the year 300 after our Lord. The legend says that he climbed to the top of a chimney and dropped a coin down, expecting it to fall on the hearth, where the needy one would find it; but by accident it fell in a stocking. Ever after this, it was his custom to secretly drop coins and gifts in hanging stockings. Ever since, the fathers and mothers have perpetuated his good work by carrying on his silent gifts of love to little children.

As the idea of the tree developed, its decorations came into vogue. Apples, balls, oranges and anything round were used to represent the sun. Candles were used to represent the light of the sun, and today we have added the tinsel and other shining material to shine with gorgeous brilliancy to represent the shining splendor of the sun. Candy and toys and other gifts are used to represent the sacrifice. And so our tree represents to us the Christ. The lighted tree represents Christ as the light of the world. The stars and the bright tinsel represent the shining light that guided the wise men. Crosses represent the sacrifice. The hearts represent love. The bells represent the good news. The anchor is our hope, and the mince pie is the rich gift.

I am told that the first Christmas carol ever sung was written by Warde in the year 1521. The first Christmas card was written by a gentleman in London about seventy years ago, which bore the message, "Merry Christmas."

WEDNESDAY.

CHRIST AND CHRISTMAS AND SERVICE.

"If the Son, therefore, shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

At the Christmas season, our thoughts turn anew to the love and purpose of God to which Christ's coming bears perpetual testimony. He came to make man free. His coming sounded the doom of all tyrannies that oppress and enslave. He announced this in His ministry as God's purpose. Christ's gift of freedom is not a boon to be selfishly enjoyed. It is not a merely negative freedom. It is a release from bondage, from enslavement, from oppression, and it is freedom for obedience, for duty, for service. Above all other men, the Christian, like his Master, is free to serve.

"God send us store on Christmas Day,
Of friends and health and mirth;
And bless us with that dream alway
That blessed the world on Christmas Day:
'Good will and peace on earth.' "

—Rev. W. S. Stranahan.

"Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin."

Prayer.—O Thou who art holy and loving, we leave with Thee all our impossible tasks and questions, satisfied if we shall some time know the splendor of the life that is to be.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE GIFT OF PEACE.

"My peace I give unto you."—John 14:27.

But a soul may possess the peace of Christ, and yet know no end of trouble. Indeed, round about these words of our Lord there are other words which look like unfriendly presences, frowning in apparent contradiction. "The world hateth you"; "They shall put you out of the synagogue"; "Ye shall weep and lament!" These are very strange ingredients in a life which is supposed to be possessed by peace. The peace of Jesus is evidently not synonymous with the quietness of settled circumstance.

It is not the peace of plenty. It is something which is independent of these. It can co-exist with turbulence. It can go hand in hand with want. The circumference of life may be the realm of storm, while its center is the home of a profound serenity. The peace of Jesus is the harmony of a central and spiritual relation. It is union and communion with God.

And if we receive the Saviour's gift of peace, our life will have two distinctions. First, we shall see things tranquilly, see things as they are; they will not be out of proportion, nor shall we be deceived by any borrowed plumes. "The eyes of them that see shall not be dim." And, for a second thing, if we have the peace of Jesus, we shall do things tranquilly. This central peace will affect our activities on the circumference. There will be no fuss, no feverishness, no panic. No energy will lead away in fretfulness and wasteful care. For God's peace, that surpasses all our dreams, shall keep guard over our hearts and minds in Christ Jesus.—Rev. J. H. Jowett.

FRIDAY.

THE BURDEN-BEARERS.

"Every man shall bear his own burden."—Gal. 6:4-7.

This is the unchangeable law of God and nature that every man must carry his own burden. Every soldier must carry his own kit. Every man is alone in the great things of life; he is independent; he lives alone, no matter how near he dwells in a house by the side of the road. Pain, temptation, grief and duty—these every one must bear for himself. Jesus in Gethsemane went farther—to the place where no man could go with Him.

Parents, teachers, ministers, masters and statesmen, all must bear their burdens, and bear most of them alone.

The burden calls out sweetness and devotion. What is a home without its tasks, a Church without its problems? The success of a business is its load. The things we complain of often make us strong. The oyster with its tiny burden of grit, doomed to carry it day by day, has learned to carry it, and at the same time transform it into a pearl. The pearls of character are born from the burdens we bear.—Rev. A. E. Gregory.

Prayer.—Throughout another day, mighty Protector, surround us with Thy guardian love, and shield us from all real harm. May the spiritual life surmount the weakness of the flesh. In Jesus' name. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE RENEWAL OF OUR VOWS.

"I will pay my vows unto the Lord."—Psalm 116:12-14.

This psalm is a song of thanksgiving for deliverance from death. After passing through such experience, if ever, a man thinks seriously. Afterward he may for get quickly and easily. The vows we make in crises ought to be fully carried out. Their payment results in certain "benefits." Religion is always a "benefit." It is a noble resolve to say "I will pay." The man who does not pay is "no good" in the business world—and otherwhere! If you cannot depend upon a man's promise, he is soon eliminated from business and the opportunities of life.

How much have you promised God for his "benefits" to you? What duty does the recollection of your vows bring to your soul? How will you "pay" that which you have vowed? Home, citizenship, business, Church membership, the Christian life—these are all shot through with reasonable and vital vows. To omit or ignore them is fatal.—Ernest Bourner Allen.

Prayer.—Gracious and forgiving Father, we bless Thee because Thy renewing grace has made possible the overcoming of all evil. Grant us the victorious peace of those who are neither afraid nor ashamed.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE SABBATH AND MAN.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

What do we think of the way our Sabbaths are observed? Is it for the good of ourselves and man, or not? Much of it is not good at all. It lacks calm, deep content, which we all so much need. It lacks the art of doing that which is refining. It is used so mistakenly, vulgarly and clumsily. It is spoiled by the curse of excessive pleasure, much travel, high and elaborate festivities, strong drink, etc.; and these do not contribute to the betterment of mankind. There is no refining influence here. "Study to show thyself" today a man "approved of God."

Prayer.—Dear Father, forbid that we should turn our feet from the Sabbath, and from doing Thy pleasure on Thy holy day. Help us to make it a day of honor to Thee and a delight to our souls and all others. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

FROM THE ORPHANAGE.

DEAR FRIENDS:

Our Thanksgiving offering to date amounts to $3,605.45. To reach the goal of six thousand dollars, we must raise yet the sum of $2,394.56. Will we do it? Our Church ought to have made the offering ten thousand dollars this year. I notice that one denomination in North Carolina sent to its orphanage last week the sum of $37,800 on its Thanksgiving offering. That orphanage will receive more than $75,000 for its Thanksgiving offering this year. Why can't our people catch the vision? I know one little Church in a mill village of same denomination that raised more than a thousand dollars and were very happy over the accomplishment. That same Church raised $800 last year and enjoyed it so much that it increased its offering this year.

This is the first year since I have had charge of the work that our expense account has been more than the income. Of course, we have spent several thousand dollars on improvements and have taken in more children, but if our denomination grows in this branch of its work, our Churches must take more interest and make their contributions larger.

The time has been when we could run this institution on a small amount per year. We only had a small number of children and prices of things we had to buy were low; but times have changed, and we now have one hundred and five children and prices are high. But we have Churches that sent us one dollar per month ten years ago that still send the same amount, still our expenses have been multiplied by three.

We have new applications each week. What is our denomination going to do about it? Shall we give more and grow and glow, or shall we rest on our oars and turn a deaf ear to the cry of the fatherless?

The following has been sent in since our last report: Ladies' Aid Society, Mayland Church, Valley of Virginia, 6 gingham dresses, 3 second dresses, 2 sheets, 2 pr. gloves; Ladies' Aid Society, Wakefield, Va., Mrs. B. B. Hines, president, 1 quilt; Ladies' Aid Society, Franklin, Va., 7 doz. and 2 pr. hose; Ladies' Aid Society, Mt. THE APPEAL IS WORTHY.

The year now closing has been an unusual one in the work of the various denominations. Of course, each denomination has had its own trials, its own burdens, its own disappointments and its own failures and successes. But, as capping the climax for them all, September 1, 1923, there came to Japan a great disaster and earthquake, such as was hardly ever seen or felt in the world. It wrought destruction as with a heavy hand, taking the lives of possibly one-half a million of people or more, and destroying property and business running up into the many millions of dollars. Of course, in this widespread destruction we could but expect that much of our Church property in that section of the world was destroyed; and that is a fact.

We are grateful that we lost none of our missionaries, but this fact adds to the need of this appeal. With the houses of worship in many cases seriously damaged, so that we cannot use them, the call is staring us in the face to send aid to the living missionaries to help in the work of reconstruction—the repairing of the damaged building and the rebuilding of those that were utterly destroyed. In this issue, Dr. J. O. Atkinson is pleading earnestly for help. It is said by our general foreign mission secretary, to whom the most reliable information has been sent, that we need at once $50,000 to meet the demands of the Japan field. These demands have been made necessary by the damages wrought by the earthquake. This need is urgent, very urgent, for these missionaries must be cared for and the preaching-place and houses of worship must be made usable if our work is to be cared for in some adequate way.

Several of our Conferences have already arranged to have special Christmas gifts made to our Japan mission in money, that the work of reconstruction may begin early and go on to completion. We wish you to read what Dr. J. O. Atkinson has to say in this issue, and then get ready to make your Christmas offering. Our people in the South may send these Christmas offerings direct to Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C. The plea is urgent, the cause is worthy and our people are perhaps as able now as they have ever been, and may be more so, and we plead with all to help in this time of affliction—a time when every noble instinct of the Christian's heart is moved to help. Be sure to read Dr. Atkinson's appeal, and then do your best to send help to the noble, heroic men and women who are doing their best for the cause under most trying circumstances. Help, and help now if possible!

Three hundred are snowbound in the Rockies and appeal for aid. If aid can get to them, why can't they get to it?

The Missionary Message of the Bible.

"He is likest to Christ who, like Him, holds all the world in his heart."

After spending three months of Sundays studying the missionary message of the Bible, how do you define missions? This broad view of God's Word, in its missionary teaching, revealed through experience and teaching and lives should make every Christian think carefully of his definition of missions. It sweeps away the selfish view of the man who looks upon missions, as a "begging affair." It enlightens the ignorant whose sole interest is "me and my wife." It changes missions, from a vague, impersonal, far-away program to a very vital part of the Christian's life. Careful study of both the Old and New Testament reveals the missionary message in every book, running like a silver thread from Genesis to Revelation, showing God's wish and plan for the lives of His children, that all people may be truly His. May we not think of missions as "world fellowship," or "world friendship," which makes every person, regardless of color, race or condition, our Heavenly Father's Child, and so our brother and our friend? Or may we define missions, as a "world blessing" as we go over the eleven missionary lessons of this quarter, which give us the channels through which this "world blessing" may flow to the ends of the earth.

Through Faithful Individuals. (Lesson 1.)

God ever uses folks to carry His message. He might have chosen angels. He might have designated as His heralds only kings or potentates. But the All-Wise chose to use His children, and to bless those who were faithful by making them a blessing to the world. Abraham "The Friend of God," "The Faithful Father" of his race, was a pioneer in the great missionary program. God is calling today for faithful individuals, through whom He may bless the world. Do you hear His call?

Through Obedient Nations. (Lessons 2 & 3.)

Israel, the "chosen people," was given a favored home, was taught by wise teachers and warned by far-seeing prophets of her special mission. Disobedience caused her disasters, and lack of trustful confidence her downfall. The same God has a watchful eye on nations today. The same demands for obedience and loyalty are made. America, favored in a multitude of ways, has an opportunity to bless or curse the world. Which shall it be? Obedience to God's laws alone can bring her to the place where the Father wants her—to be a great nation, because a serving nation. What will America's answer be?

Through Men of Vision. (Lessons 4 & 6.)

The psalmist and the prophets were missionary in spirit and message. In the springtime, they were able to see the harvest. "Whre there is no vision, the people perish." The selfish man sees only himself. He needs a vision of others. The selfish Church of selfish members cannot grow, because it is self-centered. Lack of vision places the individual and the Church in a rut, which grows deeper with the years. A vision, first of Jesus Christ, His love and His life, is the need of the Christian. This will bring a vision of a world in need, not as a big, broad, indefinite world, but as a group of men and women and little children who eat and sleep and work like all, but without the love of Jesus Christ which brings joy and comfort and peace. Prayerfully considering, what is your vision of God's world today?

Through the Lord Christ. (Lesson 7.)

The greatest of missionaries, as the greatest of men, the Lord Jesus Christ came to this world as a missionary. He came because there was a need. Coming as a baby, He placed a supreme value upon childhood. As a youth, He appeals to strong boys and girls. As a man, no service was too humble for Him to perform, if through that act, He might reveal the Father. This "world blessing," which the missionary program seeks to bestow, has the Lord Christ for its theme, and to tell the story of His life as its means of expression. Is it possible to be Christian without being missionary?

Through World Service. (Lessons 8 & 11.)

"Go *  tell," was the Christian's commission. The New Testament is largely a record of the obedience of men to this command. The early disciples are our example. If we can seek to put into our own lives their devotion, their consecration, their untiring zeal, the world will receive the blessing of the Gospel.

"To shine where He shall say,
And lamps are not for sunny rooms,
Nor for the light of day,
But for the dark places of the earth
Where shame and wrong and crime have birth.
Or, for the murky twilight gray
Where wandering steps have gone astray,
And souls are groping after Him.
And as sometimes a flame is found,
Clear shining through the night,
So bright we do not see the lamp,
But only see the light,
So may I shine, His light the flame,
That men may glorify His name."

Through a Loyal Church. (Lessons 10 & 11.)

All cannot be missionaries, but all can be missionary. Some must go out to active service in the distant field. Others must stay and "hold the ropes" for them that they may stay. Both are essential in the plan. The loyal missionary Church is the praying, giving, going Church. A Junior Department has on its wall a card with these words: "We are praying for these missionaries * * *." Are your boys and girls praying for your missionaries? Are they so interested in missions that they want to give? Is your Sunday School ever holding before them the heroism demanded to fill a place on the missionary field? Then you are preparing for a loyal missionary Church for God. Is your Church loyal now?

Through the Universal Reign of the Christ. (Lesson 12.)

That all may know and receive the blessing is the ultimate goal, for—

"We've a story to tell to the nations
That shall turn their hearts to the right,
A story of truth and mercy,
A story of peace and light."

Topic: "Wishes for the New Year."—Phil. 3:12-16.

Thoughts for the Meeting.

Paul's letter to the Philippians was written while Paul was in prison in Rome, near the end of a wonderful life of service. One of the greatest Christian characters of all ages, he stands out as one who suffered shipwreck, imprisonment, beating, and was now facing death. Here in prison he had time to think of his life. He was not satisfied, for he saw much more work that should be done. He realized that he was not perfect, and in his humility lay much of his strength. But he was still "pressing on." The wise person stops now and then to "take inventory" of himself, to see what he is accomplishing, to measure his life by the highest standards. New Year is a favorite time for such "taking stock" with business concerns, and Christians may well follow their example. This New Year's meeting furnishes a good opportunity. The best preparation for the meeting is a thorough self-examination, with a decision to make 1924 a better year of love and faith and service. Would it not be helpful to your life to memorize these five verses, or at least verses 13 and 14 as a motto for the new year? How would it affect your life if you should repeat to yourself these verses each morning? It is worth trying.

The past should be a help to the future. Only so is it valuable. It is a "stepping-stone to higher things." Verse 12.

Christ Jesus has a plan for your life, as for Paul's. See Ephesians 2:10. Are you striving to find His plan, or struggling along with your own? Verse 12.

"Forgetting" is often the hard part for the man or woman, but it is more often the needful part. Grudges deaden the Christian experience. Verse 13.

"Stretching forward" was Paul's way. Is it yours? Do you look upon the new year as an opportunity? Then it will greet you with a cheer, and the opportunities will be there. "Every day is a fresh beginning, every morn is the world made new." Surely every year is a new chance. Make the most of it! Verse 13.

What is the goal of your life? Are you drifting or pressing? You cannot drift uphill. Let's climb! Verse 14.

"Let go the past." Fine, but not enough. "Take hold of the future" for that is what your taking stock has been for.

"I would be true, for there are those who trust me;
I would be pure, for there are those who care;
I would be strong, for there is much to suffer;
I would be brave, for there is much to dare."
—Howard A. Walter.

Plans for the Meeting.

The Young People's Service suggests the following wording for an attractive poster: "The Right Way to Begin to Walk in the Right Way is to Begin Right Away. Attend the New Year's Meeting, December 30th." A New Year's cover to a magazine will furnish the picture to go with the words. Personal invitations may also be handed out with the same words.

Plan your meeting well. It is a meeting when much may be accomplished, for your members are thinking of the new year with you. "Stories for Special Days," by Margaret Eggleston, gives an impressive New Year story that may be told, as well as stories for all special days in the Church School year.

Let each member bring written-out wishes for the society for the coming year, which may be read, without names. The writer may include a service which he will volunteer to render to the Church.

Poem for the meeting (to be recited):

My Task.

To love some one more dearly every day,
To help a wandering child to find his way,
To ponder o'er a noble thought and pray—
And smile when evening falls.

To follow truth as blind men long for light,
To do my best from dawn of day till night,
To keep my heart fit for His holy sight
And answer when He calls.

Suggested Hymns.—"Jesus Calls Us," "Trust and Obey," "One More Day's (Year's) Work for Jesus," "Sweeter as the Years Roll By," "One Sweetly Solemn Thought."

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

DECEMBER 30, 1923.

TOPIC: "New Purposes for the New Year."—Ps. 90:12.

"So teach us to number our days,
That we may get us a heart of wisdom."

This was the prayer of Moses, the "Man of God," many and many years ago. He had lived long enough to see the importance of "numbering" his days; that is, of using them in a way that would bring him wisdom. We are told in the Bible that Jesus "grew in wisdom and in stature, and in favor with God and man." New Year's time is a chance for us to stop and think whether we are growing as Jesus did. Most Juniors can see that they are bigger than when 1923 first came. But do you know more? Surely you do. Then let's think whether we are growing to be friends with folks and growing to please God, as Jesus did. The Sunday School motto for Juniors is "Be ye doers of the Word, and not hearers only." If we remember this motto in 1924, I am sure that when our next New Year's meeting comes, all will be growing in the Jesus fourfold way.

"Happy New Year to you,
Happy New Year to you;
Happy New Year, dear Juniors,
Happy New Year to you."

A FINE CHRISTMAS POEM.

BY WM. THORNTON WHITSETT.

As the happy Christmas time draws near, we wish to call attention to one of the best American poems yet written to commemorate this sacred festival. The author is one of the best-known New England novelists, Miss Alice Brown, of Boston, born in 1857, and still busy with her pen. While her chief work has been in the field of fiction, she has taken time to write some genuine poetry. In 1915 she was the winner of the Winthrop Ames ten thousand dollar prize for a play.

Hora Christi.

Sweet is the time for joyous folk
Of gifts and minstrelsy,
Yet I, O lowly hearted One,
Crave but Thy company.
On lonesome road, beset with dread,
My questing lies afar;
I have no light, save in the East
The gleaming of Thy star.

In cloistered aisles they keep today
Thy feast, O living Lord!
With pomp of banner, pride of song,
And stately sounding word.
Mute stand the kings of power and place,
While priests of holy mind
Dispense Thy blessed heritage
Of peace to all mankind.

I know a spot where budless twigs
Are bare above the snow,
And where sweet winter-loving birds
Flit softly to and fro.
There with the sun for altar-fire,
The earth for kneeling-place,
The gentle air for chorister,
Will I adore Thy face.

Loud, underneath the great blue sky,
My heart shall paean sing;
The gold and myrrh of meekest love
Mine only offering.
Bliss of Thy birth shall quicken me;
And for Thy pain and dole,
Tears are but vain, so I will keep
The silence of the soul.

—Alice Brown.

CHRIST AND HIS FRIENDS.

Come, friends of the great Redeemer!
Let us gather around the throne
And sing there, in notes of triumph,
The favors He shows to His own.
Not servants alone doth He call them,
But "friends" is the name that He gave
To those who, all friendless and helpless,
He came down from heaven to save.

Chorus.

And never alone is the Christian
Who lives by faith and prayer,
For Christ is a Friend unfailing
And is with him everywhere.

Long ago was the great word spoken
Of one who wearily trod
The path of a toil-worn pilgrim
That he was the friend of God.
To and fro through the earth did he wander,
Yet ever men heard him say:
"I have only to follow, follow,
For my Friend is leading the way."

In the busy hum of the market,
In the farmer's bitter strife,
Let this word be forever with thee,
Let this thought ever guard thy life.
I must take no thought for the morrow,
But just live on day by day,
For, though joy cometh in sorrow,
'Tis my Friend that is leading the way.

Far down in his gloomy dungeon,
Christ's servant seems all alone—
No eye there to see him suffer,
No ear there to hear him groan;
But there is ever the presence with him
Of One who doth never forsake:
A Light that illumines his darkness,
And his prison a palace doth make.

Away in the distant forest
The hardy pioneer
Sits alone in his little cabin,
But yet he has no fear.
The tempest may rage around him,
The beasts of the forest roar,
But he ever doth dwell securely,
For his Friend is at the door.

The brave engineer stands steady,
With hand on lever and brake;
Death rushes straight on to meet him,
But his post he will not forsake.
He has talked with the Great Dispatcher,
And now he has no fear,
For he knows that the road to heaven
Stands ever for him: "Line clear!"

Through darkness and tempest speeding,
The good physician goes,
Thinking only of those who need him,
Yearning only to lighten their woes.
'Tis to such as he that the Master,
At the last great day will say:
"Thou did visit Me in sickness,
Come and dwell with Me alway."

See yonder the Christian statesman
Standing firmly for the right,
And faithfully living ever
As in his Master's sight.
Neither bribes nor flattery move him
To swerve from duty's path;
Nor threats—for he feareth only
His Almighty Maker's wrath.

"CRUSADING IN THE WEST INDIES."

"Crusading in the West Indies," by W. F. Jordan. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.75.

Missions says: "We heartily recommend the book for its faithful and accurate descriptions, its missionary spirit, and its generous appreciation of the good qualities of our West Indian neighbors."

Moody Bible Institute Monthly says: "Unites the faculty of keen observation with the ability to express it in a clear and happy style. This book is heartily commended for its abundant and interesting information about the islands, and for its earnest setting forth of the spiritual needs of the islanders and the blessed results of Bible distribution among them."

Christian Endeavor World says: "A record of apostolic journeys. It opens new doors for us. It reveals nature's beauty on the one hand, and on the other man's degradation, superstition, and fears."

Watchman Examiner says: "A competent and trustworthy witness. His observations on the life and character of the peoples of these islands are valuable from every point of view."

Herald and Presbyter says: "A valuable book, with a Christian purpose, telling of the experiences and work of a Christian man seeking the spiritual welfare of the people."

Presbyterian Magazine says: "If any one wants to take a cruise around the West Indies Islands, a good preparation for it would be a reading of 'Crusading in the West Indies,' and if one cannot go in person he can still go in imagination by means of this book."

Christian Endeavor World says: "Mr. Jordan is a keen student of human nature, and he has an eye for the doings of the common people. He opens new doors for us. He reveals nature's beauty on one hand, and on the other man's degradation, superstitions and fears."

Bro. Jordan is a member of the New Jersey Christian Conference. The book may be ordered of the Fleming H. Revell Company, 158 Fifth Avenue, New York City, or it may be ordered from the author, Rev. W. F. Jordan, Bible House, Cristobal, Canal Zone. Letter postage, 2 cents. We are reading this book with great pleasure and profit.

DARDEN.

Mrs. Camilla Watkins Darden was a daughter of the late Wiley Watkins, of Isle of Wight County, Va., and was born on June 5, 1833, and departed this life November 7, 1923, being ninety years of age. Mrs. Darden spent the greater part of her life in Windsor, Va., where she married the late Stephen G. Darden, with whom she lived happily for many years. He preceded her to the spirit world by many years.

Mrs. Darden was a member of the Windsor Christian Church to the time of her death. In the days of her youth she was connected with the old Antioch Christian Church, along with her people. Her husband was a Methodist, and remained so till the day of his death.

Through a long life she was known for her kindness of heart and her exceeding modesty. She felt a keen interest in all that was good about her and often put her hands to the good work of helping others. After the death of her husband she was much alone, especially in her latter days. She was thus deprived of the benefits of public worship, and yet she cared for the cause of her Lord and Master. Very few people live to be ninety years of age, as she did. Old age and the infirmities of the flesh, together with her loneliness in these later years, all contributed to burden her life, and yet she waited in patience the day of her departure. This writer had the pleasure of serving as her pastor in the early days of his ministry, and found her always gentle and kind. God bless her memory, and may the good she did in the days of her strength fruit to the glory of God in Christ. Peace to her ashes and rest to her soul, in the blessed hope of a better resurrection and life eternal.

Toronto, Ont., Canada.
My Dear Mr. LePage:

I take this occasion to write you about the Style 16 Cups and indeed our whole Communion Set. After nearly a year's use we are more than ever pleased with it. I have visited several places where the flat top cup and aluminum trays are in use, and have just wished that the kind we have could be substituted for them. Ours are just a joy to us, and I wish I could induce all to buy this kind. The glasses are much prettier and easier to handle and to drink from. Yours cordially,

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

For your own protection—

The peril of the road crossing has become a national problem with the multiplication of automobiles.

The Southern Railway System has eliminated 584 grade crossings, and is eliminating more every year, but 7,000 remain to be separated on this system alone. The total cost to complete the work is a stupendous sum—probably half as much as the cost to build the railroads.

Even if the money were available, and the public willing to pay the increased freight and passenger rates necessary to provide a fair return on it, many years would be required to do the work.

Protection from the peril for the present generation at least must be found in some other way. Trains cannot stop at every crossing if they are to be run at the sustained speed expected by the public and required to carry the commerce of the country. The train crosses a highway about every mile. The motorist encounters a railroad only occasionally.

It is necessary, therefore, for the automobile driver to stop in order to avoid risk. No one who did this was ever killed. In North Carolina, where the law now requires such a stop, the number of road crossing accidents on our lines has been reduced one-half.

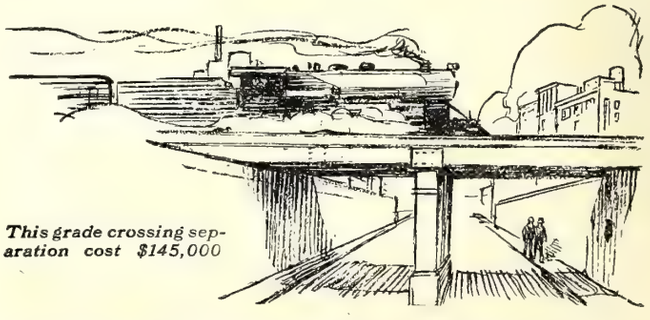
Grade crossing accidents can be prevented if you will approach the zone of danger determined to exercise caution For Your Own Protection.

It is better business to save a life than to save a minute.

Personal Responsibility

(Reprinted from the Saturday Evening Post)

Final dependence for a reduction in the number of railroad grade-crossing disasters must be placed upon the individual's sense of responsibility. If when approaching and crossing a railroad at grade the traveler will think of that crossing as a zone of danger to him, and regard himself and those with him as in imminent danger until the crossing is completed, the chances of accidents will be automatically reduced to the minimum.



This grade crossing separation cost $145,000

HILTZHEIMER—KENT.

Of great interest to many readers of The Christian Sun was the wedding of Miss Mary Emma Kent and Mr. Hubert Taylor Hiltzheimer, which took place on November 14, 1922, at 11 o'clock, in the Mt. Zion Church at Ingram, Va. A large assemblage of friends and relatives witnessed the souvenir ceremony of the Christian Church, which was read by Rev. John G. Truitt, pastor of the First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va.

The beautiful Baptist Church was made more beautiful still with palms, ferns and large white chrysanthemums. The altar was banked with forest evergreens, which was given a bewitching by the intermingling of many white flowers. White tapers cast a glow over the altar, leaving the nave of the Church in shadowy repose. The brothers of the bride and groom acted as ushers. Miss Helen Keeling presided at the piano, and Mr. Walter Chaney, violinist, played softly "The Rosary" and "Minuet in G," while the guests assembled. Little Misses Susie Hunter Bass and Hattie Walton, daintily dressed in pink Georgette, carried baskets of orchid chrysanthemums. Miss Ruth Davis was maid of honor, and Mrs. A. W. McDowell, sister of the bride, was matron of honor. Mr. Irvin Hiltzheimer, brother of the groom, was best man. Mrs. Robert Walton sang "Love Sends a Gift of Roses."

The bride wore a traveling suit of gray, with accessories to match, and carried a bouquet of Sweetheart roses and fern. She entered on the arm of her father, Dr. S. T. A. Kent, who gave her in marriage. The ceremony was performed during the rendition of "At Dawning." A three-course breakfast was served immediately after the ceremony in the beautiful home of Dr. and Mrs. S. T. A. Kent. After a tour of Northern and New England cities, Mr. and Mrs. Hiltzheimer will reside in Pulaski, Va. JOHN G. TRUITT.

BOWDEN—DAVIS.

At the bride's residence, Colosse, Isle of Wight County, Va., November 28, 1923, Mrs. Mattie E. Davis became the bride of Mr. James R. Bowden, of Hanford, Cal., Rev. J. Pressley Barrett and Rev. J. William Barrett, brothers of the bride, being the officiating clergymen. The nuptials were celebrated at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and the bridal party left at once for Suffolk, Va., where they took the train for a short bridal tour, after which they will be at home at their residence at Colosse. Quite a large company of friends and neighbors assembled to witness the ceremony. The bride is a teacher in the Colosse Baptist Sunday School, and the girls of her class were the attendants at the marriage altar. The wedding was beautiful in its simplicity.

GRAHAM—UMSTEAD.

Married at the residence of C. L. Umstead, Elon College, N. C., November 28, 1923, by the writer, Mr. John Bethel Graham and Miss Ethel Umstead, in the presence of a few friends. The beautiful ring ceremony was used. The many friends of the bride and groom wish for them a long, happy and prosperous life.

VICKERS.

Mrs. Rhoda P. Vickers was born at Daviston, Tallapoosa County, Ala., June 29, 1839, and died December 8, 1923, aged 84 years 5 months 9 days. She married to J. K. P. Vickers May 22, 1866. To this union were born three children—W. M. Vickers, of Florida; S. J. Vickers, Wadley, Ala., and Mrs. G. D. Hunt, of Wadley, Ala.

Sister Vickers joined the M. E. Church at McGuire's Chapel in early life, and when it became a Christian Church she remained true and loyal until her husband died about five years ago. She went to make her home with her daughter, Mrs. G. D. Hunt. Then she joined Beulah Christian Church, where she remained strong in the faith till the end. She was a kind and affectionate mother, a good neighbor, and one who bore all her troals with patience. She never murmured or complained, but trusted the divine hand of God to lead her through this life, and trusted Him to the end and declared that she was ready to go.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. C. W. Carter and the writer, in the presence of a host of friends and loved ones, at the old homestead, where they reared their family, and her remains were laid to rest, by the side of her husband, in the old family cemetery near McGuire's Chapel Church.

Sister Vickers spent her entire life in a few miles of where she was born and reared. A good mother in Israel has fallen to sleep.

May the Giver of all good comfort the bereaved and help us all to see that "all things work together for good to them that love God." G. H. VEAZEY.

MASON.

William White Mason was born June 11, 1880, in Greenville County, Va., and died October 31, 1923, at Waverly, Va. On April 25, 1905, he married Mrs. Maggie May Gwaltney; to this union was born a little girl, who passed away at the age of sixteen months. He joined the Waverly Christian Church about fifteen years ago, and remained a member till death. He had been a sufferer for more than two years, and had been treated by skilled physicians at home and at the sanatorium. He made a brave fight for health, but disease conquered.

He was a trusted employee of the Gray Lumber Company for more than twenty years. He was held in high esteem by his employers, his co-laborers, neighbors and friends. His was the quiet, timed Christian life. We feel that he passed to a happy home, where there is no more sickness, pain, nor death.

He leaves to mourn their loss a devoted wife, four step-children, viz: H. L. and R. D. Gwaltney, Miss C. T. Flowers and Mrs. W. A. Raines; six step-grandchildren; also three brothers, viz: R. D. Mason, Lawrenceville, Va.; C. L. Mason, Petersburg, Va., and T. F. Mason, Waverly, Va., and one sister, Mrs. T. W. Blake, Edgerton, Va.

The burial services were conducted from the home and Waverly Cemetery by his pastor, assisted by Rev. W. W. Edwards, of the Baptist Church, who married him.

The floral offerings were many and beautiful. The program and beauty of the flowers were in keeping with the quiet, peaceful life he lived. Peace to his dust and the grace of God upon his loved ones. JAS. L. FOSTER.

IN MEMORIAM.

You have gone from us, dear precious mother; yes, gone to your heavenly home, there to dwell where there is no grief, no sorrow, no pain, but heaven's sweet rest forever more. But oh, how we do miss you, dear mother! A chair in our home is vacant, and how sad it is to think you can never occupy it again. Oh, dear mother, how we loved you and how sad was the last farewell!

A great and all-wise God has done all things well, and we dare not oppose His will. You are gone, but you are not forgotten. You now live in the home, not made with hands, but eternal, and in the heavens. We miss you everywhere; it is so lonely and sad without you.

You were so gentle and loving, with a smile for every one and a word to say for your Saviour as opportunity was given you. At times it seems that we cannot live without you, for we loved you so well. Now the lovely face cannot greet us and no more can say to us here, "Come, dear." We know you can no more come to us, but, by God's grace, we can and we will come to you and meet you in the heavenly home, and then we shall dwell together throughout eternity, and we shall have no more sorrow and no more pain—no more separation and no more farewell tears.

High Prices in Germany.—

Germany is in the midst of a financial frenzy which has driven food to fabulous prices. An omelet of two eggs costs five gold marks, more than $1, and an apple costs two and a half gold marks, or more than 60 cents. German financiers of a statistical turn figure that it would require a train of forty cars to haul enough one thousand mark notes to pay for a pound of sausage at present prices.—Advocate.

To Avoid Unhappy Marriages.—

Dr. William S. Bainbridge, of New York, tells us that unhappy marriages can be prevented by means of blood tests. It seems that there are four kinds of blood, and the idea is that by taking blood tests of persons in love, unhappy unions can be forestalled, as only the mating of persons in the same "blood group" could be recommended. This would result, of course, in the marriage of people who had a natural affinity for each other. Some mighty queer notions are hatched in New York.

The Colored Exodus.—

Statistics gathered by the Department of Labor indicate that 478,700 negroes left 13 Southern States during the year ending September 1st. This migration was to the North. Alabama lost 90,000; Florida, 90,000; Mississippi, 82,600; Georgia, 120,600; Virginia, 10,000; North Carolina, 25,000; South Carolina, 25,000; Louisiana, 15,000; Tennessee, 10,000; Arkansas, 5,000; Kentucky, 2,500; Texas, 2,000, and Oklahoma, 1,000. Southern observers believe that during the winter months many of them will return.—Item.

I Love Little Dogs.—

"I do love little dogs! They don't smoke cigarettes; they don't swear; they don't drink booze. I do love little dogs!" So declared Carrie Nation of hatchet fame who figured large on the public stage a little more than a decade ago. This militant apostle of sobriety adopted questionable methods and picturesque speech in her warfare against the evils of the day, but she never failed to get a hearing. Mrs. Nation's old Bible that had served many a night for her pillow in Kansas jails is still in existence and is in the hands of a Methodist preacher who always shows it in his temperance lectures under the auspices of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association.—Advocate.

Further Earthquakes Predicted.—

Dr. Ommomura, of the Niigata Meteorological Observatory, the greatest authority on the origin of earthquakes, has predicted that Japan will be visited by another destructive shock within the next twenty years. It will occur, in his opinion, around the Shinano River, in Northwestern Japan. "The deplorable fact is that in the present state of seismological development there is no foretelling the exact date the visitation will come," says the doctor. He also stated that the region mentioned had suffered within the last century an earthquake as serious as the recent one in Tokyo and Yokohama. It certainly would be a boon to humanity to be able to know exactly where and when the next earthquake shock would occur. —News note.

Hounds or Babies, Which?—

Before our eyes, as we write, is a catalogue of a country fair in the good State of Tennessee. On a particular page, at top of column, is "Department X," followed by a list of premiums for "Fox Hound Show." These number eighteen prizes, for first, second and third beasts, of certain classes, aggregating $90, the highest prize being $7.50. At the bottom of the same page, still under "Department X," is the "Better Babies Contest." The prizes number six, as against eighteen for the hounds; the highest prize is $2, as against $7.50 for the hounds; the total premiums aggregating $6, as against $90 for the hounds. The third best babies were to win only ribbons. Turn that over in your minds a moment. Is it possible that the honorable gentlemen of the fair association thought the fox hounds were worth more to a fair than babies?—Meth. Advocate.

A Nail in a Sure Place.—

A few years ago when Dean Charles R. Brown, of the Yale Divinity School, was booked for a series of addresses at the Trinity College summer school for preachers, men who should have known better, yet with their deplorably limited knowledge did not, said that Brown was a heretic. Here is one utterance of his—if it be heresy, let's have more heresy. Dr. Brown says: "Of this, one thing I am sure; when I ride through the streets of our cities and towns, or when I scan the amusement columns of the daily papers, this amusement-loving age of ours does not seem to be in such sore need of more moving-picture shows that the Christian Church should go into the moving-picture business in order to meet any such alleged need. Six days the movies labor and do their work—the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God. In it, let them rest if they will, that their man-servants and their maid-servants also may rest; and because the people get enough of the movies during the other six days, let us undertake to give them something better on Sundays." —N. C. Advocate.

Cain, Then Abel.—

Cain stands first chronologically among the criminals of the race. Abel stands at the head of that elect company which has been in right relation with God, with man and with their own consciences. They were brothers in the flesh, but in nothing else. These early examples teach that character lies deeper than pedigree or early environment. Occupation has little to do with it. Neither was Cain bad because he tilled the soil, and Abel good because he herded sheep. For these men being of the same household had the same parentage and the same early environment and the farmer is in all respects equal to the shepherd. Yet these two men are as far apart as the poles. They both observed the forms of worship, but one is a murderer and the other is first in the household of faith. It is all a difference in moral character. In one heart was sin and selfishness, in the other was a desire and determination to treat God right, to treat his fellows right and to be true to himself. As a result, Cain became a vagabond in the earth while Abel has been placed among the illustrious of the ages.—Selected.

A Religious Survey.—

A survey of religious education has just been completed in Indiana, and the first volume of the report has been published under the title, "The Religious Education of Protestants in an American Commonwealth." The survey shows that of the 2,835,492 people in the State, 275,914 are Catholics, 25,833 are Jews, 5,670 belong to other non-Protestant faiths, and 793,938 are members of Protestant Churches. That leaves 1,734,137 who are not members of any Church. Of the children and youths under 25 years of age, 137,940 are Catholic, 12,650 are Jewish, 2,820 belong to families of other non-Protestant faiths, 486,140 are Protestant, and 749,840 are nominally Protestants, but are not identified with any Church. There are 615,150 children in Sunday Schools, parochial schools or other religious schools. Protestant Churches provide only twenty-four hours of religious instruction annually for their children, and the children who are enrolled are absent every other Sunday. Of every four children enrolled in Sunday School at 12, three drop out before they are 18 years old. "Many Church buildings subject congregations weekly to fire hazards which civil authorities ought not to permit; the township supervisors of Protestant Sunday Schools are inexperienced and untrained; the supervisory machinery is inoperative most of the time; the Sunday School teachers are untrained and the unmistakable marks of pedagogical quackery are observable. The professional training of Indiana Sunday School teachers for religious education is almost negligible. The rank and file have had no courses in the Bible or religious education in any institution of higher learning." These are some of the gloomy details of the report, or rather, of the first installment of the report. Perhaps the worst is yet to come. And it cost $100,000 to make the survey! That amount would have done much toward replacing some already mentioned.—Meth. Protestant.

NOTES-PERSONALS

We understand that Rev. Chas. H. Rowland expects to begin his ministry in First Church, Greensboro, N. C., in February.

The work in Japan needs every possible help to enable it to get over the disastrous effects of the earthquake, flood and fire. Do help the cause there as you have opportunity.

The Christmas entertainment for the children of the Sunday School of the First Christian Church was given Friday evening at 7 o'clock in the basement of the Church.

A pageant entitled "Prophecy and Fulfillment," a Christmas entertainment, was given in the First Christian Church in place of the regular sermon Sunday night. Mrs. W. T. Walters directed the evening service.

Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has recently been in Columbus, Ohio, attending the executive committee meeting of the Federal Council—December 12th to 14th. This means at least that Dr. Staley is continuing to improve in health.

Our friends will be glad to welcome the Suffolk Letter again, after an absence of nearly four months, due to the long illness of Dr. Staley; but he now hopes to keep up the Suffolk Letter regularly, and for this we are all thankful.

Do not forget to renew your subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. If you have not been taking it, just remember that now is a good time to begin, and send in your subscription to the publisher at 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Note well the words of Hon. J. E. West as to our Men and Millions Movement. He shows what has been paid in and what is still due. Let us give the helping hand to the raising of this fund; it is needed, and much needed, and we cannot afford to lose its help for the cause we love.

The Thanksgiving service at Chapel Hill this year was held in the Baptist Church. Rev. B. J. Howard, pastor of the Christian Church, preached the sermon, and the local paper said it was a splendid effort. It was much enjoyed. A large congregation was in attendance. Bro. Howard, we are told, is a good preacher and a growing man.

Many of our readers will be interested in the Suffolk Letter this week, not only because Dr. Staley is again well enough to write, but he gives some interesting facts as to the Missionary Association. The figures, as he gives them, show that from its beginning it has done a good work in raising money for our denominational enterprises, chiefly for missions.

We are waiting for the "Annual" to appear, but the publisher is delayed by reason of the delay of the proceedings of some of the Conferences. It was his purpose to have it out before Christmas, but it is well-nigh impossible to get it out before some time in the new year. Let our people be patient, assured that the "Annual" will appear as soon as possible.

Comparisons sometimes may be good, but unless we have the right light on the comparison we may be wholly misled. The Herald and Presbyter puts it this way, and we think that paper is very nearly right when it says: "Good and evil.—When we think of all the good instrumentalities that are at work in the world, it seems as though evil must be soon crushed out. When, on the other hand, we count up the evil forces that are fighting, it seems that all good work must be destroyed. It has always been so. It will be so always until the victory of the Lord is complete. God's kingdom is sure to come. God's will is to be done."

The many friends of Rev. Jas. W. Wellons will be glad to know that his health is pretty good for a man of his age. January 1, 1924, will mark the beginning of his ninety-ninth year. We are sure that many that cannot get to see him may be glad to avail themselves of the opportunity of addressing him a letter for January 1, 1924. He will spend the Christmas holidays in the Masonic Home, Greensboro, N. C., as chaplain, but he expects to be back at Elon by the first part of January. You may address him at Elon College, N. C., and he will get it about as soon as if you should send it to him at Greensboro, N. C. He is now the oldest minister in the Christian Church, so far as we know, and that is a mark of the Lord's favor upon him. Length of days are the gifts and blessings of the Lord.

From Rev. Jas. H. Lightbourne, Holland, Va., we learn of the death of Mrs. A. W. Lightbourne, widow of the late Rev. A. W. Lightbourne, of Dover, Del. She was the mother of Revs. A. Victor Lightbourne and Jas. H. Lightbourne. She was a devoted wife and mother, and will be greatly missed in the circle of her friends. A noble woman has been called to her eternal home. Mrs. Lightbourne had been a great sufferer for two years, but during the last two weeks of her life on earth she was practically free from pain, as she slept continuously. In the early morning of Friday, November 14, 1923, she passed away peacefully and as quietly as a child going to sleep on its mother's knee. Alas! the dear ones of earth are passing away, but the Lord will raise up others to take their places. God bless the memory and lifework of this sainted woman.

WEEK OF PRAYER FOR THE CHURCHES.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 6, TO SATURDAY, JANUARY 12.

To the Churches of Christ in America:

Before the new year takes for nations and Churches a character of its own, it is our privilege to invite all Christian people to fellowship in prayer.

It is not demanded of us that we should devise a formal unity before we can come together at the throne of grace. There is a unity which is already ours. We are one body in Christ. We have not to create, but to enter into the unity which comes from our common relationship in grateful and adoring faith, to the one Lord. We come by many ways to Him, but it is to Him that we all come, and in Him we meet with one another. We need not wait for other sanction.

There is another unity in the needs which we must bring with us into His presence. We live in the same age of the world's history. We share the same anxieties and perils, the same fears and the same wonderful hopes. It is the same world and the same nations, which we seek to behold in the light of Christ. It is the same world which we long to offer to Him for His inheritance.

But we shall remember that in our prayers we do not begin with our needs, but with the divine grace. Our prayers will be our answer to His call, and to His redeeming love, and we shall turn away from ourselves, even from our desperate needs first of all, and open up all our life to the Holy God that He may enter and possess us by His Spirit. This is the way to unity in prayer. Other concerns in which we differ there will be in our life and service, and they are important, but when we dwell upon the Redeemer, and all that we owe to Him, these concerns take their true proportions.

We shall hope to see the needs which we share, more clearly when we together bring them into the light of the one divine purpose. We know something of our shame and failure. "We are men of unclean lips and we dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips." We shall know more, when we have lifted this our world into the pure and holy light. We know something of our need of God, but we shall learn more in fellowship: we shall see with cleansed vision what it is that can fill human life with the joy of a great purpose and the certainty of an eternal destiny. Everywhere we see men seeking to fill their days with excitement in order to escape from thinking. In the failure of their merely formal religion they hope to fill the void with new superstitions. They dream that they are eating, and they will awake to find their souls empty. This we know in part; but when we strengthen each other in the fellowship of prayer and come with holdness to God, we know still more surely that nothing but faith in the living God can satisfy the soul of man.

But we shall not only see with purified eyes; we shall open new ways through our offering of curselves, whereby the Spirit of God may enter into the human scene. There is a way open whenever a solitary soul turns in faith to its Lord; but we have the assurance of the Saviour Himself that through fellowship the souls of men open another road. "Where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them. * * * If two of you shall agree * * * it shall be done." It will make a difference whether we unite in prayer or not. Such a fellowship in prayer means ways thrown open, powers released, re-enforcements of courage and hope for the faithful servants of God.

We cannot limit the range of believing prayer; the world has still to learn what may follow upon the fellowship in prayer of all the people of God. To the discovery of that secret in experience we call the Churches for their own sake, for the sake of the world, and for the sake of Him who waits and has waited long for us to offer Him this road.

We are yours in the fellowship of Christ Jesus,

A Weekly Presentation of Truth for the Christian Life.

CHRISTMAS TIME AND REDEMPTION.

*"But when the fullness of time was come, God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law * * * to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."*—Gal. 4:4-5.

We are in the midst of the Christmastide, the time of the year which should, above all others, call our attention to the Christ who gave His life that we might not die. The Son of God was born of a woman, was made under the law, that He might redeem the fallen sons of men and give them life everlasting. We may well say, then, that the purpose of God in giving His Son to us in a human body was the redemption of man. But what is redemption? And why was it necessary in the saving of the human family from sin?

Redemption is the repurchase of some lost possession. It is a repurchase of man, delivering him from the consequences of sin and making him an heir of God and a joint heir with Christ to an everlasting inheritance that cannot fade away. The repurchase of man from the thraldom of sin was not a mere act, paying so much money down for the repurchase, but it was the giving of the life of the Son of God as the price of man's salvation. This is the great event we celebrate in keeping Christmas. It celebrates the birth of the Christ who was given a ransom in the salvation of man.

It is true that salvation is a mystery, and so are many other things in human life. Because we cannot fully understand it, men have disputed over it from the beginning, and they do it today. If salvation were offered only to good men, it might be less strange, but when salvation rests not on good men, but on the death of the Son of God, that is too much for many people, and they shake their heads and go away unbelieving. Then when we tell them that salvation comes to maturity on the faith of the individual in this Christ, they again shake their heads and go away, saying: "I do not understand."

From the Garden of Eden, God has been preparing to give this salvation to fallen and lost man. The drift of the Jewish religion has been toward a decline. The governments of that day had the same tendency. Even the philosophy of the times was on the wane, so that the civilization of that day was as a setting sun. Darkness was approaching, but so was Jesus Christ, who was the light of the world—He was coming to give light and life and to give it as John says (10:10), more abundantly; but this unbelieving world spurned His offer, and to this day Jesus is persuing lost men and women, that He may save them. Here we come face to face with God's great masterpiece for the salvation of a lost world:

1. God's Great Masterpiece of Work for the Redemption of Human Society.

He sent His Son to redeem a lost world, a world that was in rebellion against Him. It was love against rebellion. Nothing like it has been found in the history of human society. Men have died to save a loved one, so we have been told, but who has laid down a life for bitter enemies? who is the only answer. That is something new, even in the annals of love. We stand in the presence of this great event, bewildered by its greatness and its mystery. There are two mysteries in this redemption.

1. God Sent His Son Made of a Woman.—Why did He not send His Son as He existed in heaven? He had the highest exaltation in heaven. God could not sacrifice a Spirit, not even for so great a purpose. It must be a man for the sacrifice to save man. He must, therefore, find a man for the sacrifice, but such a man could not be found. It was when there was no man that Jesus stepped to the front and offered Himself, but before He could go, He must be made a man and come to shame and ignominy. He must stand on a level with man.

2. So God sent His Son under the law as qualifying Him to take the place of men under the law, that they might escape the curse of the law.—He thus came into close touch with man in his environment of sin. He came into man's sphere that He might lift him up and give him a chance to live forever.

2. The Mission of the Son of God to a Sinful World.

He came to redeem the lost under the law. Sin had separated man from his Creator, but from the day of his fall God had never ceased to plan to bring him back to Himself.

God had tried admonition.

He had tried the law.

He had tried the blood of animals, but under all of these the work was incomplete.

He then sought for some man to give his life for man's redemption, but no man would offer himself. It was then that the Son of God said: "I will go." Being the only one in all the universe who would undertake the great mission, God sent His own Son, made of a woman and made under the curse of the law, and then, when He had done His work, redemption was given to man.

3. The Meaning of Redemption—That Man Might be Adopted Into the Family of God.

What is the adoption of sons?

It is not repentance.

It is not the new birth.

It is not merely receiving the title of Son.

It is the giving of the place of a son in the family of God. Then henceforth I call you no more servants, but sons.

Instead of doing the things the Christian is required to do, because the law requires it, he gladly does them because of his love for God and His truth. Love constrains and induces us with a sense of pleasure in doing them. That is the difference between serving God under the law and under grace. Under the law we are made to do them, but under grace we do our work because we love to do it.

Elsewhere, Paul speaks of the sealing of the Spirit: "Now He who establisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God; who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts."—2 Cor. 1:21-22.

What are we to understand by sealing of the Spirit?—To seal a thing was originally to make it ready to fill its place. Thus we seal a letter, and it is ready to go on its mission to another. We place a seal on a writing, and it is at once an official document. So it seems to me that when God seals one of His servants, He has simply well established him in the faith and endued him with the spirit of service, to which he is now ready to go that he may serve in doing God's bidding.

Redemption puts us where God can show His power, grace and love in our salvation.

Redemption is for the body, soul and life of the believer.

Redemption is spoken of in the Word of God as precious, plenteous, eternal.

Redemption secures for us forgiveness, justification, purification and the sealing of the Spirit.

Redemption is of God through Christ—it cannot be effected by man.

God gives us redemption through Christ. Man receives it through faith.

Redemption is essential to salvation.

Keep in mind the thought that there is no redemption except through the shedding of blood—the precious blood of Christ. It is the price of your salvation and mine.

Free from the law, O happy condition,
Jesus hath bled, and there is remission;
Cursed by the law and bruised by the fall,
Grace hath redeemed once for all.

Once for all, O sinner, receive it;
Once for all, O brother, believe it.
Cling to the cross, the burden will fall—
Christ hath redeemed us once for all.

GRAHAM CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

Field Notes for The Christian Sun.

As statistics show that about 85 per cent of the membership of the Church comes from the Sunday School, we are at this time stressing that phase of the work. We have just reorganized the Sunday School and have put on the graded work in all the lower classes. Since the children are becoming more deeply interested in the religious instruction given them through the Sunday School, the fathers and mothers are also showing a deeper concern in all the activities of the Church. It is said: "A little child shall lead them." I wonder how many fathers would absent themselves from the Church services if the children would take the lead and say: "Come on, Dad, and let us go to Church and Sunday School." On the other hand, can we, as fathers and mothers, expect our children to do something we are not doing ourselves? I believe that the greatest treasure any person can acquire in this world is a Christian boy or girl. I fear that most of us do not spend enough time with our children.

Now I have no unfriendly criticism for any member in the Church, for most all of us are more interested in the growth of our Church than we think we are—the trouble is we just don't think. Since Rev. S. L. Beougher has been our pastor he has set most of us to thinking. He gives us something to think about in the form of a sermon each Sunday, and our congregations are growing as well as our Sunday School. Last Sunday there were more automobiles parked in front of the Church than I have ever seen at any regular service, and there was nothing of a special nature put on to draw the people. We had a good audience, and everybody seemed to enjoy the services.

W. R. Harden.

Standing in the Open.

Judge H. T. Connor, of North Carolina, says: "I regard any man as an enemy to his country who does not stand in the open where all men can see him by day or night, ready to defend the land and to enforce the law, according to the law, open and above board and in no other way. The fathers of our country never contemplated that any man could be a good American citizen or attempt to enforce the law unless he stood in the open, where all men could see him by day or night and where he could be held responsible for his conduct."—Ex.

The Bible Champion, Reading, Pa., is a monthly magazine, price $2.00 a year. It is a strong publication and is well up to its name. We wish many of our people who read, and especially our ministers, would include that in their reading for the coming year. It is interdenominational, and of course unsectarian in character. We have been taking it for several years, and it gets better as it grows in age. It is now in its twenty-ninth volume, which shows it is not a new venture. It has done battle for the right now for many years. Address Frank J. Boyer, Reading, Pa.

"SHORT CUT" TO REAL CHRISTIAN UNION.

Sometimes railways have what they call a "short cut" to certain places. For instance, when the original railway was built, certain influences worked to have it built in a round-about way—say, from Dan to Beer-sheba, by the way of Jazer—but later, when men came to see the wisdom of a shorter way, then they built a road from Dan to Beer-sheba by the way of Jerusalem, and they called it "the short cut." It was all the same road, but when they sold tickets, if the passenger was to go by way of Jerusalem, the ticket was marked by the short cut only.

This is much after the manner of the way the Churches are reaching after the union for which Jesus prayed. They have the long way, and it is very long; we have been traveling that way now for a hundred years and more, and we have not yet reached the station. Some of us are getting in a hurry, lest we should never reach the union station in our day, and we have been looking around to see if there is not a shorter way than going all around by Jazer, and we have come to the conclusion that there is a near way and a better way.

We have tried the long way around and have failed largely, except that there is a better spirit among the denominations, and that is not to be counted as a meaningless and worthless thing. By no means. Under its influence, the people have come to realize the need of union, but they cannot reach the goal—the real union of the people of God. On several occasions, conclaves have been held and the parties to it have come almost together, but in the last point they have pulled away and remained just what they were before.

Since Jesus prayed for the union of His people, there must be a way to get such union as He prayed for, and if so it becomes us to do our best to find it. As the long way has failed, there must be a "short cut" to union, and we believe we have found it. We may continue to work our creeds, each one doing his best to make it fit in with the creed of the other brother; but so far it has not gained the goal, nor do we believe it will in many a long day, if ever. We suggest that we let our creeds alone and take our Bible and begin work to get the mind of Christ (Phil. 2:5). If we can get the mind of Christ established in the minds and hearts of the people, then we shall be united and Christian union will be an accomplished fact, for the mind of Christ is one, and when we get to possess that mind we shall be one. This is not the popular way to union, but it is the sure way. But how can we reach it? By teaching and praying for the mind of Christ to possess us, for when He possesses us we shall possess Him, and then we shall be one in Christ. This is what we call "the short cut" to Christian union, and it is the sure cut. We need not look for union till this is accomplished. When we get to be what He meant we should be, then we can unite readily. Two hearts all aglow with the love of Christ are already one, and if that is true of two hearts, it will be true of ten thousand hearts which are all aglow with the love of Christ. Let us try this way—it will get somewhere and do something in the kingdom of God.

This is no plan of mere fancy or the imagination. It will work. It has worked in a small way, and it will work in a large way, if only the people of God will but give it a chance to do so. We have seen the plan work in a small way in recent years. We have seen Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, Episcopalians and Christians all working together in the greatest harmony and simply as Christians. These were not ignorant men, but men and women of real ability and prominence. In a great meeting operated by such men, we did not hear even once any cross-firing over denominational affairs. The truth is plain: When men and women launch out into the deep of the riches of grace, they have nothing to fuss about, and consequently they can work together as God's children. But this state of things cannot be reached when the people have only a slight case of the Christian spirit. If the people of God would unite in fact, then they must enter into the fullness of God, and, having the mind of Christ, they get together readily and live as the children of God.

But if you have seen this sort of thing work, can you not tell us how it came to do so? Were they different people in their Christian experience from what the average Church people are?

You ask a delicate question. If I answer truly, maybe you will dislike it, and then fight back at me, and then we might accomplish nothing. If I may be frank with you in answering your question, I must tell the truth, and may I ask you before I do so, not to take it unkindly, if you cannot agree with me?

In the meeting where I saw this sort of thing working, I did find Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, Episcopalians and Christians all beautifully and enthusiastically working together for the promotion of the cause of Christ. It was, of course, an interdenominational body, but they were emphasizing the deeper truths of the spiritual life, and they had gone so far that denominational questions did not bother or disturb them at all, but they were dwelling in Beulah Land, and they could sing with the Spirit—

> "I've reached the land of corn and wine,
> All its riches freely mine;
> Here shines undimmed one blissful day,
> For all my night has passed away.
> Oh! Beulah Land, sweet Beulah Land!
> As on thy highest mount I stand,
> I look away across the sea,
> Where mansions are prepared for me,
> And view the shining glory shore—
> My heav'n, my home, forevermore."

Yes, brother, these people were from the denominations named above, but they had been baptized with the Spirit, and they were living above the bickerings and sectarian clashes so common in many places. With a cold heart and sectarian teachings, we cannot reach union. Let us take the short cut by being filled to overflowing with the love of God. Then we can get together and stay together.

WHERE DO YOU PUT CHRIST IN YOUR LIFE AND THOUGHT?

It was Christ Himself who asked: "Whom do men say that I am?" The answer to that question, if it be a correct answer, will settle the character of the man so deciding what Christ is to Him. Indeed, some writer has said that the place we give Christ in our life determines the destiny of such a life. We believe it is true. Christ, the true Christ, given the right place in one's life will settle a man's destiny.

How do you look at Christ as the Son of God? Is He simply a good man? Is He simply a great teacher? If He a mere prophet? Do you regard Him only as an extreme dogmatist? Or, do you look upon Him as born out of wedlock, and therefore not respectable? Or, is He to you a spiritual genius? Or is He the Son of the living God, and therefore the Saviour of the world? Your answer to these questions will not merely settle what your idea is of the Christ, but it will very largely determine the matter of your salvation. It is, therefore, most important that you get the right view of Christ—not merely the view of this writer, but get the right view of the most illustrious and important person who has ever graced this earth with His presence. The right view of this person is to be the determining factor in your life and destiny. Do you regard Jesus as simply a good man? Then your life is dwarfed, and you have no Saviour. Do you look upon Him as an extreme dogmatist? Then you have a distorted conception of this most gracious and benign character in history. Do you look upon Him as a child born out of wedlock? Then you have and can have no Saviour from your sins. If you take not Jesus as the Son of God and the Divine Saviour of the world, then you can have no Saviour, for there is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved (Acts 4:12). If any man shall determine he must have his own way and will not have Christ to reign over him, but that he will look to another for salvation, then that is his own responsibility, and if he assumes the responsibility of looking to another for salvation, he can blame no one but himself. It is true that there have been persons who have called themselves the Saviour of men, but Jesus is the only character in human history which ever died and rose again, that He might be the Saviour of as many as believe on Him.

There are men in this day of boasted light who seem to take delight in making an effort to traduce the Son of God and make Him only a human character. A man who can persuade himself that Christ was not the Son of God, but that He was a bastard child, and so no Saviour, what can such a man do with the marvelous array of testimony, supporting the divinity of his being? Of course, if Jesus was not born of a virgin, then He must have been the son of an unworthy woman. If you take that position, you are compelled to class Him with the unworthy, and when you do that, you cut yourself off from the blessed hope of salvation and the life everlasting, for there is "none other name under heaven given among men whereby we may be saved."

The view you take of Christ will settle your destiny for time, largely, and for eternity completely. It is, therefore, of the highest importance that we maintain right ideas of the Christ of God, for our salvation and life eternal are wrapped up in Him. Not only so, but your highest usefulness depends in this life largely upon what you think of Christ. Can you show a man or a woman who has believed that Jesus was an illigitimate child, and yet has arisen to high distinction among his fellows for real usefulness and humble service in the great family of God? If you take the Socinian view of Christ you rob yourself of the power of the Christ-life in your life-work. You not only thereby rob Him of His glory, but you rob yourself of the power that might otherwise make your life a real blessing to the world.

Many are saying it does not matter so much what a man believes, if he lives all right. Indeed, who can show us a man who develops in the true life of a child of God and yet believes all wrong? That is one of the most unfortunate expressions of this generation. The thought that a man can live all right without regard to what he believes is foreign to the Christ-life. He cannot do it; he must believe the truth as far as he has opportunity, or lose out in a right life, for the life of a man is shaped by what he believes. If you believe wrong as to Christ, then you will live wrong as to Christ. A man must live according to his faith or be doubly wrong in his life.

Bear in mind the one incontrovertible fact, viz: that your life is to be largely developed and shaped by what you believe of Christ. The way you regard Him in your mind and heart will place you in life and eternity. It was commonly understood that Tennyson was a Unitarian. A friend was walking with him in his garden, and he said to Tennyson: "What do you think of Christ?" Tennyson, stooping down and caressing a beautiful flower, replied: "What the sunshine is to that flower, the Lord Jesus Christ is to my soul." That settled the question as to how Tennyson regarded Christ. The sun had given the flower its beauty and growth, and that is what Christ does for man who, believing in Him, serves Him with all your heart and mind and strength. It was the devout Anne Steele who wrote:

"On Thee alone my hope relies,
Beneath Thy cross I fall;
My Lord! my Life! my Sacrifice!
My Saviour! and my All!"

Give us the person, so believing in truth, and we can tell you what that person is in his life and thought! He is a child of God; a real Christian, made after the divine ideal of the Christ.

IN GOOD COMPANY.

Christ Pre-Eminent.

In childhood, mother used to tell us that we should always be careful to keep in good company. The rule is quite good, even in old age. There are, of course, many ways of keeping in good company. One of these ways is to read the best books on the Christian life, and that we try to do as often as time will permit.

Recently it has been our privilege to read some good books, books which are not merely instructive, but which stimulate the heart life as well as the intellectual life, giving us strength for the life that now is and at the same time preparing us for eternity. Such a book we find in—

"Christ Pre-Eminent, or Studies in the Epistle to the Colossians," by Rev. W. H. Griffith-Thomas, D. D. It is published by the Bible Institute Colportage Association, Chicago, Ill. It contains 125 pages and is neatly bound in cloth. Price is $1 per copy, with 6 cents for postage. The book is rich in thought and beautiful in expression. As is well known, Dr. Thomas is a highly cultured Christian gentleman, and a fine and deep thinker. He was at one time a professor in Oxford University, in England, and later was connected with Wycliffe College, Toronto, Canada.

Dr. Thomas, in this book, shows that the epistle of Paul to the Colossians represents the highest, fullest, richest presentation of Christianity. The predominating thought of this epistle is Christ is all. The failure of the Colossian Church was just on this point, not holding fast the Head, as the body should always do. If we let go the head, the body must die.

The epistle to the Colossian Church had a direct bearing on the various heresies, not only of that day, but of the present day as well. It is a positive presentation of the antidote to every form of poison. That is a work which we need today as in all other ages. Dr. Thomas shows that our safeguard in the Christian life against spiritual poison is a definite and strong personal Christian experience. It is no wonder that thousands of professing Christians fall every year when it is known that so many are trying to live the Christian life without a positive Christian experience. The book is stimulating and withal it is much needed today, for there are many well-meaning Christians who need just this sort of help in Christian living.

The Miracle Man.

Another book we have found much pleasure and profit in reading is—

"The Miracle Man and the Wonder Book," by Fred. J. Meldau. It contains seventy-nine pages, is nicely bound in cloth, and sells for 35 cents in paper cover, and for 75 cents in cloth binding. It, too, is published by the Bible Institute Colportage Association, 826 La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

This, too, is a book to be highly commended for its real worth, since it discusses God's revelation as the Bible, God's manifestation as Jesus Christ, and God's proclamation as Christianity. This brief statement will give the reader at once a pretty inviting idea of the true value and real nature of the discussion given in this book. We feel entirely justified in pronouncing it one of the best of books for the man who seeks to become better acquainted with the fundamental truths of the Christian life. If you would be strong as a Christian, you should by all means feed on pure spiritual food, and this you will get in this book.

The book is really a discussion of the vital truths to be found in the teaching and life of Jesus Christ. The author says Jesus was the "Miracle Man"; that He came to us by a miracle and left by a miracle; that His life was one continuous miracle. He was full of power to such an extent that His wish counteracted all the well-known laws of nature. He was so full of life that the grave could not keep Him, and so full of goodness that the demons were forced to admit it. One has said of Him that "His life is lightning, and His words were thunder." The author also declares that Jesus is eternal in time, omnipotent in power, omniscient in intellect, and sovereign in His actions. His is both the Lord of glory and the Lord of humanity. He is also Master of nature and Master of providence, and more. He is both the coming judge and the coming King. He is also the only hope of mankind and the only way to God. He is the Fountain of life, the Source of light, and the Author of liberty. He is full of grace and full of truth. He sealed His claims of miraculous power, both by His use of miraculous power, by a sinless life, by His sacrificial death, and by His own resurrection from the dead. The author of this book declares that the Bible gives Him no less than 500 names, titles and offices. Some of these titles are the highest conceivable; there can be none higher, such as Almighty God, Father of Eternity, Saviour of the world, King of kings, and Lord of lords. He also declares that no other character in history could fill even one of the five hundred names and offices which are given to Him. In referring to the Bible, he shows that it has the widest circulation of any book known to man. The American Bible Society alone has published 134,000,000. Since the printing of the first Bible in 1456, it has been printed in 650 languages and dialects. It has penetrated to the hearts of darkest Africa, superstitious China, and to practically every heathen land. The same society (the American Bible Society) is now regularly printing 12,000,000 Bibles annually, and yet there are some men who are so wise as to believe that they can overthrow the wonderful Book. God pity the men! The Bible has been called "organic," and its various parts has been said to be as closely related as the parts of the human body. Some one has said that the unity of this book is so closely knitted together that if one part of the Bible were taken out, the whole would be irreparably injured.

The author sets forth the fact, and a marvelous fact it is, that in the thousands of biblical prophecies, not one has failed. Hastings has well said: "So long as Babylon is in heaps; so long as Nineveh lies empty, void and waste; so long as Egypt is the basest of kingdoms; so long as Tyre is a place for the spreading of nets in the midst of the sea; so long as Israel is scattered among all nations; so long as Jerusalem is trodden underfoot of the Gentiles; so long as the great empires of the world march on their predicted course —so long as we have proof that one omniscient mind dictated the predictions of that Book, and prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, so long may the critics criticise; but it will be in vain. The old Book will live on and show men the way back to God through Christ. It is a little great Book, and we commend it to men and women who are interested in the triumph of the truth as it is in Christ.

Glimpses of Indian America.

We have another feast on hand in a book of a different kind, but still a useful and interesting book. It is—

"Glimpses of Indian America," illustrating present-day life in Mexico and parts of Central and South America, by Rev. W. F. Jordan, secretary Upper Andes Agency of the American Bible Society, and author of "Crusading in the West Indies." Illustrated. The book is published by Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, Chicago, London and Edinburgh. Price, $1.75.

Mr. Jordan introduces to us the term "Indian America" as representing that part of the world of which he is writing. The book is easily an eye-opener for thousands who have little idea of what Indian America is, of what its conditions are, and how it has been, is now, and likely to continue to be, awfully neglected, unless such work as Mr. Jordan is doing, in this book, can awaken the Christians of Christendom to undertake to do something for this ignorant and down-trodden people. We do not use the term ignorant in any offensive sense; we use it because these poor people have never had a chance to become either Christian or cultured. We blame no man for his ignorance when he has never had a chance to know Christianity, or for culture. Why should we blame him for what he cannot help? We believe it would be more according to truth and justice to blame ourselves (the people of Christendom) for allowing these down-trodden people to go on the way of life in sin and ignorance as we have done. It is a shame, not to Christianity, but to the men and women who have professed the Christian faith and yet go on indulging self and enjoying the luxuries of the flesh, while these benighted people, almost in sight of the ascending smoke of our chimneys, have been allowed to go on without the light of life and truth. Think of it! Here in the sight of thousands of Christian people, rich in the things of this world, yet they have never been moved to give the Gospel of the Son of God to this "the greatest stretch of unevangelized territory in the world." We think that, as a people, we have a splendid history, and that may be true; but when we come to read our history as it relates to our dealings with these benighted peoples, surely we shall have cause to hang our heads in shame. If these people are lost through their lack of knowledge of the truth, as it is in Christ, what will be the fate of the men and women who know both of the Christ of God as the hope of the world and of the awful fact that these peoples of whom Bro. Jordan writes so interestingly have never been given a chance to know the truth, that the truth might set them free to serve and worship the living God. The question is not so much what will become of them as it is what will become of us who, knowing the truth, allowed them to go to judgment without its light? It is a book well worth the money of any man who wished to know the facts involved.

A Model Mining Town.

A model mining town is to be established at Raleigh Heights, W. Va., by the Raleigh Coal and Coke Company. Several hundred thousand dollars will be spent, and the plans call for the construction of twelve modern red-tile houses at once, and the completion of at least 250 within the next twelve months. If all employers would conscientiously endeavor to make their employees comfortable and happy, it might tend to diminish strikes.—News Item.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

ORIGIN, HISTORY, AND PRESENT STRENGTH OF THE CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

1. Origin.

The idea was first suggested by Rev. J. P. Barrett, at the Southern Christian Convention in Suffolk, Va., in May, 1890, under the name "Missionary Convention." This idea developed into the "Christian Missionary Association" in the S. C. C. at Elon College, N. C., in May, 1892; and the C. M. A. was organized with fourteen members and one hundred and forty dollars paid, ten dollars per member. E. E. Holland was elected president; W. T. Herndon, vice-president; A. Savage, secretary, and T. R. Gaskins, treasurer. A constitution was adopted, and Berea, Norfolk County, Va., was chosen as the place, and November 1-4, 1892, the time for the first regular annual meeting.

2. History.

At the first regular meeting, seventeen members were enrolled and $155 collected. The annual meetings continued for seventeen years with different Churches within the Conferences of the Southern Christian Convention, as the association embraced the whole of the S. C. Convention. It was composed of individuals and delegates from Conferences, Sunday Schools, and other societies. The annual dues were $10 for men and organizations, and $5 for women. The real purpose of the association was to cultivate the spirit of missions and special help in the financial work of the Church. In other words, to give individuals and organizations an opportunity to give and to control the expenditure of such gifts.

On account of long distances and the expense of attendance when sessions were held at different points within the Convention, after seventeen years, the plan was changed from one C. M. A. within the Convention to one C. M. A. within each Conference; and this plan has been in operation for fifteen years, making the total history a period of thirty-two years. The following table shows the financial result of the seventeen years under the Southern Christian Convention, and the fifteen years of the C. M. A. of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference:

Under S. C. C.		Under E. Va. C. C.
1892	$ 155.00	1909	$ 1,025.00
1893	400.00	1910	990.00
1894	820.00	1911	885.00
1895	299.00	1912	1,180.00
1896	417.00	1913	1,250.00
1897	830.00	1914	1,085.00
1898	840.00	1915	1,040.00
1899	851.00	1916	1,015.00
1900	869.00	1917	1,501.00
1901	865.00	1918	1,670.00
1902	800.00	1919	1,343.00
1903	1,263.00	1920	1,020.00
1904	1,767.00	1921	2,195.00
1905	1,155.00	1922	1,455.00
1906	1,150.00	1923	1,450.00
1907	1,070.00
1908	1,311.00	Total	$19,904.00
		Average	1,326.00
Total	$14,862.00
Average	874.00

The association has aided Winchester and other Churches in the Valley of Virginia, paid missionaries in that section through a period of years, aided Graham, Ramseur, and Raleigh, in North Carolina; Columbus, Ga.; Newport News, Old Zion, Isle of Wight Courthouse, South Norfolk, Portsmouth, and Norfolk, in Virginia, and created a good missionary atmosphere. The association has spent some $35,000 through the seventeen years under the Convention and the fifteen years in the Eastern Virginia Conference. The figures and scope of the work in the other Conferences is not in hand to give full detail of the entire work. The average has been more than a thousand dollars a year.

At the session of the Eastern Virginia Conference C. M. A., held in Portsmouth, Va., in 1919, J. E. West suggested in a speech that a plan should be laid to give every member of the Churches within the Southern Convention opportunity to make a special gift to missions; and this resulted finally in the organization of the Men and Millions Movement the next year—1920—to run for five years and close in 1925. This proved to be the greatest financial movement in the Convention's history, and has put a new emphasis upon all the departments in the Church enterprises.

3. Present Strength of the Eastern Virginia Conference C. M. A.

A fixed constituency of about 200, an interest in missionary work, a thankful pride in the history and activity of the association, and a new loyalty to the Church created by thirty-two years of help in a financial way above the regular channels of giving. It has also discovered new capacity and willingness to give and serve, which is a sure sign of strength.

ELON LETTER.

Not so long since a gentleman told me he had heard that Elon students are being trained away from supporting our Church and its enterprises. He was reluctant to specify, but finally confided that the Elon College Sunday School does not take offerings for the orphanage and for missions each month.

Perhaps others have also heard, and that is why I am writing this Elon Letter.

The Elon College Sunday School operates under a budget. This year their goal is $750.00. This is $2.50 for nine months for each student. I doubt if many Churches do so much for benevolences. The Church of my critic brother was away down below that point. I was glad to rub it in, and, believe me, I did. He actually blushed, which means hope of improvement.

College students must support the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the Student Volunteer Movement, Christian Endeavor, and other worthy causes. They must send delegates to the summer conferences and to numerous conventions through the year. During the Christmas holidays, two of their number are attending a great student volunteer meeting in Indianapolis. These students support their own local organizational expenses, including all supplies for their Sunday School.

And besides, they do support the orphanage and missions. They do not do either in the routine way, and there is the rub. At Thanksgiving and Easter here when the stated offerings are taken by the Church for the orphanage, college students give certainly as liberally as the members of our local Church. And then they provide a Christmas tree, with a present for each child by name and give the boys and girls a rollicking big time Easter with an egg hunt. Every week they conduct a kindergarten school of religion for the children of the orphanage who do not attend public school, including also a program of supervised sport and recreation.

As to missions, for two years past they have been undertaking to pay the total expenses of a Japanese student, at a cost of more than $400 the year. They got in debt about $200 on this item and this year they are paying that. They are not trying to dodge this obligation in the spirit of some Churches which do not send up their Conference apportionments. When this debt is paid, these students will again assume the support of a missionary.

I do not know a half-dozen Churches with twice their number who are doing as much for the orphanage and missions as Elon's student body.

But this is not all. These same students conduct a week-day religious school for the pupils of the Elon graded and high school, another for the children of the colored graded school, and also a night school of religion for adult colored people. In addition, they conduct a junior Church for the children of the town below twelve, holding service each Sunday. They supply preaching service and officers and teachers in the Sunday School of a mission Church in the country. It is a splendid record of Christian service which Elon students are rendering the community and Christ's kingdom.

Now, unless some reader may suspect that all Elon students are angels with budding wings, let me add that, unfortunately, we have some of the same types of person in the student body which are found in the home communities from which they come, such as tight-wads, skint-flints, grouches, knockers, flappers and dudes. They are few in number, fewer than in their home communities, and more out of joint here than there, but still they are here. Each year they grow relatively less and less, for which we are grateful, but, taken by and large, it is my deliberative judgment that no saner, more promising, more consecrated group of young people can be found anywhere than those who constitute the Elon student body.

A Happy New Year to them and to all who read these Elon Letters. W. A. HARPER.

CHAIRMAN WALTERS SPEAKS.

DEAR BROTHER:

For two and a half years the Board of Religious Education has endeavored to serve the Churches of the Convention through its field secretary. The handbook which was published this year shows progress in our Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions, and we hope that interest in Christian education in all of our Churches has been quickened.

On January 1st, Miss Eldredge leaves us to become office secretary and field worker for young people's work for the General Convention Board of Christian Education, with headquarters at Dayton, Ohio. While farther from our Churches, she will still be interested and willing to cooperate at any time. Miss Pattie Coghill, on January 1st, becomes field secretary of religious education of the Southern Convention. She will devote one-half of her time to the work of the Woman's Mission Board, and one-half to our work, with office at Elon College, N. C.

It is with deep regret that we lose Miss Eldredge from our Southern field. She has rendered splendid service, and done a real constructive work. In these two and a half years she has brought system, inspiration and efficiency into our religious educational work. We bid her godspeed in her new field. The board is most fortunate in securing the services of Miss Coghill as her successor. She is well-fitted for the work, and we bespeak for her your prayers and co-operation.

Our board, through our field secretary, is at your service. We shall be glad at any time to receive suggestions or requests for information and help. Let us go forward together!

With best wishes and the season's greetings,

Cordially yours,

W. T. WALTERS,

Chairman Board of Religious Education.

WINNING THROUGH WORSHIP.

By Miss Lucy M. Eldredge,

Late Field Secretary of Religious Education for the Southern Christian Convention.

On one of the beautiful Green Mountain peaks in Vermont is a clear spring of crystal water flowing out near the top. There are many similar springs bubbling out from the sides of these mountains, but this one teaches a great lesson. The water flowing out from this spring runs in two channels. One flows down the west side of the mountain and eventually empties into the St. Lawrence river, and on through the Gulf of St. Lawrence, to the ocean; the other channel flows down the east side of the mountain and eventually into the Connecticut River, and on through the Long Island Sound into the ocean. A little sod at the spring can throw all the water into one channel or the other, but after it has traveled a few hundred feet it would necessitate the removing of mighty mountains to change its course. So in the lives of our boys and girls, there is a time and a place where a little influence will throw that life into this course or that; but let that period pass, and the task becomes one more nearly impossible. Into scores of lives the Sunday School is throwing that influence which determines life's whole course. Sad, but true, is it that many lives would not have the right turn unless some Sunday School gave it. This is the responsibility of the school—the work of winning.

One Sunday School has on its walls the large letters in gold, "S. S. S.," meaning soul-saving station, and before the workers is always kept this fact, that in that Sunday School, as it should be in every other school in the world, there are gathered together boys and girls, and men and women who need to know God, and that the first purpose of that school is to give that knowledge, that they may be really and truly saved.

A little lad went out for a walk one day with his father. "Shall I take hold of your hand?" asked the father, as they left the house. "No, I'll take hold of yours," was the boy's reply. And he clasped the father's hand and walked along. Suddenly he stumbled and fell, as he let go of the hand he was trying to hold. When he was ready to start again, he said: "Daddy, you take hold of my hand first this time," and then with the father's strong grasp holding him up, he walked in safety. He was not doing all the holding himself. So God takes hold of the hand which is reached up to Him. He is ready always to see the upstretched hand, the upraised head which needs Him. It is in the worship period of the Sunday School that we come very truly to grasp the Father's hand, and to feel his hand upon ours. The unseen power and force of the soul-saving station of our Church is produced in the worship period.

Training in worship is an essential element in the religious education of our children. It is not enough that they be taught about God, nor even that they be trained in the Christian ways of living. They need to come into His very presence. They need to know Him for themselves. And that is possible only through some form of worship. We have always known this, but we have not always planned for it. Now we see that religion can be best taught by practicing it, and worship and expression or service have been added to knowledge in our educational program.

Boys and girls are ready to respond to the spirit of worship. There is some religious instinct in their natural make-up that craves expression. They may not worship just in the same way as grown-ups, but Jesus did not say, "Except as ye become as a little child." Somehow, we have been turning it around, and expecting our boys and girls to worship, and do other things, as grown-ups all the time, whether they understood the hymn or appreciated the feeling of the Scripture, or entered into the prayer or how. But they do worship, and before you criticise your boys and girls for a spirit of irreverence, test your program. Is there anything in the program to make them reverent? What does the service mean to them? Does your Sunday School room call them to "worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness," or do distractions force their minds from the throne?

In our hope to win the boys and girls through worship, we must remember that there are at least three ways in which they worship.

First.—They worship through wonder of the beauty of the world which God has made. The flowers tell them of the Heavenly Father who made them. The storm, and the wind, and the beautiful snow-flake, which may have become commonplace to the grown-up, all to the little child bring a feeling of awe and reverence. To even bigger folks, the appeal of God's out-of-doors is a call to worship. If you have ever gone through the great caves of the Valley of Virginia, you know the feeling of wonder at the creative power. If you have ever stood and marveled at the power and beauty of Niagara, could it be without a thought of the Father who made all things? The beauty of the world is an approach to worship for the teachers of boys and girls.

Second.—There is a worship which is unspoken. Children are even more susceptible than grown-up people to environment, to the surroundings in which they meet. Have you ever gone into a great cathedral, where it would seem wholly out of place to even speak aloud? Some one has said that the child will probably forget what he hears, may forget what he sees, but he will never forget what he feels. It does not take the large, magnificent cathedral to produce this feeling. The small chapel where God is; the little country Church where people care enough about Him to keep His house clean and beautiful—here thousands of people are worshiping, in silence perhaps, but truly coming to know God.

Third.—Is the worship which is expressed, the "worship period" of the Church school, which should prepare and lead to individual habits of devotion. This period is the one which has so long been the "opening exercises" conducted with little thought, except as it was an expected and necessary part of the Sunday program. Perhaps half the school was late, and we sang to "bring them in." Something had to come before the familiar: "The teachers will now take charge of their classes" was heard, and of course we sang, and prayed and read, but what did we sing, and read, and what did we pray for? Prayer, Scripture, music, offering are the familiar elements, but how are they to be used? Is that ten or fifteen or twenty minutes really counting as a "winning force" in the lives of the Sunday School members?" If it is not, better make the class period longer, and find something that will have an effect, than to waste a third of the precious one hour given every week to spiritual training, in a definite way.

One learns to worship by worshiping through some very familiar elements.

First, probably, comes the music. Music has a strange effect on us. It may have a quiet effect, or may stir up our activity. You know the difference in feeling, when the band plays "Dixie Land," or the organ "Break Thou the Bread of Life." Music is a power which the Sunday School has never fully utilized. Have you ever attended a Sunday School where three or four minutes before the beginning time the pianist or organist began to play softly, as a signal that the service was about to begin. If so, you have probably seen quite a different effect than when a superintendent makes an unearthly clang with a bell in the vain attempt to gain silence. Use music to produce the effect you desire, and it will be your invaluable aid.

What do you sing in your Sunday School? Last April I had the privilege of attending a singing convention in an Alamance Church. It was a new experience to hear folks sing, and sing, from early morning until late afternoon, with little else on the program. From 11 to 12 was the memorial service, when special numbers were sung in honor of those who had gone to sing on the heavenly shores since their last gathering, and a very short and impressive talk was made by a young man. I remember one sentence that he used of a leader in their convention. It was this: "He lived the songs that he sang." And I wished that that could be truly said of our boys and girls, and men and women in the Sunday Schools, and then I wondered if our boys and girls were not singing many, many songs, that were so far beyond their present experience that they really could not live them.

Choose your hymns for the boys and girls. Test your singing. It may be good singing, but good for what? Unless it is winning boys and girls to a better life by giving them songs to live; unless the songs are rallying them to the Church, and bringing them to worship the King of kings, what part have they really in your service?

The greatest element in worship is prayer. The disciples said to Jesus Christ, "Teach us to pray," and He taught them a form which men have been praying ever since. That form, and other forms, will enrich your worship service. There are great Bible verses which the Sunday School should know and use as prayers. The child's prayer may be simple, but it will be sincere. From the children's prayers may we learn simple trust in God ever expressed to Him in love. Do your boys and girls pray in Sunday School? Make prayer more than an incidental, unthought-of, unprepared-for event in your school. Make it talking to God!

What do you read for your Scripture lesson? Or, better, what do you use, for isn't it hard to read together? Memorized Scripture has great advantages. It is a permanent possession, and can be used at any time. It is easier to worship when you are saying a thing you know, and can think of its meaning, than when you are reading something unfamiliar with John, two words ahead of you, and Susah three words behind. There are few passages of Scripture which the average audience could repeat together now. Graded Lessons are going to help improve this, and the vacation Bible schools, through their regular, systematic program of memory work, are accomplishing much. The Sunday School lesson may not

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

CHRISTMAS GIVING.

Giving is characteristic of Christmas. This is what makes the season so happy, so cheering, so glorious. And this is as it should be, for the occasion is in honor of Him who gave all He could, all He had, all He was. Christ gave us Christmas. All the cheer and glee and gladness and happiness of the day and the season are ours and the world's, because of Him.

With this one fact before us, it is most fitting we should celebrate the day and the occasion by giving Him to others—making Him known to others that they, with us, may know Christmas and also have its cheer and happiness. This whole Christian Church has the opportunity of doing this in a most effectual way this Christmas. In Japan, where they know Christmas only where and as they know Christ, a great earthquake has wrought havoc and brought ruin and held up our Christian forces in their work of making Christ known. Now is the time to lay your Christmas gift on the altar of love and send cheer to the needy.

Waverly seems to be the banner Church, having paid nearly fifty per cent of its subscription. The community around Waverly and Wakefield has practically one crop and has been as hard hit as any section in the South. If all Churches will do as well as those mentioned, our total collections will soon be around $213,565. We must reach that goal before the next Southern Convention. We should average forty per cent in four years.

MINUTES OF MISSION BOARD.

The following are the minutes of the Woman's Mission Board of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference:

The Mission Board met at the Y. W. C. A., in Norfolk, November 17th, at 10:30 A. M., with the president, Mrs. C. H. Rowland, presiding. All members were present. Mrs. Rowland conducted the devotional service.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson was present for the day, and brought, among other messages of especial interest, a letter from Dr. Minton, foreign mission secretary, telling of our loss in the recent great Japanese disaster.

The annual November thankoffering meeting was discussed, and on motion it was decided to have Miss Pattie Coghill, field secretary, to write all women's societies that had not observed this service and ask them to do so and send the offering to Mrs. M. L. Bryant, Conference treasurer, in the first quarterly report. These funds will be equally divided between the mountain work and the Japanese relief and construction work.

It was voted to have the young people pay the salary of the Santa Isabel pastor as their foreign special. Same to be $863.25.

Voted to notify all women's societies of the assessment to help send a representative to some summer school of missions. The assessment is $2 for all societies of over fifty members, and $1 for all over twenty-five. The representative will be chosen by the board and requested to report at the Sunday School Convention and annual woman's conference.

The chair was instructed to confer with the Woman's Missionary Society of Suffolk concerning its apportionment.

The spring rallies will be held at Isle of Wight, Wakefield, Holy Neck and Newport News on April 8, 9, 10, 11. Special announcement of these will be given later.

Voted that September 30th be the latest date on which reports should be sent to the Conference treasurer.

Date was set for woman's conference, October 10th; place, Holy Neck.

The chair named committees as follows:

Program for woman's conference: Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, Mrs. M. J. W. White, Mrs. M. L. Bryant.

Report blanks and standard of excellence: Mrs. W. V. Leathers, Mrs. M. L. Bryant, Mrs. L. W. Stagg.

Voted to have the traveling expenses of the board presented to the treasurer.

Below are the apportionments for 1923-1924. These apportionments, with the goals and other information, will be printed in leaflet form and sent to all societies at the earliest possible date.

SERVING ONE'S OWN GENERATION.

BY. REV. S. L. BEOUGHER.

"There are no longer any good changes for young men," complained a young law student to Daniel Webster. "There is always room at the top," replied the great statesman and jurist. No chance, no opportunities, in a land where thousands of poor boys become rich men, where newsboys go to Congress, and where those born in the lowest stations attain to the position of the chief executive of our nation. The world is all gates, all opportunities to him who will use them, and there are plenty of chances to do somebody a good turn right where you are every day of your life. It is a sorry day when a young man cannot see any opportunities where he is, but thinks he can do better somewhere else. Some Brazilian shepherds organized a party to go to California to dig gold, and took along a handful of translucent pebbles to play checkers with on the voyage. Arriving in San Francisco after they had thrown most of the pebbles away, they discovered that they were diamonds. They hastened back to Brazil, only to find that the mines from which the pebbles had been gathered had been sold to the government. The richest gold and silver mine in Nevada was sold by the owner for forty-two dollars to get money to pay his passage to other mines, where he thought he could get rich. A man living near Titusville, Pa., sold his farm of two hundred acres for two hundred dollars, that he might go West and engage in the oil business. Only a short time after, the man who bought his farm discovered upon it a great flood of oil, which the farmer had previously ignorantly tried to drain off. This proved to be one of the greatest oil-producing farms in Pennsylvania. There are many who are looking for opportunities afar off or for those that are showy for serving Christ and the Church, with ears shut to one of the sweetest utterances ever he spoke, respecting the "cup of cold water"; and with eyes closed to the widow woman of the mite by the treasury, to whom the Lord did not close His eyes, and to whom He ever called the attention of others.

We can serve our generation by witnessing for God in it. Every generation wants men and women who really believe in God, and make it plain to everybody that they do believe in Him. In one form or in another, the belief in the living God is put in peril in each succeeding generation. Sometimes the unbelief is intellectual, and sometimes it is practical; but every generation produces its "fools" and its "wicked," who secretly or openly say "There is no God." It is an honor to Mohammed that he laid this down as the very foundation of Islamism: "There is no God but God." We may serve our generation by being the best possible in it; for every generation needs in all its spheres, such models and examples as may be to it a constant inspiration—keep the moral standard up, and raise the moral standard higher. To the consciousness of mankind, the freshest and greenest thing in this world is the pure heart. It is independent of all time; it is independent of all space. When we meet it on the page of history, we refer it to no age or clime; we accept it as a fact of humanity.

The pure heart gives moral strength, opening up enlarged opportunities as an invariable sequal of faithfulness "in few things." The time is neither very slow in its coming nor at all doubtful when the shoulders of those who have been faithful in few things bend beneath the weight of most honorable burdens of responsibilities. Not a few of those who once did on the humbles scale the work of their generation, and neither bargained for nor dreamed of posthumous fame, stand now in niches or aisles of the Church, and "dead, yet speak" with a voice to edify and to thrill the generations to come. This is true of the woman who most spontaneously and at her own individual expense, richly anointed the body of her Lord, and received the promise, now for two thousand years fulfilled, "Wheresoever this Gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, there also shall this, that this woman hath done, be spoken for a memorial of her." We shake hands across the centuries with those who have wrought well, as by the bond of a present continuity. The man who treads the path of righteousness is abreast with every age.

Again, we may minister to our generation by manfully resisting the evils that may afflict it. Evil is active in every age; and every generation has its conflicts, and wants its holy warriors, its brave soldiers, as well as its noble leaders. We cannot faithfully serve our generation if we let any phase of social, political, or moral evil grow up in our midst unchallenged and unresisted.

There is no substantial difference between "serving our generation by the will of God," and serving the will of God in our generation. Jesus never shone with so divine a lustre as when identifying Himself with the actual needs of mankind. Man-service is Godservice; we worship Him when we work for our fellowmen. God delights in our songs of praise, our prayers, our regular occasions of worship. We get a great deal more from them than we tender in exchange We get a vision of God, a renewal of spiritual power, a fresh hold on the divine strength, a new light on life's difficult and often darkened way. All this is "divine service, but it is not the end of it; it is only the beginning. When the preacher has ceased to speak; when the organ has ceased to sound forth its noble, inspiring notes; when the doors of the sanctuary are closed; when we have returned to the tasks and duties of common life. Then it is if these gracious ministries have meant anything at all to us, that we must turn about to find some outlet for the inspiration of our worship.

And if we will, we may find it in succoring the needy, in attacking some gaunt and cruel wrong, in the advocacy of righteousness, justice, sobriety, square and fair dealing. This is the real Christly service, which makes for the authentic establishment and the onward march of the Master's kingdom.

Just now to serve one's own generation may seem little, but is it so? A generation. For what does the word stand? What an important length of time! what a multitude and variety of people! what a weight of solemn, thrilling interest in human affairs! what a trial of individual constancy and education of individual character! Only the infinite mind can read that volume through—the volume of one generation. Yes, there is no great distance to lend enchantment to the view, and no so picturesque vista, and no vague, flattering, indefinite scope; yet how full, how ample is the definite scope. "Blessed are those servants," who through a generation length, or from youth even to old age, are found in this sense, "expecting their Lord."

Graham, N. C.

THAT GIFT OF A FORD.

DEAR DR. BARRETT:

Your "editorial bee" or "editorial bird" got ahead of me in some way as to the Ford. Yes, it's a fact that the Waverly Christian pastorate and friends gave the pastor and family a new Ford touring car. It was presented Wednesday night, November 21st, just before prayer meeting, in the presence of quite a group of members and friends. This valuable present is highly appreciated by pastor and family. During our forty-one years of pastorial work, this is the most valuable gift ever received. We wish, in this public way, to express our very sincere thanks to each individual who in any way contributed to so valuable and serviceable gift. May God's richest blessings be upon this most generous people as we go into our twelfth year's co-operative work.

Very gratefully,
JOS. L. FOSTER.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

January 6, 1924.

Subject: "A Chosen Leader and a Chosen Land."Gen. 12:1-25:10.

Golden Text: "In Thee shall all families of the earth be blessed."—Gen. 12:13.

Devotional Reading: Psalm 23.

Daily Reading: Mon., A chosen leader (Gen. 12:1-9, 18:17-19); Tues., A chosen land (Gen. 13:17-18); Wed., Abram and Melchizedek (Gen. 14:17-24); Thurs., The covenant confirmed (Gen. 15:7-18); Fri., Abraham the intercessor, (Gen. 18:23-33); Sat., God tries Abraham (Gen. 22:1-14); Sun., The Lord our leader (Ps. 23).

Introduction.

This year's lessons embrace a six months' course in Old Testament history from Abraham to Solomon, followed by six months' study in the New Testament.

In our last regular lesson we studied that prophecy of Isaiah in which he looked forward to the coming of Christ and to the great changes which should come over the whole world when the spirit of Christ should rule in every heart. Today we go back to the time when God called Abraham out of Ur in the Chaldees, which was a land in which idolatry flourished, and led him into Canaan where he could worship the true God and train his family, and all their successors, to do the same. Though this caused Abraham to separate himself from many things which he had been accustomed to all his life, it was, nevertheless, a wise thing for him to do, since these things might have hindered him in doing the great work he had before him in life. God promised Abraham that his name should be great in the world, and that he should become a blessing to all men, which is the privilege and opportunity of every one who bears the name of Christ. Though Abraham became rich in cattle and herds in his chosen land, it is not of these we hear in our study of him, but of his character, and of his faith in God. So truly did he keep himself in touch with God that God was able to take him into his confidence concerning his dealing with the people of the world. He is remembered to this day for his faith in God, and for his justice and love toward all men. Jews still call him father, and the Christian world looks upon him with love and veneration.

Lesson Plan.

1. God's Call to Abram (Gen. 12:1-4.—First, Abram had been called with his father's family to Haran (Gen. 11:31); from Haran he was commanded to go out (Heb. 8:11), but God led him. What promise given?

2. Abram Obeyed the Call (Gen. 12:5-7).—Abram took with him his property and arrived in the land of Canaan. We do not know the size of his family at this time, but some time afterward the men of his household numbered three hundred and eighteen souls. Who were some of those with him? Abram stopped at Shechem, unto the Oak of Moreh. There he built an altar to the Lord.

3. The Promise to Abraham Renewed (Gen. 18:17-19).—Read the covenant God made with Abraham as given in Gen. 15:5-16. Three strangers were entertained by Abraham (see Gen. 18: 2-8). Of the three angels who visited Abraham, one is believed to be Jehovah the Lord, who came later and dwelt in the flesh as the Lord Jesus Christ. How blessed it is to be in the favor of God, to have His friendship and confidence! Let our lives express the impression we receive.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

January 6, 1924.

Topic: "Do Better Still."—Phil. 3:12-14.

(A Consecration Meeting.)

Thoughts for the Meeting.

Is the following true in your life?

"I'm pressing on the upward way;
New heights I'm gaining every day."

Verse 12.

Press On!

The first of the year is a splendid time to resolve to do better." And the whole year offers an opportunity to live the resolution. Verse 12.

No man is so good but that he can be better. None of us has done so much for Jesus that more cannot be done. Verse 12.

Will your life for 1924 satisfy Jesus? That depends upon how you begin today. Verse 12.

"This one thing I do." To all of us something in life comes first. What is first in your life? Verse 13.

The future is unknown, but alluring, untried but appealing. Much of it we may make by our attitude toward life. Entering the future year with the Father gives assurance that whatever may happen, all will be well. Verse 13.

The goal is first in the mind of one to run a race. The effort to attain it must be studied. Patient training is a part of the race. In all activities in life it is vital that a goal be aimed at and prepared for. Verse 14.

You will hit no higher than you aim. Aim high! Verse 14.

"Do better" in your work. "Do better" in your play. Make God your Confidant and Jesus Christ your Friend, and the New Year is bound to be a better year.

Plans for the Meeting.

Be sure that every member has an invitation to this consecration meeting. Secure a message from all who cannot be present, to be read when the secretary calls the roll.

Make a motto, "Do Better," to place before the meeting.

Let members discuss briefly the following subjects:

"Do better in the Church."
"Do better in the home."
"Do better in C. E."
"Do better in play."
"Do better in the community."
"Grow better with Christ."

Suggested Hymns.—"Higher Ground," "Onward, Christian Soldiers," "Saved to Serve," "My Jesus, I love Thee."

How many of us act in life's great battle, as if we are afraid to yield ourselves to the Lord for guidance! We act just as though we were afraid to trust Him with our destiny. Let it not be so, for when God undertakes for us, then we know that the best thing for us will be done, no doubt about it. It may be that some of us are not willing to have the best thing done for us. That will be more and more apparent as we go on our way, unless we shall rededicate the life that now is to Him that He may use it here and hereafter for His glory. Yes, if the life is fully yielded to Him, it will be led aright, and that must be better for us than to go by our own choosing and get into many places of danger and failure. The Lord's way is best—let us try to find it, and then stay in it.

WINNING THROUGH WORSHIP.

always be the best Scripture lesson for the morning reading. It may not call to worship, and it may be too difficult for the children who are with you.

Stories told on the theme of the day, pictures related to the thought all help in producing the spirit of worship—and often very important, the example of the older folks.

For the superintendent and worker who really wishes to make his school win through worship, there are some very definite and simple suggestions which may help:

1. The effective service of worship recognizes that children under nine have different needs, and they can worship best by themselves. Most Churches can find some place for this if they want it.

2. Choose a theme for your worship service, perhaps the same theme for a month, or for a quarter and choose your songs, Scripture, stories in harmony with this theme. Choose your theme according to what people are interested in, as in November you will be thinking of Thanksgiving; in December, of giving; in January, of new resolutions; in February, of patriotism; in May, of spring, etc.

3. Plan your service. Have a written program, with songs chosen and program planned before you get there. You do this for a special service. Really more essential is it for the regular Sunday morning, if you are to keep out of a rut. Your worship period may come at the beginning, or at the close, or after an opening song and announcements period, but whenever it comes have that ten or fifteen minutes sacred, and do not allow interruption from late-comers. There are Churches which have an usher at door to detain there late-comers until the prayer, Scripture and hymn is over, for it is difficult, or impossible, to really worship with constant interruption.

4. Make the surroundings of your Sunday School clean, comfortable and beautiful to call to worship.

5. Read a good book on worship. "Story Worship Programs for the Church School," Stowell, or "Training the Devotional Life," by Weigle and Tweedy.

6. Begin on time, for that period of waiting develops irreverence, and a spirit which is difficult to redirect.

And why this stress on worship?

That boys and girls may develop habits of public worship and individual devotion.

That they may be brought close to God and see in Him their Helper throughout every day.

That they may desire to be like Jesus Christ, who throughout His earthly life found it necessary to go to God for strength.

That they may be able to enter heartily into the Church worship.

The highest aim is that they may be brought to behold the beauty of the Christ, and then go out to tell of His love. Every child needs a Christian character, strengthened through worship. It is his birthright. Surely his Church will strive that he may receive what is his own!

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Christmas will have come and gone before you read this letter. The children at the orphanage are looking forward to a nice Christmas, with many little gifts of remembrance. Richards Bros. and Mr. E. W. Cather, of Winchester, Va., have made it possible for them to have apples by sending us eight barrels for their Christmas. While no boxes, etc., have come in at this writing (December 19th), still we have faith enough in our people to believe they will send in all kinds of things to make the children happy.

Our Thanksgiving offerings are coming in nicely, and we hope to reach our goal, but have several hundred dollars to raise yet before we reach it.

I want to ask our Churches and Sunday Schools which have not sent in an offering to please forward it at once, as we will have to close our books for the year 1923 in a short time and we want to get the offerings for this year in first. Let us all do our best to reach the goal, and feel happy in a task well done.

The following things have been sent in since our last report: Mrs. Murrya Bonnihi, Springboro, Pa., 1 nice quilt; Christian Church, Elkhart, Ind., 1 box clothes, 12 pr. hose; Mrs. H. E. Pearce, Franklinton, N. C., 1 box clothing; Mrs. W. L. Osburn, Lanett, Ala., 1 quilt; Mrs. Atkinson, 1 box clothes; Live Wire Sunday School Class, Arthur, Ill., 1 box Christmas toys; Earl Churchill, Durham, N. C., 1 barrel apples; Ida Wilder, Advance, Ind., 1 box clothing; Mr. H. A. Atkins, clothing; Cone Export and Commission Company, 49 yds. outing; Altamahaw Cotton Mills, 96 yds. overall goods; May Hosiery Mill, 10 doz. pr. hose; B. A. Sellars, Burlington, N. LET RELIGION STAND ON OWN BOTTOM.

Much is being thought, said and written nowadays on Church attendance—and we must confess that it is far from what it should be. Most of us have particular ideas as to the remedy—ways and means of getting people to come to Church. Now, I am going to make a startling statement, but do not class me as an atheist until you consider.

If I belonged to anything in which I had to feel the public pulse and then plan, scheme and invent methods to suit in order to draw a crowd, I would get into something that would stand on its own merits. I am sick of seeing the Church doing questionable things to appease the public.

Society and the Church are two different institutions. Christ cared nothing for "high-browed" society, as such, as evidenced by His lowly birth and His lifework among the masses. Yet there are thousands of ministers today squealing around in the pulpits of our country to please a few "old society dames," as Billy Sunday puts it.

Rivalry and jealousy are the underlying causes of some of the behaviour of some of the so-called Churches of today. I would not lay the weight of my finger on the present building program of the Churches. However, the motives that prompts much of it are wrong. Some think if we build finer houses we will have larger crowds, and so it may be. But brother, does that alone mean more religion?

Suppose all the Church houses of the country were to be suddenly transformed into the uncomfortable log-houses of a century ago! In that case, would not Christ again have to ask, "Where are the nine?" Let me venture to ask if Christ should now come back to earth, as when He did come, would He not find conditions very much as they were when He came—a great deal of activity and not much religion, and doubtless His condemnation would be no less severe.

Look at the old Cane Ridge revival, when people came for a hundred miles and more, bringing provisions to feed them for a week and more. Even then their numbers were so great that the out-doors only were sufficient to meet their needs for a house. The woods were filled with worshipers, and there under the clear sky, thousands found peace, partaking of the holy manna. Then there were no Church socials, no secular festivals, no clubs or societies of any sort to draw a crowd—nothing but God's spirit working in the hearts of men. People always come when they are expecting God to manifest Himself in some dtfinite way. You say this was a revival. Sure! And so is every meeting in the same proportion when the Lord has His way. When I see the preacher filled with the Holy Spirit under a heart full of love for mankind, enter the pulpit with his cup running over with sympathy, kindness and the good virtues, and there in the fear of God deliver His message of love and truth without respect of persons, or class, somehow, brother, I am never uneasy about his congregation, and I do not believe he is. In such a case, I always wish to hear him again, and so do the most of the people.

Swimming-pools, ball courts, socials, etc., may be necessary, as some see it, but as I see it they have no place in the work of the Church of Christ—they are separate and apart. It was indeed a sad day for the Church when these evils crept in. They are always dead weight instead of spiritual assets. It seems that anybody could see why. Consider the mission of the Church—it is to bring sinners to Christ, that He may save them from their sins. Sin and salvation are in no way related, except in so far as one seeks to destroy the other.

An individual who has presumptuous sins in his heart is not fully saved. I fear, brother, that the primary cause of the small attendance upon the sanctuary of today is the absence of the old-time Gospel that always stirs men's souls. No preacher with selfishness, envy, or jealousy can expect to hold a large crowd and get great results. Then, honestly, brethren, I blush when I know there is so much of it in the ministry. Even in our own denomination, to say nothing of other denominations. When I sat some time ago and listened to a preacher speak unpleasant things about every minister in the Conference, in the third person, I was humiliated. Shame on such practice. I naturally wondered what the next man would hear!

Brethren, let us try the pure, simple Gospel, soaked in prayer and delivered in an earnest way to the people. I know of no better injunction than that of the apostle Paul to Timothy: "Preach the word; be instant in season and out of season." Then if you have a congregation, all right; but if we do not, we will have delivered our own souls. But I have never seen the Gospel fail to draw a crowd, and I never expect to see it fail to draw a crowd. If it ever does fail, then I will seek a religion that stands on its own merits.

W. C. CARPENTER.

Cullman, Ala.

The Christian Church at Newport News, Va., is undertaking to build a parsonage for the use of their preacher, the Rev. B. J. Earp. That is a fine example, and we wish that many of our Churches would do likewise. When a Church gets a parsonage for the pastor to occupy, it is much easier to have full-time preaching, and when we have full-time preaching and a pastor living on the ground, we have a much better chance to grow and to develop the work. We are glad that our people in Newport News are undertaking to build the parsonage. It will add immensely to the chances of developing the Church and of making it a Church of great usefulness.

The North Carolina Tuberculosis Association is doing a good work in the fight it is making against that dread disease, and they do seem to be accomplishing a great deal in the way of stamping it out. Lend them a helping hand whenever you can and in any way you can.

HOW TO PRAY.

"When thou prayest, enter into thy inner chamber; and when thou hast shut the door, pray to thy Father."—Matt. 6:6.

God tells His children to pray, to ask for what they want, etc.; and in this test He tells them how to do it. It assumes all that has gone before; that prayer is absolutely necessary, and says, have a place to pray, a time to pray, and a posture. Can we not pray anywhere? Forbid it to be said that it is impossible to pray at any place or at any time; and yet I wonder if it is not true that prayer is impossible under some circumstances. If we would pray, we must prepare for it, that the atmosphere around us may enable us to reach the very throne of God. And when He tells us to enter into our inner chamber, He is saying: "Get at the heart of thy very self, where the outside world does not rush in nor molest and where thou canst be true to thyself and thou mayest realize God's presence."

Prayer.—Dear Father, renew our spirits within us every day, and give us such a mighty love for Thee that our souls may be sweetened into obedience and life may be a delight to others. Amen.

TUESDAY.

A FAITHFUL SOLDIER.

"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."—Rev. 2:10.

"What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with thy Lord."—Micah 6:8.

We are told of a young man who was handsome, open, honest, intelligent and attractive. He was born of a princely family, came up under trying iircumstances, lived in captivity; but he had a keen sense of right and a lion's determination to be loyal to it. Once he was required by his commanding officer to drink wine. As the law went, this was not wrong, but he knew the evils of strong drink, and he had purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself. By his gentleness, patience, kindness, he finally won the favor of his comrades and his superiors, and he was exalted to a prophet in Israel. This was Daniel. Isn't it worth while to be right?

Prayer.—Dear Father, first of all things, help us to take our stand for the right, and, whether in health or sickness, in plenty or poverty, fortunes or misfortunes, spiritual dominion or temptation, in happiness or sorrow, may we be right and loyal and faithful to Thee. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

GOD'S REIGN AND PURPOSE.

"All things have been created through Him, and unto Him."—Col. 1:16.

"For He must reign till He hath put all enemies under His feet."—1 Cor. 15:25. "Till all come in the unity of the faith, and full of the knowledge of the Son of God, until a full-grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."—Eph. 4:13.

The fact is, God created all things for Himself, but sin came into the world and brought separation, confusion and all the other consequent ills, and God has been working with His own creation ever since to set it right, and He will continue until it is done according to the above text. And the one who fails to use this life to bring himself to the very best possible, fails to use his life to the best advantage and in God's purpose for him. Watch for every opportunity that comes your way.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we beseech Thee for the gifts of learning well what is the glory of a godly life. Help us to put on the laws of Christ in all our relations as a garment to our lives, that we may never, in word or deed, add to the dark weight of others, nor to the sorrow that is laid upon Thee when Thy children go wrong; but that we may be partners with Thee in Thy work and make the pathway of others bright and their burdens grow lighter. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE LOVE THAT ENDURES.

"Having loved His own which were in the world, He loved them unto the end."—John 13:1.

This passage, beautiful and significant, was written by the beloved disciple John, who, better than any other, understood the love which was in the heart of Christ. His love was not confined to His mother and brethren, nor to the inner circle of trusted disciples. It was for all the world. In spite of the injustice and lack of sympathy on the part of His closest relatives, the faithfulness and inconstancy of His disciples, and the cruelty and hate of His enemies, "He loved them unto the end."

A vital test of the character of a man is his behaviour in the face of injustice. If he meet lie with lie, and hatred with hatred, he proves his weakness. But if he meet injustice and falsehood with forgiveness and kindness and love, he shows that he possesses omething akin to that spirit which was in Christ Jesus. Happy people are always those who have discovered the secret of Jesus. They not only forgive their foes; they can even pardon injuries at the hands of friends and dear ones, because by the divine example they have become "rooted and grounded in the love of Christ" who showed to the world the perfect love which can endure "unto the end."—Rev. Vincent G. Burns.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer (all the circle joining).

FRIDAY.

BATTLEMENTS, NOT BATTLESHIPS.

*"Thou shalt make a battlement * * * that thou bring not blood upon thine house."*—Deut. 22:8.

The principle involved here is just as binding now as when these words were written. If men were as ready to build moral battlements as they are to contribute to the building of battleships, there would soon be no need for the latter. Take, for one thing, the matter of home training for the young people of our day. Has home training for the boys and girls of our day become a back number?

One big fact stares us in the face today, and that fact is that the parents upon whom rests the responsibility of training the boys and girls of the day are neglecting that important work by leaving it in other, and in many cases less capable, hands. Proverbs 22:6 emphasizes the right training of childhood.

I have seen a father's tears fall upon the lifeless form of a prodigal who came home too late. That father had neglected the battlement, and he knew it. What about your home, my friend? Is the battlement lacking? If so, set about it today and build it "straight and strong and true."—Rev. I. D. Lyttle.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer (all the circle joining).

SATURDAY.

ABOUNDING GRACE.

"God is able to make all grace abound unto you, that ye, being always all sufficient in all things, may abound in every good work."—2 Cor. 9:8.

Today is Saturday; tomorrow will be Sunday, the Lord's day, and (as we are in the habit of thinking) the close of the week. How much have our prayers helped us this week? Have we realized abounding grace?

What is grace? It is that wonderful something of God's power with us that carries us on when our strength faileth, and enables us to say with Paul: "I can do all things through Him that strengtheneth me." It enables us to do the otherwise impossible.

Martin Luther called this text "a little Bible," because, to him who dares to be, it wipes out the word impossible, and yet Luther could not have understood the extent of its meaning, for I am sure he had no dream of how science would wipe out that word in our natural life. The wireless telegraphy, wireless telephone, our aerial achievements, operations on and under the seas, nothing is impossible. We have dug a ditch across the Panama. There is no room for the word "impossible." Is it still impossible to break that habit, bridle that tongue, to raise the voice against evil, or to speak for Jesus, or to pray? If so, it is grievous to God. He is able and will make all grace abound unto thee.

Prayer.—Our Father, we come to Thee acknowledging our sins and beseeching Thee to forgive us. Oh, give unto us Thy abounding grace that flows like a river and is as abundant as the waves of the sea, and may we come to where we can say: "I can do all things through Him that strengtheneth me." Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE SABBATH AND MAN.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

Sabbath observance has been a subject of discussion for a long time—from the very first of all things—and out of the different types of minds have come different opinions, some saying that religion is first, and others that man is first. In the age of the Jews, when religion was institutional and the nation, we may say, a Church, but shorn of political power, Jesus came; and His salvation saved the Church from the domination of the Greek and from death at the hands of the Romans. Jesus came not to destroy, but to fulfill, and showed them that even those who boasted of their Sabbath laws were abusing it even more than those who did not pretend to keep it. It was as if He had said "you folks are discussing whether it is wrong to eat an egg layed by a hen on the Sabbath. I declare unto you that you miss the heart-needs of mankind. 'The Sabbath was made for man.' "

Prayer.—Our Father, defend us against misuse of the Lord's Day. Grant unto us that undying law and impress it upon us with undying conception, that all our days may be ordered by Thy spirit. As a day may be flooded with sunshine, so cause us to abound with Thy love and grace. Amen.

We spent a Sunday in Raleigh, N. C., recently and attended Dr. Parry's Church, but found the pastor away. Prof. Taylor, of the State College, filled the pulpit in the morning, and another from the same institution filled it in the evening. They both did their work well, and the good work seems to be going well. The new Church building is going up, and soon we hope to see the building ready for the use of the congregation. Bro. Parry is a stirring man and a strong preacher. While in the city, we were privileged to be the guests of Bro. and Sister Herbert A. Carlton, old friends while we served in Henderson, N. C. He is a brother of Bro. P. J. Carlton, of Richmond, Va. We had a pleasant stay in their home and much enjoyed their fellowship. They moved to Raleigh only recently. They are most comfortably located on Hillsboro Street. They are pleased with the city as a place of residence.

WOMEN FOR THE KINGDOM.

By Mrs. W. H. Carroll.

[Paper by Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Burlington, N. C., before the North Carolina Christian Conference, held at Wake Chapel, Wake County, N. C., November, 1923, and published by the request of the Conference. —Editor.]

The subject assigned me is of such vast importance that in the time allotted me I am at a loss as just what to say, and what to leave unsaid. We find so much beautiful Scripture bearing upon the subject—words of divine command, specific promises from the Son of God, who has been called the first missionary. Jesus' ministry on earth, which covered a period of three short years, was spent among the poor, the sick and suffering; among that class of people who needed help. Jesus did not seek in Galillee, Capernaum or Jerusalem for the wealthy, or those of importance, but spent His time preaching and teaching and ministering to those who most needed Him. When Jesus' ministry was drawing to a close, and He realized that His time on earth was nearly spent, Jesus had a heart-to-heart talk with His disciples, in which He told them not to grieve for His departure; that He would not leave them comfortless, but would send the Holy Ghost to abide with them forever.

And so Jesus was crucified, and was buried; the third day He arose from the grave and appeared to His disciples and talked with them. During those last moments of agony upon the cross, we read that Jesus recognized one person—Mary, His mother. The last at the cross was a woman; the first at the tomb on the morning of that memorable third day was a woman. Jesus delegated this woman to be the first to carry the tidings of a risen Lord. For forty days Jesus remained on earth, then ascended into heaven to be with the Father; but before ascending, He gave His disciples this most remarkable statement: "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto Me, both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

The thought is divine. Those who love Him and look for His return are to have a part in sending the tidings of a risen Lord, a Saviour, into all the earth, and His spirit shall be with those who go. We have heard a legend which runs as follows: When Jesus made His appearance in heaven after the thirty-three years spent on earth, He was greeted by the angel Michael. The angel questioned Jesus about His work down below. After Jesus had given an account of all He had done on earth, the angel asked this question, "What will become of the work you have begun on earth? Who is down there to carry it on for you?" Jesus' reply was: "Peter, James, and John, and all the others will carry forward my work begun." But, said the angel, "How do you know Peter, James and John and all the others will carry on your work?" Jesus said, "I am trusting them; I am trusting them!"

May we not assume that the others Jesus referred to in this conversation are the women of the Churches? That to us is given the task of carrying the tidings of a risen Lord through our missionary organizations. The organization, the building up, and the carrying forward of mission work in the Churches of the various Conferences is the task of our women. A blessed assurance is ours that the task is divinely appointed; that it carries with it help, strength, wisdom and power from the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. "Whosoever shall do the will of My Father which is in heaven, the same is my sister, and mother."

Speaking from personal experience, the little we have been privileged to do along the line of missions as a part of kingdom service has been the most soul-satisfying of any task ever attempted. The plan adopted in the beginning of our mission endeavor about ten years ago, was first to form a Woman's Mission Board in the Southern Christian Convention; to work under the direction of the general mission board, then to have this Convention board form a Woman's Mission Board in each and every Conference under the jurisdiction of the Southern Christian Convention. This has been done, and now the women of the Churches are being urged to co-operate with the boards in effecting missionary organizations in every Church; indeed, we plead with them to consider this matter carefully and prayerfully. We exclaim with the prophet Isaiah, "Rise up, ye women that are at ease, hear my voice. Tremble, ye women that are at ease; be troubled, ye careless ones." The women have had their aid societies which have been a great asset to the local work of the Churches, but a Woman's Missionary Society offers a much larger, broader field both at home and abroad. The work of the Woman's Missionary Society is many-sided—one of which is the spiritual development it carries with it. A study of the needs of the field at home and abroad gives a vision of a world-wide evangelization, inspires in our hearts and minds a burning desire for the salvation of immortal souls. Leaders in Church activities are developed, the prayer life of our women is strengthened, the number of tithers and intercessors is increased.

The missionary organization of the Church does not stop with the Woman's Missionary Society. It rather begins with the missionary cradle roll and comes on up through a Willing Workers' Society, the junior boys and girls, and the Young People's Society to the Woman's Missionary Society. This plan of organization includes every person connected with the Church, from the youngest to the oldest. The men may become honorary members of the woman's society. Jesus said: "I am come that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly." By engaging in this great and glorious work, the way is opened for our women to experience a richer, fuller, deeper life—the life abundant. We dare not turn a deaf ear to the call of a Father who loved all men so mightily that He sent His only begotten Son into the world that not just a few persons might be saved and redeemed from their sins, but that all people of all realms and climes might share in this life abundant.

That "education is the mightiest force in the world," is a truism which we all acknowledge, but we have not believed enough in the past to put it into practice in our missionary cultivation of the home Church. However, the extent of missionary education in many Churches is an occasional missionary sermon once in a goodly number of years, or a visit from a returned missionary. But having such a limited knowledge of mission work in general, and this returned missionary in particular, we fail to experience very much interest in this person who comes to us from some far-off country.

Too, when a mission secretary or some representative of a mission board comes along and asks for a donation, and we are urged to open our pocket-books, we begin to criticise this secretary person, and even our suspicions are aroused if he wears clothing that was apparently purchased any time within the last decade.

Some of the outstanding needs of the woman's work are more personal workers, development of the prayer life. Prayer is the chief source of the success of all missionary work, tithers, intercessors and life recruits, from the ranks of our young people. It should be the task of the mothers in the home to so train their children that life recruits are made such before leaving home to enter college and the busy marts of a work-a-day world.

Intercessory prayer is necessary. As a child, we often wondered and marveled at the prayers of a good old preacher as he besought the Heavenly Father to help him to hold on to the horns of the altar. We women have great need to keep a firm and steady hold upon the altar of God.

"O Master, we would ask of Thee
Thy promise to fulfill
And give to us abundant life
To seek and find Thy will.
O grant that we may follow Thee
With loyal hearts and true,
That we may love, and loving, serve
And come to Thee anew.

"Give us Thy vision, let us see
Clear-eyed the task God gave,
And to our hands entrust Thy light
For those Christ came to save.
This is that larger life we ask;
Put in our hearts Thy flame,
That one with Thee we may reach out
To serve in Thy name."

In the North Carolina Conference the number of Churches having missionary organizations is not as large as should be; but we have faith to believe that the time is not far distant when there will not be a single Church without some missionary organization. This is our task, women of the Churches; let us realize this fact, and, with God-given strength and courage, accept the task as ours. We know our limitations; we realize that we have lacked the necessary consecration; we have not been as united in our purpose as is necessary for its accomplishment. We are not always willing to pay the price by personal sacrifice, although we plainly hear the command, "Go ye." Jesus is trusting us to do this task for Him, by our prayers, by our means, and by our influence. We know beyond the shadow of a doubt that the responsibility rests upon us. We may become co-workers with Jesus, co-partners, being indwelt by the Holy Spirit; thus we are highly privileged to carry on the work. Let us not disappoint our Lord and Saviour. May our women catch the vision of the life abundant; may they see their duty clearly; may they rise to their privilege and responsibility; may they ever press forward, realizing the presence and power of the Holy Spirit with them. "I am trusting them; I am trusting them."

"Lo! I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

THE WORK IN NORTHERN ALABAMA.

For some time I have been thinking that I would write a few lines for publication in The Christian Sun concerning the work here. The work is doing fairly well, but we have had a very hard time getting ready to do business for the Lord. Our windows and doors are here, and we are going to put them in pretty soon. There is much to be done yet before we will be comfortably arranged for; the weather has been so disagreeable it has hindered our work to some extent.

We got to our new home all right and we are liking fine. Soon after we arrived, the good people gave us a real pounding; the ladies came first, and pretty soon the Ford followed, loaded to its full capacity with such things as flour, potatoes, coffee, canned and dried fruit, and many other good things, too numerous to mention, and a purse of $2.50. And for all these good things we are very thankful to the good people, and especially to our Heavenly Father. May the Lord richly bless each one that had a part in this act of kindness.

Wishing The Sun and its staff a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year, I am,

Sincerely yours,

W. T. Meacham.

Rheumatism and Indigestion

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its affects in their practice, believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect, and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

If you suffer from Rheumatism, Indigestion, or from any curable disease, accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to—
Shivar Springs,
Box 16-D, Shelton, S. C.

MR. H. T. LePAGE, June 14, 1919.
Toronto, Ont., Canada.
My Dear Mr. LePage:
I take this occasion to write you about the Style 16 Cups and indeed our whole Communion Set. After nearly a year's use we are more than ever pleased with it. I have visited several places where the flat top cup and aluminum trays are in use, and have just wished that the kind we have could be substituted for them. Ours are just a joy to us, and I wish I could induce all to buy this kind. The glasses are much prettier and easier to handle and to drink from. Yours cordially,
REV. BERNARD P. SMITH.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

Efficiency and Lower Rates

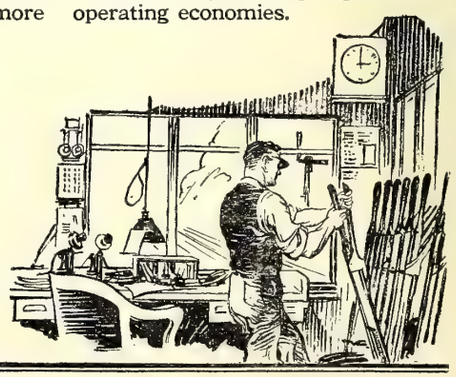
FREIGHT rate reductions made by the Southern Railway System in 1922—first on farm products and later on all traffic—have effected a saving for our shippers of $15,000,000 a year. Average receipts per ton-mile are now 12 per cent lower than two years ago.

Before the World War rise in prices, our ton-mile revenue was a little under a cent. Cotton then averaged about 10 cents a pound; locomotive fuel cost a little more than a dollar a ton; the average pay of our employees $880 a year.

While our average freight charges today are 40 per cent above the pre-war level, cotton sells at more than double the old prices, and our average freight charge on cotton shipments is only a quarter of a cent a pound. Coal costs nearly three times what it formerly did, and the average pay of our employees for the past three years has been $1,580, an increase of 79 per cent.

By greater efficiency of operation, the result of large expenditures for betterments, and the loyal cooperation of our employees, we have have been able to absorb a part of the excess of the increase in operating costs over the smaller increase in rates. We are continually working for greater operating economies.

Southern Railway System deposits in Southern banks an average of $150,500 each banking hour.



THE SOUTHERN SERVES THE SOUTH

THE WORK AT WINCHESTER.

From the Winchester Evening Star we clip the following item, which will be of real interest to mary of our readers:

The special evangelistic meetings, which have been in progress for the last two weeks at the First Christian Church, came to a successful close last night.

By 7:30 the Church was well filled, and after a spirited song service the pastor brought his closing message from the text in Second Corinthians, fourth chapter, third verse: "But if our Gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost." The topic of the evening was "The Hidden Gospel."

"The Gospel," declared Mr. Morgan, "is the greatest message the world ever has or ever will hear. It contains the solution of the world's problems, and the supreme need is that this message be given a fair trial."

Pardon to Lost World.

The topic was discussed under the following heads: "The Gospel," "The Gospel Hid," and "The Soul Lost." Under the first head the speaker declared that "the Gospel is good news. It is heaven's message of pardon to a lost world, and the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." The speaker emphasized the fact that it must be believed to become effective.

In discussing the point, the Gospel hid, the pastor declared "that it was hid, first, to those who denied its divine authority; second, to those who reject it. The Gospel river is flowing through America, but hundreds are perishing, spiritually, because they will not drink. It is not the fault of the Gospel, but that of the individuals refusing to accept the Gospel."

In discussing the last point, Mr. Morgan portrayed with striking illustrations the awful condition of a lost soul, and made an earnest appeal to the lost to accept Christ.

Decision Service Held.

At the decision service in the Sunday School, Rev. Mr. Morgan made a short talk on the story of his own conversion. At the conclusion, there were three decisions for Christ, all of whom united with the Church.

Immediately after this decision service, the pastor brought the message of the morning, using as his subject, "A Refuge From the Storm." This was one of the most inspiring messages of the whole meeting, and the pastor emphasized in a most impressive way what God is to us, stating that He is a strength to the poor, a strength to the needy in distress, a refuge from the storm of sin, from an accusing conscience, and from the wrath to come. In response to his appeal at the close of the sermon there were four decisions and additions to the Church.

Good Results From Meeting.

At the closing of the morning service the pastor sprang a surprise on the audience by asking them to join in a service known as the breaking of the Alabaster box, which consisted of the shaking hands of all those present who had ever done them a favor. This was a very sweet service, and resulted in much good toward the complete unity of the Church.

Both the pastor and members of the Church feel much gratified at the results of the meeting, and wish to express their appreciation to all who have helped to make it a success. They especially are grateful for the news items about the meeting that have been carried in these columns from day to day. This appreciation was expressed publicly by the pastor to the large audience present last night.

WARD.

Mary Jane Ward was born January 3, 1843; died December 1, 1923. She was a widow of the deceased George W. Ward. She was sick only a few days; her last was rich. She said she was ready to meet the Lord in peace. She leaves one child and many relatives and friends to mourn her loss. She was laid to rest in the cemetery at Needham's Grove Christian Church. The funeral was conducted by the pastor.

May the Lord bless the bereaved ones; may we all meet her in the better land.

W. J. EDWARDS.

"Your leaders who tell you that the more a country is Christian the worse it is for the Jews are mistaken. Wherever you find the Jews prospering most you will find that it is a Christian country. Look where the Jews are! Can you find many Jews where there are no Christians? Where do the Jews strive to go when they emigrate?—to America or England, the two Christian countries where the Bible is studied more than in any other lands on earth."—Jacob Gartenhaus.

Leprosy had its origin in Central Africa, and thence it spread to Asia. The hordes of the army of Darius brought it to Europe, and it was taken to the Americas as an accompaniment of negro slavvry, according to a writer in the London Quarterly Review.
